"It looks very much as if we had a State Church, and as if that Church is the Church of Rome, in spite of constitutional and legal enactments. Our Mayor, City Clerk, Fire Marshal, Corporation Council, Gas Inspector, a large majority of our Aldermen, and nearly all our county officials, were present at the funeral services of Bishop Foley. But this is not the worst aspect of the matter. Watching the proceedings of our State Legislature in order to catch the fresh developments of original sin in that assembly of model legislators, I find that each branch of it felt called upon to spread upon its journal resolutions of respect for the memory of the late bishop, whom three-fourths of those model legislators never saw, and of whom one-fourth of them probably never heard before the introduction of those resolutions. Not a man among them seems to have had sense enough to protest against the manifest impropriety of such legislative action. Now during the last ten years, in this city and State, many Protestant bishops have died whose lifetime influence for the observance of law and order, and the promotion of public and individual morality, was tenfold greater than that of Bishop Foley, however unexceptional his private life may have been. But I never heard that our city and county officials felt called upon to attend the funeral of any one of them, or that our State Legislature noticed his death by complimentary resolutions, or that the fire-bells of the city were rung as he was borne to his rest. If we have no State Church why is this invidious distinction?"

Why? The proximate cause is undoubtedly as claimed by our exchanges, because, of all the religions bodies of this country the Roman Catholic alone exercises direct political influence. Politicians favor the Romish Church through fear of its political power.

But in a few days throughout the State of New York and some other States, Good Friday will be observed as a secular non dies. This by legislative enactment, and despite the fact that the Romish Church only and those Protestant Churches which separated least from Rome—a small minority of the people—regard the day as sacred. It will not even surprise us to hear that some Presbyterian churches are decorated for Easter, and that in them Easter sermons are preached. In some cities of North Carolina, we shall be greatly surprised if banks, and business exchanges, and the public offices of city and State, and the custom houses and other national offices—aye, the schools, even—are not closed. Why? We are told this is a small matter. We may certainly concede so small a matter to the convictions of others. Some would tell us that Christian charity demands it.

We have no space for an argument at this time, and argument would be lost, indeed, on any one who would bring up the cant of charity to advise a surrender of principle. But do we ever, for we are dealing with friends, ever ask ourselves why the prelatical churches have an influence utterly disproportioned to the number of their members or to their intelligence, or their wealth? And if we do, does it not sometimes occur to us that it all has a beginning, and that the beginning is just in the smallest matters (if so you please) and is owing to the easy-going good nature of those, abused as the most illiberal, who surrender everything and claim nothing? And do we not sometimes reflect that as there is a beginning so there is a progress toward precisely what we have noted above, and in due time we fall down before a Romish priest, regarding him as in quite a superior sphere to our own ministers of the Gospel? The effect on us is not the best, but to our children it is deadly. To them it is education, training, away from us. It is forming a public opinion which, when Rome lays her mailed hand upon our liberties, will be arrayed irrevocably against us.

SCOTCH IN NORTH CAROLINA.

"Several Scottish noblemen and gentlemen, who had been active in their opposition to the prelatic measures of their sovereign, and so incurred his displeasure, conceived the design of providing a home for their persecuted brethren in America, and in 1682 they contracted with the Lords proprietors of Carolina for a large landed property. In the same State previous to the year 1670, several hundred able-bodied men formed a settlement on the west bank of the Ashley River and named it Charles' Town. As early as 1662 a company of persons driven from Virginia by religious persecution settled on Albemarle sound. They supposed they would be protected in their civil and religions rights; but no sooner did the Episcopal Church acquire the necessary prestige and power than dissenters were taxed for its support, and were disfranchised if they failed to conform. Thus were they socially and politically degraded by intolerant laws designed to prop up Episcopacy, and to escape this injustice they removed to another colony. This settlement and a previous one on Chowan River were visited by Gov. Berkley of Virginia in 1663, who appointed William Drummond, a Scotch Presbyterian, the first Governor of the colonies settled in North Carolina. At his death the colonists numbered about five thousand."

"A large number of Scotch colonists had entered the Southern colonies, landing either at Wilmington or Charleston. Those who remained in Charleston united with the Congregationalists from New England, who were already settled there, in forming an Independent church, but the pastors for many years belonged to the Church of Scotland. This Church was probably gathered as early as 1682. In 1695 we know that a gift of one thousand pounds was made to it by Gov. Joseph Blake. The French Huguenot Church was established in 1686, and was the first purely Presbyterian Church in South Carolina. Other churches were formed within a few years. A letter from South Carolina published in London (1710) states that there were at this time five Presbyterian churches in the colony and the records show that a donation of three hundred acres of land was made in 1717 for the support of a Presbyterian minister on Edisto Island."

"North Carolina was also largely indebted to these early Scotch colonists for many of her most useful and honored citizens. As early as 1729, and again in 1738 and 1739, there were large arrivals of emigrants, who occupied the fertile plains along the Cape Fear River. The rebellion of 1745 caused many Highlanders to leave their native land, Ship loads of them are said to have landed at Wilmington, and from thence they made their way into the interior of North and South Carolina. Some of these were voluntary exiles, but the most of them had fled from Scotland to avoid persecution, and even death itself. For many years the Gaelic language was retained among them and was employed by their preachers in all pulpit services." * * * * * * *

"Though the emigration from Scotland began at an earlier period than that from the north of Ireland, it never received the magnitude nor the organized form of the latter, especially from the years 1715 to 1750. During these years America received very large accessions to its Protestant population, most of whom were Scotch Irish, and in hearty sympathy with the Presbyterian Church. So great were the numbers from Ireland who sought refuge in this country that the civil magisitrates 'deplored the hallucination' which seemed to have seized the inhabitants, and which led them in such multitudes to forsake their adopted land."

Mr Fronde says that they were so harrassed by the prelates of the establishment, that "if they intended to live as freemen, speaking no lies and professing openly the creed of the Reformation, they must seek a country where the long arm of prelacy was still too short to reach them. During the first half of the eighteenth century, Down, Antrim, Tyrone, Armagh and Derry were emptied of Protestant inhabitants, who were of more value to Ireland than California gold-mines."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

An exchange thinks it is high time that the pulpit should cease to be a bulletin for all kinds of notices, and we quite agree. The extent to which the practice of announcement is sometimes carried is both absurd and ridiculous—and certainly irreverent.

"If you have not been to theatres, you have no right to find fault with them: you do not know what you are talking about."

Let's see. Then we know nothing of intemperance if we do not visit liquor shops, and nothing of any vice without frequenting its chosen haunts. We do not express the degree of abhorrence which we entertain for the theatre by our comparisons but we note the principle, we think, correctly.

An agent of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN will be at the approaching sessions of the Presbyteries of this State, to receive any monies for arrears or renewals, and for new subscriptions. We have a warm welcome prepared for all, and trust our friends will avail themselves of this opportunity to oblige us.

We were glad to see a few days since in the Wilmington Morning Star an editorial article on the "Press and the public Morals," and taking the proper ground that the nauseating and disgusting details of vice and crime which disfigure the columns of many of our secular journals are utterly demoralizing. We quote our neighbor thus:

"The excuse given is that papers must publish what people desire to read. We do not believe that this is sufficient. The duty of the press is to elevate, to teach and to bless. No paper has a right to corrupt the taste, to cater for impure minds, or to give its readers a perpetual nightmare in which all manner of horrors are dished up, and sometimes with exceeding skill."

Nothing at all to say about the Talmage affair in its present stage. We beg to be excused.

The Pope lately received a deputation of nearly one thousand representatives of the press. They were welcomed with a great array of cardinals, and bishops and other dignitaries in all their paraphernalia. The pope was gracious and the pressmen obsequious. Before departing the journalists all of them made offerings on behalf of their journals. Quite so! The pope says there exists a necessity for a daily Catholic press to counteract evil influences. Which does not sound like Antonelli speaking for Pius IX.

The reports which we have been having that all California was in direct and positive antagonism to the President on the Chinese question proves not to be true. The Occident and the Pacific, two religious papers, hold that the few clergymen who have been announced as favoring the bill do not represent the Christian sentiment of the State. The Occident thinks some action with regard to emigration was desirable, but discrimination should be made.

Lord Salisbury's dispatch of January 26th, finds Prince Gortchakoff unwilling to lock horns. He declares that the Russian and English views really accord as will appear when Salisbury understands the intention of Russia and her agents.

One of our exchanges attributes the insensate enthusiasm over the late walking match in New York city to "a craze." One of those specimens of hereditary insanity which seize people at intermittent periods on the subject of boat-racing, horse-racing and the like. It is it would seem a very bad case of insanity. Lasting long and doing a vast amount of harm, and in no manner or degree accomplishing any good.

We have several deeply interesting documents which show the general plan of work in this office of Health, and two invaluable pamphlets briefly discussing the "Restriction and Prevention of Diphtheria and Scarlet Fever." A tractate shows how to "treat the drowned." Michigan is establishing Boards of Health throughout the State, and wisely looking after the health of her citizens under a most intelligent health Secretary, Dr. N. B. Baker.

The Weekly Welcome. Monthly Part, March, 1879, Post free, $2.25 a year. From S. W. Partridge & Co., 9 Paternoster Row, London.

This English Magazine is capitally gotten up, with numerous excellent cuts, and a rich variety of instructive reading, not all stories, and none lengthy. Sketches and portraits of distinguished persons; pictures and descriptions of celebrated places, e. g. Dryburg Abbey and castles on the Rhine, &c., charm every one. The frontiepiece is a beautiful group of the six children of the Princess Alice, daughter of Queen Victoria.

Infant's Magazine; Children Friend; 16 pages each; one shilling sterling a year; Band of Hope Review, 4 pages, all for March 1879. S. W. Partridge & Co., London.

The April number of the North American Review is at hand. Contents: Retribution in Politics, by Thomas A. Hendrick; The Public Schools of England; German socialism in America: A Friend of Lord Byron, by Henry James, Jr.; The Census of 1880; The Pronunciation of the Latin Language; An Indian's view of Indian Affairs; Hartmann's Religion of the Future; Recent Miscellaneous Literature. Address North American Review, $5 a year.

The Carolina Farmer always welcome, and to farmers always serviceable, at hand—We recommend it—Published by W. H. Bernard, at $1.50 per year.

D. Appleton & Co. have sent us the "Endless Future of the Human Race." By C. S. Henry, D. D. The author is a clergyman in good standing in the Episcopal church, and contends for a modified purgatory, leaving punishment out of the matter. It is the old plan of trying to dodge the inevitable. It is trying to prove what we would like to believe. On our first page the motives of those whom the author represents are duly classified. We cannot recommend it.

Infinitely preferable to the above is Thomas Carlyle from the same house. This is a capital little work, costing only 50 cents. It treats of Carlyle's Life, Books and Theories.

Messrs. Appleton & Co. got up in their Handy Volume Series very popular books. Fairy Tales is another work of this series, and is very enjoyable. It carries one back well into boyhood when Cinderella, Sinbad the Sailor, and other tales so charmed our imagination. The price of Fairy Tales is 25 cents.

The April number of the Eclectic Magazine contains twenty articles. The one which will attract most attention, perhaps, is the lecture on "Electric Light," delivered by Prof. Tyndall, at the Royal Institution. This is the opening article of the number, and is followed by a remarkably entertainment paper on "Edinburgh Society Seventy Years Ago," containing personal reminiscences of Jeffrey, Sydney Smith, Brougham, and the rest of the famous group that founded the Edinburgh Review, besides other prominent figures in the society of that period. Other articles are "The Evil Eye," "Chapters on Socialism," by John Stuart Mill; "Animals and their Native Countries," &c., &c. E. R. Pelton, 25 Bond street, New York. $5 per year.

St. Nicholas for April has an article by Thomas Hughes, the famed author of "Tom Brown," which is a story of certain English boys. Harriet Prescott Spofford contributes the first half of a story called "A Boy Astronomer," and Horace E. Scudder under the title "Little Puritans," describes child-life among the early settlers of New England. There is a biographical sketch of John Milton with three portraits of him, a story of German fairies, and some comical verses from Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge about "The Little Big Woman and The Big Little Girl." These are a part and a small part only of the attractions of this admirable magazine. Scribner & Co. $3 per year.

Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine. The March number of this magazine has been promptly republished by the Leonard Scott Publishing Co., N. Y. The first article "Picking up the Pieces" is a comedy. "A Scots Bishop" is a memoir of George Gleig. The article begins with a story of the Scotch Episcopal Church from its disestablishment at the Revolution. The article on "Contemporary Literature" treats of novels and their writers, describing the styles peculiar to some of the novelists of the present day. Many other interesting and instructive articles follow among which are "Climate in the Levant," "Odillon Barrot in the Events of February, 1848," "The Zulu War," "Bitter Sweet," and "Amari Aliquid."

LIGHT! IS IT WANING?

THE FLETCHER PRIZE ESSAY.

This admirable book from the pen of the late Rev. A. F. Dickson ought to be in every body's hand. It is full of precious truth. It glows with the fervor of Christian earnestness and love, and shines with a light of truth that never can wane. It is eminently practical and profitable.

As yet its circulation is very limited. The society which published it has a claim to 500 copies—only 425 have been sold. All over the 500 are to pay ten per cent. of the retail price to the family of our brother. Is another edition called for? It will be issued, if a demand is ascertained. Will our brethren interest themselves on the subject and promote the sale of the book, not merely for charity's sake, but as a most effective means of elevating the piety of the Church?

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

Rev. Jonathan Galloway, of the Associate Reformed church, aged 69 years, died, on the 3d inst., at Duo West, S. C.

The Synods of Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina donated during the month ending March 10th, 1879, $260.39 to Columbia Seminary.

Rev. W. B. Brown, a member of Kingston Presbytery in the Northern church, died at Marysville, Tennessee, on the 26th day of February.

Rev. Wm. Graef has been called to the pastorate of the First German Presbyterian church of New Orleans, and will take charge immediately.

Eighteen members by profession and one by letter were recently added to the Bend church, a branch of the Hermitage church in Nashville Presbytery.

On account of infirm health Rev. Joseph Brown has resigned pastoral charge of the church at Clear Water, Fla., and removed to a home provided by his children, at Bryan, Texas.

The Raleigh (N. C.) News says: The second Presbyterian Church is fast approaching completion. The style of architecture is different from any in the city. It is a very handsome frame structure and will be completed in about six weeks.

The Rev. J. R. Jacobs has accepted an invitation to supply the Presbyterian church at Corpus Christi, Texas, at which place his correspondents will address him after the middle of April. Until then he will remain at Summerville, S. C.—Southern Presbyterian.

The Rev. J. H. Moore has been preaching at Park Mission Chapel, Louisville, which house of worship is on Sixth street, opposite the Central Park, and the congregations have rapidly and steadily increased in size under his ministry. The interest is so great as to call for the holding of special services. —Christian Observer.

Rev. Dr. B. F. Palmer has been visiting Nashville, Tenn., with Dr. J. B. Shearer in the interest of the Southwestern Presbyterian University. The Westminster Presbyterian church about to be organized is the third offshoot from the First Church of Nashville—In Nashville and Edgefield, a suburb of Nashville there are eight Presbyterian ministers.

The First Presbyterian church of this city, Dr. Preston pastor, has undertaken a mission enterprise in the western part of the city, with good prospects of success. They have secured an excellent church building recently occupied by the Northern Methodists, corner of Elba Park and Marshall streets, and will have a Sabbath School and occasional preaching by Dr. Preston.—Central Presbyterian.

A correspondent of the Texas Presbyterian informs that paper that Rev. J. D. Burkhead, of Huntsville, Ala., closed a series of services, of eight days continuance, in Paris, Tenn., on 8th inst. Mr. Boude, former pastor, was present at the opening and preached, but the services were conducted principally by Mr. Burkhead. Six persons connected themselves with the Presbyterian church in Paris.

Rev. R. W. Shive wrote to the Christian Observer: None know, but those who have experienced it, what joy it brings to a pastor's heart when his people are greatly revived and many precious souls are converted to God. This joy is doubly great when his own dear children become the happy subjects of a work of grace. Such has been the joy of the writer recently. Seventeen in our community have recently found the Saviour, as we trust, and of this number three of my own dear children. Ten have already united with our church and several others are awaiting further instruction. It will take all eternity to render God sufficient praise.

"You will join me in thanksgiving to the great Head of the Church, when you learn that we have just received into our communion 21 persons—3 on certificates, mainly the fruits of the meeting lately referred to in your columns. There are others who will probably join us before long; and some who will enter other churches in our community.

Two additional deacons, Messrs. Samuel L. Flournoy and Isaac H. C. Pancake, have been recently ordained, and we hope to show through the coming year that the Lord has indeed revived us. To Him be the praise."—Central Presbyterian.

The meetings at the Second Presbyterian Church (Louisville, Ky.,) are still continued. There is much interest in the congregation, especially among the sons and daughters of the members of the congregation who have just reached adult years. Some who have been attendants for years have also connected themselves with the church. The pastor, Rev. Dr. Robinson, has not been well, his voice having failed him. The Rev. Mr. Van Lear, of Winchester, Ky., was expected last Monday. He will remain till after the communion, which will be held next Sunday, one week earlier than usual, on account of the meeting of Presbytery. Dr. Robinson will also have the assistance of Rev. Messrs. Guerrant and Moore. Daily services will be held at half-past three o'clock in the afternoon, and hast-past seven at night.—Christian Observer.

Rev. J. W. Hoyte, Evangelist of Nashville Presbytery, gives cheering news to the Christian Observer. Hartville, Tenn., where he has been preaching three years without visible results, has been visited by the Holy Spirit, and sixty-one persons have been received into membership—some of them being restored. It was a Union meeting, though the preaching was all done by Mr. Hoyte. Thirty-one persons joined the Presbyterian church. The elders of the Cumberland Presbyterian church sat with the elders of the Presbyterian church. Twenty-one persons went to the Cumberland Church, five to the Methodist, and three to the Baptist.

"The Presbyterian Church at Gaffneys was dedicated last Saturday. Dr. Miller, from Charlotte, preached Saturday and Sunday. His sermons are highly spoken of, especially the one preached Sunday. The subject was, 'Christ the Corner Stone,' and the sermon will long be remembered by those who heard it.—Spartanburg Spartan.

Several Cumberland Presbyterian ministers who have been advocating the doctrine of Perfection and the Higher Life have finally got well off from their moorings and have struck out for themselves. They hope quietly to withdraw from the Cumberland Church, and establish one for themselves to be called, so it is said, "The Temple of the Coming Lord."

At the sixty-third anniversary of the Bible Society in Columbia, S. C., among other officers elected, we note the following from our Church: Rev. Dr. George Howe, President, and Rev. Drs. W. S. Plumer and J. L. Girardeau, Vice-Presidents; in the Executive Committee—Rev. Dr. J. B. Mack and W. J. Duffie, Esq. Mr. Duffie is Depositary.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Trial of Dr. Talmage was to have begun (we suppose did begin) in the Second Presbyterian Church of Brooklyn on Monday last. Dr. Talmage—so report says—has cited Dr. Mutchmore, editor of the Presbyterian, Dr. Field, editor of the Evangelist, and Rev. Dr. Cuyler, as witnesses in his behalf.

The Presbytery of New York adopted the following: "Whereas, the habit of buying and reading Sunday newspapers appears to be on the increase among Christian families, the Presbytery hereby cautions the churches against the evil, as one especially apt to withdraw their members from the Bible study and religious reading appropriate to Sabbath, and it is resolved, that the pastors be requested to read the above to their respective congregations within six weeks."

Mr. W. Rankin, Treasurer of the Northern Presbyterian Church's Board of Foreign Missions, thus answers the question, What becomes of the money?

MISSION HOUSE, 23 CENTRE STREET,
NEW YORK, Feb. 24, 1879.

The total expenditures last year, as appears in the Annual Report of May 1st, 1878, were $468,147,93, distributed very nearly in the following proportion.

Missions in India 20 per cent.; China 16; Siam 4¾; Syria 12; Japan 5½; Persia 9; Africa 3; South America 11; Mexico 7; Among the American Indians 2½; Among the Chinese in California 3; In Papal Europe 0½. Distribution, printing periodicals for home 11: Cost of Administration 4½; Total 100.

Rev W. H. Scott, of Presbytery of Cairo, died on 26th ulto; Rev. W. B. Brown, of Kinston Presbytery on same day; Rev. E. W. Taylor, of Presbytery of Alston on 19th ulto; and Rev. Wm. H. Cummins, of Dayton Presbytery on 20th ulto.

Mrs. Mary Letitia Wright, wife of Rev. John V. Wright. Missionary at Tabreez, Persia, died 5th February last.

Rev. Dr. Cuyler's church in Brooklyn, N. Y. has received seventy-five additions since the week of prayer. The membership is now 1681.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Over forty persons united with the Olivet College Church, March 2d, on confession.

The church in Montclair, N. J., Rev. H. Bradford, pastor, has reduced its debt from $42,000 to $28,000.

At the church in Oneida, Ill., Rev. H. M. Case pastor, sixty-eight persons were received to membership February 2d, only ten of whom came by letter.

At Union City, Michigan, a quiet work of grace has for some time been progressing. Thirty persons are already accepted into the fellowship of the Congregational Church. Rev. H. H. Van Auken, pastor.

BAPTIST.

Nebraska has 135 Baptist churches, about half of those self-supporting.

The Rev. Arthur Mursell, the open communion Baptist from England who journeyed here to lecture, goes home highly disgusted with this country, and especially with his brother Baptists, who turn the cold shoulder on him.

Rev. Dr. Lorimer of Boston is said to be the best Baptist preacher in America. He was pastor of the Tremont Temple, which he formerly ministered to by Rev. Fulton, now of Brooklyn. Dr. Lorimer went to Boston from Albany, where his work had been crowned with great success. He is now called to the first Baptist Church, Chicago, to succeed Dr. Evarts.

METHODIST.

One thousand dollars have been subscribed by the Senior Class of the Cincinnati Wesleyan College for Women toward the debt by which this noble Institution is embarrassed. The debt is $80,000, on which about $26,000 have been subscribed so far.

The Wesleyan Methodist church at East Ashford, N. Y., has disbanded, and most of its members have joined the Congregational Church.

The eight most Northwestern States constitute a Swedish Methodist Conference two years old, with forty-nine churches and 4,000 members.

The German Methodist churches of Chicago number six, but have only 1,000 members, though an average attendance of 4,000. And this is said to be the largest Protestant influence among the 100,000 Germans of that city. Many, however, attend American churches.

EPISCOPAL.

Dr. Bollt, of Cleveland, is reported as saying there are but four Protestant Episcopal clergymen in this country who have never changed their parishes, and who have passed, or nearly passed, their fiftieth year of rectorship. They are the Rev. John Brown, of St. George's Church, Newburgh, N. Y.; the Rev. W. C. Mead, of St. Paul's Church, Norwalk, Conn.; the Rev. Theodore Edson, of St. Ann's Church, Lowell, Mass., and the Rev. W. Shelton, D. D., of St. Paul's Church, Buffalo. The Rev. Dr. Burr has been Rector of All-Saints' Church, Portsmouth, Ohio, for thirty-five years, and the Rev. Dr. Craik, rector of Christ Church, Louisville, Ky., for the same period.

GENERAL.

The pastors of the Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist and Episcopal churches in Oneida, N. Y., have published a card in which they characterize "the life and theories of the Oneida community as shameful."

Springfield, Mass., has an aggregate church debt of $213,000, which is owed by fourteen churches. In 1872 the total was $148,500.

There are four schools of theology in or near Chicago—Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist. Their students annually hold a social and religious reunion with the most cordial good fellowship. This year the Methodists entertained the others.

Out of his fortune of $300,000 the late Loyal Wilcox, of Hartford, Conn., left to the American Educational Society, American Board of Foreign Missions, and American Congregational Union, $2,500 each; Oberlin University, $4,000; Home Missionary Society and Ripon College, Wisconsin, $5,000 each; Methodist church, Canton, Conn., $1,000. Total, $22,000.

While San Francisco is persecuting the Chinese, Boston is trying to teach them. The place where this good work is going on is the Chambers Street Chapel; and the person in charge of it is a lady, Miss Harriet Carter, a city missionary. She is assisted by the Rev. David Jones, who has been engaged in similar efforts in Wyoming, and who speaks the Chinese language with tolerable fluency. Some thirty or more Chinese are now in regular attendance at the school, learning to read and write English; and many of them are beginning to manifest not a little curiosity and interest even in respect to religious ideas. Helping teachers are found in the neighboring churches, and with one teacher for each scholar the work goes easily and encouraging-ly on.

This age is a progressive one, and improvements are continually suggesting themselves in almost every department of human life. Labor-saving inventions and machinery are eagerly sought for, to accomplish in a few hours' time what usually was the toil of days and even weeks. The farm, the household, the workshop, the factory, all possess unmistakable evidences of this wonderful age of progress. It remained, however, for the eminent house of LORD & TAYLOR, well known as one of the leading dry goods firms of New York city, to introduce vast improvements in the old shopping method, and to make "shopping easy" for every lady in the country. There is now no excuse for ladies to fatigue themselves with travel, and to undergo its hundred and one annoyances, when they can purchase every article needed for the wardrobe or household without leaving their homes. Messrs. LORD & TAYLOR will send, on application, free of charge, samples of any of the newest piece goods for spring and summer wear, which they advertise, with prices attached to each. Selections from these are readily made; orders for goods received, filled by the house, and returned by fast trains to the purchaser. This surely is a material improvement for the slow method of former days, as by this system time, money, labor and annoyances are all saved. The business standing of this eminent house makes this announcement worthy of attention, as they can be relied upon implicitly to accomplish whatever they advertise to do.

THE CONNECTICUT MUTUAL, OF HARTFORD.—This model life insurance company issued to-day its thirty-third annual statement, and, as is usual in the matter of its regularly published reports, shows advantages gained in the right direction. It has increased its amount of assets, lessened its ratio of expense, increased the amount of payment to policy holders and lessened the amount of interest accrued. Against the item, "net premiums in course of collection," it writes as in the report of last year, "none." Its economical administration is shown in the low ratio of expense of management to receipts, 6.57 per cent.

In Newbern, N. C., Jan 16, 1889, Mrs. HARIETTE D. LANE, in the 88th year of her age.

In early youth she embraced the Christian religion, and through all the vicissitudes of life, she walked in humble faith, trusting with implicit confidence, the words and promises of that Saviour whom she loved and honored. She possessed in an eminent degree, all those Christian graces, "Faith, Hope and Charity," which made her religion so beautiful. She now "rests from her labors" in the blissful presence of her Redeemer, "and her works do follow her."

Mr. JOHN DALRYMPLE was born in Moore county, N. C., September 22, 1803.

He first joined Mt. Pisgah church under the ministry of Rev. Evander McNair, D. D., about 1837, and was afterward dismissed to Buffalo, where he was chosen and ordained a ruling elder.

When Salem church was organized May 16th, 1868, he was dismissed to that church, where he was chosen and installed a ruling elder, and continued to serve in that capacity with great acceptance, until he died March 10th, 1879.

He was remarkable for his wonderful uniformity and strict conscienciousness. All, in the Church and out of it, had abiding confidence in his integrity, prudence and piety. A good man has fallen in Israel, and we mourn, but not without hope. J. P. M.

A., author of the "Pictorial Bible," the History and Physical Geography of Palestine, and editor of the Journal of Sacred Literature, etc., etc.

It is arranged expressly for Sunday School Superintendents, Teachers and Bible Students, and embraces a complete and authentic description of all the characters, customs, countries and events mentioned in the Bible, and those connected with them in Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, Grecian and Roman History. Including the period of over four hundred years between the Old and New Testaments, to which are added many valuable tables, and the products of the latest researches in Biblical literature, together with the knowledge gained by the explorations and discoveries of eminent travellers. The whole illustrated with numerous cuts, maps and full page engravings from the best authenticated models and designs that antiquarian research and ancient monuments can produce.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT
OF THE NEXT
General Assembly.

At this time I desire to make known to our Church that the official report of the next Assembly will be published on a plan different from any heretofore adopted. Dissatisfied, as all must have been, with the published report of the last Assembly—the only one at which I have had the honor to act as official stenographer—and dishonored by the marring of work painfully and conscientiously performed, I have obtained from the other members of the Assembly's Committee appointed over the business, their hearty assent to publish the report of the next Assembly upon my own responsibility; and thus freed from many restrictions by parties exempt from liability to the Assembly, and from a method which prevented me from making my last report as complete as I desired, I hope by a plan of my own, not only to satisfy my own judgment and conscience, but to provide the Church with (what it has never enjoyed) prompt intelligence of the proceedings, and a complete verbatim report of the debates of our next Assembly. Details will be published in due time. G. L. WOLFE.

FOR THE FAMILY.

In Memoriam.

Oh fair white face! Oh, heart of peace,
So passionless and calm,
The beauty of a perfect life
Thy lineaments embalm.

I speak, but hear no answering word;
Thy lips are cold and still:
I miss the leading of thy step,
The guiding of thy will.

I weep that I have lost the light
That ever on me shone:
Henceforth in shadow I must tread
The upward path alone.

And yet afar I seem to hear
The triumphs of thy voice,
Bidding me weep no more for thee,
But evermore rejoice.

And lean on Him who led thee on,
Through life's dark tortuous way,
Until the glorious morning dawn
Of everlasting day.

DETROIT.

A Boy Who Gave his Note.

A Boston lawyer was called on a short time ago by a boy, who inquired if he had any waste paper to sell. The lawyer had a crisp, keen way of asking questions, and is, moreover, a methodical man. So pulling out a large drawer, he exhibited his stock of waste paper.

"Will you give me two shillings for that?"

The boy looked at the paper doubtingly a moment, and offered fifteen pence.

"Done," said the lawyer; and the paper was quickly transferred to the bag of the boy, whose eyes sparkled as he lifted the mighty mass.

Not till it was safely stowed away did he announce that he had no money.

"No money? How do you expect to buy paper without money?"

Not prepared to state exactly his plan of operations, the boy made no reply.

"Do you consider your note good?" asked the lawyer.

"Yes, sir."

"Very well; if you consider your note is good, I'd just as soon have it as the money; but if it isn't good, I don't want it."

The boy affirmed that he considered it good; whereupon the lawyer wrote a note for 15 pence, which the boy signed legibly, and lifting the bag of papers, trudged off.

Soon after dinner the little fellow returned, and producing the money, announced that he had come to pay his note.

"Well," said the lawyer, "this is the first time that I ever knew a note to be taken up the day it was given. A boy that will do that is entitled to note and money too;" and, giving him both, sent him on his way with a smiling face and happy heart.

The Chamois Hunters.

Upon the sunny slope of one of the Swiss mountains, there once lived a poor chamois hunter with his wife and five children. They were very happy, and much attached to each other. The father daily imperiled his life on the steep mountains in pursuit of the chamois, whilst the mother and children tended the goats at home, and made butter and cheese.

The eldest boy, "Tony," was a high-spirited lad, and longed to be a chamois hunter like his father. He would sit for hours in the long winter evenings, listening to his parent's stories of the wild mountain peaks, and of the wonderful stag, and he was impatient for the time to come when he too could depart in the early morning, and enter that strange mist-shrouded world, where the snow for ever lies, and the wonderful chamois roams!

Tony was in high spirits, but the mother wept as she saw her husband and boy depart to those unknown regions and pathless solitudes

But she trusted in God, and knew the boy's father would restrain his headlong ardor, and train him carefully; so she returned to busy herself about her household work and dairy duties.

On this morning, it was some time before Tony or his father sighted any game. In vain they wandered to and fro, and clambered this rocky peak, or that snowy height—nothing could they discover! Their patience was indeed sorely tried, yet they must needs go on, stepping carefully, for fear of loosening a stone which might roll, and so scare the timid creatures away; and never speaking above a whisper for the same reason.

And at last their persistent waiting and watching were rewarded. Having climbed to the top of a dizzy eminence, they espied a solitary buck lying among some Alpine grass, far below them. Carefully noting his position, they commenced their tedious and dangerous journey downwards towards him. But after an hour's hard work, when they reached the spot, they found their game gone!

Again they climbed, and again they espied a solitary chamois, far below them. This time the descent was more dangerous; the precipice was almost perpendicular, at the bottom rose numerous jagged rocks, around and between which a glacier stream roared and foamed. It required, indeed, the strongest nerves, and the most dauntless courage to go down such a precipice. But telling his son to remain at the top, Tony's fearless father commenced the descent. What an anxious moment; what a terrible sight for a loving and dutiful son!

The chamois was standing on the top of one of those jagged rocks above mentioned, and if in his descent Tony's father loosened a stone, or, indeed, if the chamois turned towards him and saw him, it would bound away, and again their chance would be lost.

The daring hunter descended in safety; then climbing up another rock, he came within shooting distance. The gun was fired, and the chamois fell. The cry of triumph raised by the father was answered by the watchful Tony standing at the top of the precipice; but then their joy ended, for how was the father to get out of this abyss of rocks?

It is an uncomfortable feeling to look up at the blue sky, and to feel one's self in a huge trap, from which there is no means of egress except to climb up almost perpendicular walls. However, Tony's father commenced his perilous ascent. Binding the dead chamois on his shoulders, he began to creep up. It was a broad slanting surface of rock like an immense table, and was so inclined that to walk was hardly possible, and after a short time the hunter was obliged to go on all-fours.

After proceeding in this way for some minutes, he found to his great annoyance that he was slipping back; his thickly nailed shoes rubbed away the stone as he dug them into the surface of the rock, and he could make no headway.

Again he tried, and this time he was a little more successful; but the skin was torn from his fingers and knees, and every foot of progress was marked with his blood. Still he gradually crept higher up this inclined plane.

Meantime, Tony had not been idle. Placing his alpenstock—a strong stout staff, pointed with iron, and much used by the hunters to aid them in their climbings and slidings—firmly in the top of the cliff, he fastened a cord which he had in his pocket tightly to it, and flung the other end down the precipice towards his father.

With slow and painful movements the hunter made his made his way to the end of his rope, and then grasping it, he was able to help himself up more easily, and proceed with greater speed. Soon now he reached the top, and then father and son, rejoicing together, began to descend the mountains towards their home. But they were not to reach their dwelling without yet another adventure on this memorable day.

They were descending the ledge already mentioned, where a wall of perpendicular rock rose above them, and a terrible precipice yawned beneath, and had nearly come to the end of the perilous path, when Tony's foot slipped, and to his father's great horror, the boy fell over, and slid down the precipice!

The father stood as if paralysed with terror; he could do nothing! Happily the boy did not lose his presence of mind. He caught eagerly at tufts of grass, projections in the rocks—anything that seemed to offer a chance of safety; he tried to dig his finger in the face of the cliff, but still he slipped—down! down! down!

Tony thought all was over now; he thought he was to face with death, but he was not afraid, for he loved his Saviour, and knew that, living or dead, God had him in his holy keeping. He felt, though, that if it had been God's will, he should have liked to live and hunt more chamois, but he tried to compose his mind, and to be resigned, and to agree with the will of his Creator.

Suddenly, as he kept on trying to hold by something, pressing his feet and hands against the face of the cliff, he felt that one foot was stopped by a little knob of rock, and his descent was arrested. Hardly daring to move lest he should break it off, he turned his head and looked below; he found that he had stopped just on the brink—where the precipice, from being steep and slanting, became perpendicular, and indeed concave! Another inch, and he would have been dashed to pieces!

Lifting his heart in a silent prayer of thankfulness, he began instantly his perilous ascent. His father slid his alpenstock down the cliff and the boy caught it, and by means of this and the rope, which his father dropped down to him, he at length reached the narrow pathway from which he had fallen.

In due time after this they reached home, but the perils of the chase were not expiated upon to distress the loving wife and mother, and she never knew that that chamois had nearly cost the lives of both her husband her boy.

But Tony lived long afterwards, and told others the tale of his first day's chamois hunting. He is very skillful now, and passes and repasses that precipice often, but never without thanking his loving Father in heaven for his marvellous escape.— British Juvenile.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Hints on Boquet-Making.

Now a few words in regard to making boquets, for of course every one who has a garden will desire to cut the flowers for home decoration.

The arrangement of flowers is an art, as every one must acknowledge who has seen the crushed, crowded masses sometimes called boquets.

The essentials are plenty of white flowers and green leaves; it is well to cultivate flowers specially for this purpose. The double white Feverfew is one of the best for boquet-making, also white Drummond Phlox, double white Balsam, and white Dianthus are very good. Now for green: Asparagus is best, I think. I grow a few roots specially for their foliage. Rose Geranium leaves are very good, while for large baskets and boquets the plumy tops of carrots are fine.

Now we want something to give grace and lightness to our boquets, and Gypsophia Paniculata is just the thing; it cannot be surpassed.

A spray of Cyprus Vine, or Mountain Fringe, to twine and droop is an addition. Having arranged green leaves and white flowers very loosely, fill in with others; but discretion must be used, as sometimes a single flower will spoil the whole effect. Here each one must use her own taste and judgment, and learn by experience which colors harmonize best. Be careful and avoid crowding, using as few colors and flowers as possible, with plenty of green and white.

I once saw a lovely boquet; it was in a black lava vase, and consisted of a half-opened blush rose, and a bud with a few of its own green leaves; that was all, anything more would have spoiled it.

Another pretty combination was a bunch of Mignonette and Sweet Pea Blossoms, surrounded by Gypsophila. A cluster of Tropæolums of different colors, together with their own leaves, was another pretty boquet.

The tasteful combinations of flowers are almost infinite, and with a little practice any one can become quite skilful in making floral ornaments.

In conclusion I would say it is only necessary to have a love for flowers and gardening, and, though you may sometimes fail, in the end you will be sure to succeed, and feel amply repaid for your labor.— Floral Cabinet.

Bridal Veils.

A very early Anglo-Saxon adornment of the bride, was the floral garland, and the introduction of the veil as an accompaniment was readily accepted. The precise period of this introduction seems hardly clear; but the rage for the bridal veil, existing in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, leaves us to infer that, like fans and gloves, veils may have crossed the channel from France, while France was indebted for them to Italy, through Catherine de Medicis. Indeed, in a review of the lace industries of the period, this supposition amounts to more than a probability, inasmuch as old bridal lace veils, of the Venice rose point, are still to be seen among the treasures of museums, and the heirlooms of fortunate families.

Following the example of the Italian nuns, we notice, ere long, the Spanish nuns accomplishing marvels in the making of laces, in the course of time the Spanish blonde, becoming the accepted lace for the bridal veil—this, perhaps, being accounted for, because it was less costly than either the Venetian, Flemish, or French laces of the period, rather than by virtue of greater delicacy or beauty of design and execution. But though comparatively cheap, the Spanish blonde bridal veil was costly enough to deter from extensive purchase; a single veil was expected to do service for all the brides of a family through three and four generations; and thus the inherited dignity which is claimed in its possession. In the times of our great-grandmothers and grandmothers, the Spanish blonde was the fashionable bridal veil; and here and there, with other treasured relics of American families, we are shown one, rich with the mellow tintings of age, and ready almost to drop to pieces at the touch of the fingers. In the course of time, counterfeits in manufacture appeared, to contest popular favor; as with things meretricious, generally, the simulated in silk gauze, to a very great extent, supplanted the genuine hand-wrought Spanish blonde, for the bridal veil; and until the success of the lacquard loom, in the production of the silk tulle of the present, as a projection of bobinet, simulated blonde veils were those under which the bride was most frequently married. Now, to a very great extent, the silk tulle bridal veil, supplants all others. Occasionally we find the wealthy indulging in a veil of point a l'aiguille or some other of the costly modern laces; in very rare instances, the hereditary veil, serves as the head-dress for the bride; but much more generally the maiden who proposes to doff her youthful joyousness, is content with the fleecy tulle, which surrounds her as the sun-lighted mist of morning, enchancing, while shadowing her beauty.

Parasol Ants of Texas.

At a recent meeting of the Philadelphia Academy of the Natural Sciences the Rev. H. C. McCook presented the results of his studies of the habits of the parasol ants of Texas. Two forms of nests were found by him—one that of a mound twenty-one feet long and four feet high, built around the trunk of a double live oak tree, and the second form consisting of twenty or thirty circular, semi-circular, and S shaped elevations, consistidg of fresh earth pellets scattered over a flat space denuded of grass. The mound nest resembled a spittoon in shape, having a round entrance on top. This mound, when first seen, seemed to be deserted; but as evening approached hosts of ants of various sizes were seen hurrying out of the open gate into the neighboring thicket, and two long double columns were stretched from the bottom to the very top of the live oak. The ants in the descending column all carried above their heads portions of green leaves, which waved to and fro and glanced in the lantern light, imparting a weird look to the long line of march. They resembled a procession of Lilliputians bearing their banners aloft.

The opening and closing of the great gate to the nest occurs before and after every exit and entrance of ants. Towards evening the gates are gradually thrown open and remain so until morning, when they are again carefully closed. The work is performed by ants of various sizes, who transport particles of wood and fragments of leaves, etc., of proportionate bulks, for the ants themselves vary from one fourteenth to one sixteenth of an inch in length, at least ten distinct castes or sizes having been counted. When the gates are to be opened, the minions, or smaller forms, carry away from the heap particles of sand. Larger ants take bits of refuse, which they deposit a couple of inches from the gate. This process is slow and it takes a long time to accomplish very little. When the whole mass is thus loosened comes the final burst, with soldiers, majors and minors in the lead, who bear away the rubbish in front of them, which, in a few minutes, is thus cleared away from the gallery and spread around the margin of the gates.

In cutting, the parasol ant grasps the leaf with feet outspread, and makes an incision at the edge by a scissors-like motion of its great sickle-shaped, toothed mandibles. It then gradually revolves, cutting as it goes. Carriers on the ground take up the fragments as they fall and carry them to the nest, each piece being loaded up on its edge within a deep furrow which runs along the entire middle line of the ant's head, and is kept in position by prominent spines on the edge of this furrow and on the fore part of the ant's body.

The cutting and carrying was done, as far as was noted, by the smaller ants. The soldiers rarely engaged in this work, but were seen to precede the excursion columns, as they moved out of the nest and up the tree, and afterward to return as though only engaged as scouts or pioneers. The principal leaves gathered were those of the live oak, although others were cut and carried off by the ants. These ants are fond of sugar, grain and tobacco. The use made of the cut leaves is to construct cells, slightly resembling those of the hornet's nest, but more irregular in shape. These cells were contained in the underground caverns, or pockets. Within these caverns great numbers of the smaller castes of ants were found.—Scientific American.

The Jerusalem Chamber.

The Jerusalem Chamber was so called in the old times because of its pictures or tapestries representing the history or last seige of Jerusalem. Last year some of the working men who were present heard a reading from the last scene of Shakspere's Henry IV., where the old King was described as having come to the Abbey for devotions before going to the Holy Land. In the Abbey he was seized with a violent illness and was taken to the nearest place where there was a fire, and that was in the Abbot's Parlor or Jerusalem Chamber. He was laid on a conch before the fire. He put his crown upon the pillow and there fell asleep. While he was asleep his eldest son, Prince Henry (Madcap Hal), came into the room and took away the crown. This led to his father afterwards administering to him those warnings which, it was said, had such an effect on the young man as to entirely change his manner of life. King Henry having asked the name of the chamber, said he had been told he should die "at Jerusalem," but that he now perceived that it was not at Jerusalem in Palestine that his death would happen; and the last words put into his mouth by Shakspere were, "In this Jerusalem shall Harry die." Accordingly he died in that room. Over the fireplace in front of which he died was a picture of his death and two busts—one of Henry IV. and one of Henry V. The chamber had been used for various assemblies of the churches, the first being the Assembly of Presbyterian divines, who drew up the Westminster Confession of Faith and the Longer and Shorter Catechism. Subsequently the English Prayer-book was revised there, and the books of the Old Testament Revision Committee now sitting, had been removed that evening to make room for the present company. (Cheers.)

From the Jerusalem Chamber those present would be taken to the Jericho Parlour, and then to the Abbot's House, where would be seen the pictures of a great many people who had rendered themselves famous in English history, and a collection of photographs, engravings, and curiosities which he hoped would provide enjoyment for the evening. (Cheers.)

On the motion of Mr. Hodgson Pratt, secretary of the union, a hearty vote of thanks was given to the Dean, who then led the way through the rooms he had described. In these the Dean's guests passed a most agreeable evening.—Christian Signal.

The Burmese king threatened to force the Residency, but at last accounts had thought better of it and given assurances of tranquility. It is stated that the King is making warlike preparations, and has summoned the Burmese residents of Rangoon to return to their native country or their families will be executed.

A bill has been brought forward in the French Chamber of Deputies to exclude Jesuits from teaching in France by making the law forbidding teaching by foreigners to apply to them. The Paris correspondent of the Times remarks that the Jesuits have twenty-seven colleges in France, with 848 teachers. Twenty-six other communities, having 61 establishments and 1,089 teachers, and also unrecognized by the State, and they will consequently be deprived by the bill of the right of teaching.

We learn that several students of the University, guilty of most ungentlemanly conduct in this place, to which we alluded in our last, were promptly expelled by the faculty as soon as the facts were brought to their attention. This is as it should be.—Hillsboro Recorder.

LISBON, March 20.—Pinto, the Portuguese explorer, who has arrived at Pretoria, telegraphs to the Portugnese government as follows: "In concluding my journey across Africa I struggled with hunger, thirst, the natives, floods and droughts. I have saved all of my papers, twenty geographical charts, many topographical maps, three volumes of notes, meteorological studies, drawings, and a diary of the complete exploration of the Upper Zambesi, with its seventy-two cataracts."

VOLUNTARY TESTIMONY.

[Extract from the Baltimore "American," December 21, 1878.]

"The Pulvermacher Electric Belt is recommended to general use for the following reasons: First, for its wonderful properties for the cure of diseases of the kidneys, stomach, liver and blood; secondly, for its extreme simplicity, and the fact of its being applied outside, precludes all possibility of any injury being done to the patient, as an external remedy is universally acknowledged to be safe. Another advantage is the facility with which the progress of the disease and cure can be watched, and if the Belt be not quite in the right place, it can be very easily readjusted so as to cover the parts affected. The Pulvermacher Electric Belt, and its perfection, has been hailed with delight, not only by the sufferers who have regained health, enjoyment, and a new lease of life through its beneficent qualities, but by the medical profession, who very frequently prescribe its use to their patients."

PULVERMACHER'S

are indorsed and approved by the most eminent medical and scientific authorities in the world, by the Faculties of France, England, Austria, Prussia, Belgium, and America, and by well-known writers, who refer to the extraordinary cures effected by Pulvermacher's Electric Belts and Bands, in upwards of one hundred medical and philosophical works.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN NORTH CAROLINA

BY REV. J. RUMPLE.

THE CHURCHES OF RALEIGH AND HER SCHOOLS.

Reference has already been made to the school enterprises of Raleigh, especially to the Raleigh Academy, so long under the direction of the Rev. Dr. McPheeters, and his assistant, the Rev. B. H. Rice, D. D., beginning in 1809 and continuing till 1826, a period of seventeen years. And what they so early began in the way of educating the young, they have continued till this day, not only for the education of the boys, but also of the girls. It was as far back as 1842 that the Rev. Albert Smedes, D. D., under the supervision of the Episcopal Bishop of North Carolina founded St. Mary's School. Though under the influence and care of the Episcopal Church, and training its pupils in the doctrines of that Church, this institution received an extended patronage, not only from that denomination but from others likewise.

In 1870 the Baptists opened a female seminary in Raleigh under the administration of the Rev. Dr. Royall, which is now presided over by Mr. F. P. Hobgood. This seminary has nine teachers and nearly one hundred pupils.

Though the Presbyterians have never been very numerous in Raleigh, or in that region of the country, yet they for a long time felt the need of an institution of high grade, in the capitol of the State for the education of young ladies, under Presbyterian auspices. And though the completion was long delayed, yet as early as 1857, the Rev. J. M. Atkinson, then pastor of the church in Raleigh, inaugurated a scheme for establishing such an institute. A joint stock company was projected by Mr. Atkinson, and among a number of other subscribers, Mr. Wm. Peaco, a ruling elder in the Raleigh church, subscribed ten thousand dollars and from this most liberal and munificent patron, the seminary was appropriately named.

PEACE INSTITUTE.

Work was commenced on the college building in 1859, and the stately edifice was almost completed when the first sounds of the war were heard in 1861. As the civil strife began to rage fiercely, all work was suspended, and the project of opening the school for the present was abandoned. During the war the building was occupied by the Confederate government as a hospital, and at the conclusion of hostilities it fell into the hands of the United States authorities and was used as a "Freedmen's Bureau." After a long time the building was turned over to its rightful owners, and by prolonged and self-denying efforts in the days of impoverishment and trial, it was fitted up and made ready for occupation in September, 1872. The site of this institution is strikingly beautiful, and all its surroundings cheerful and refreshing. It stands in the midst of a grove of magnificent oaks at the head of Wilmington street about half a mile from the Capitol Square. The grounds contain about eight acres, laid off in walks and ornamented with flowers and shrubbery. The building is of brick, four stories high, one hundred and forty-five feet long and ninety feet deep. Besides rooms for chapel, calisthenics, music, painting, library, dining, recitation, and the Principal's personal apartments, it has rooms capable of accommodating eighty boarders. The climate of Raleigh is a medium one, free from the heavy atmosphere of the gulf-coast, and at the same time not subject to the fierce winds and bitter cold of more elevated and mountainous regions, and makes a pleasant and salubrious home for girls especially during the autumn, winter and spring months, in which the school exercises continue.

The Directors were fortunate in procuring as Principals of the new Institute the Rev. J. Burwell and Son. The Rev. Mr. Burwell began his career as a teacher of young ladies in Hillsboro about the year 1835, where he taught continually until about 1857 or '58. At this time he removed to Charlotte and became Principal of the Charlotte Institute. Having been therefore he opened Peace Institute in 1872, he brought the experience and acquired resources of thirty-five years. Mr. Jno. B. Burwell, in the prime of life, familiar from his earliest days with the duties of the school-room, and with several years of actual experience, both in management and teaching, was well qualified to execute what the experience of many years decided to be wise and useful. With these two Principals, Mrs. M. R. Lacy, the wife of the venerated and beloved Dr. Lacy, was associated as lady principal. Mrs. Lacy had been for a number of years conducting a female school in Raleigh, and at the opening of Peace Institute, she and her school were incorporated, and she continues to be the popular and efficient supervisor of the studies, the morals and the habits of the girls. Prof. S. J. Stevens, so well-known as the scholarly and laborious co-adjutor of the Rev. J. M. M. Caldwell, in his schools in Statesville and Greensboro, was also employed in Peace Institute from the opening until his death. Afterwards the Rev. W. R. Atkinson, now the successful principal of the Charlotte Female Institute, became the instructor in mathematics and natural science. The popular and conscientious Prof. A. Baumann, who won a reputation with Mr. Burwell in Charlotte has had charge of the music department, aided by his accomplished wife, from the beginning. Associated with these principal teachers from year to year, there have been skillful and approved instructors in painting, drawing, German, French, calisthenics, and in short, of all the branches taught in first class female colleges. Without rushing after every novelty that gains the notice of the world of educators, Mr. Burwell has used all diligence to test such new methods of instruction as appeared worthy of confidence, and promising good results.

The school opened on the 23rd of September, 1872, under the most favorable auspices, and success has attended it until now. The whole number of pupils the first year was one hundred and four, of whom fifty were boarders. The number has continued the same to this time, ranging from one hundred and ten to one hundred and twenty-one. Peace Institute is now one of the largest and best equipped female colleges in the land, not inferior to the celebrated female seminaries in the valley of Virginia. The corps of teachers consists of eleven ladies and gentlemen, each selected because of fitness for the post assigned. It is gratifying to record that physical culture takes its place alongside of mental and moral training, and that the young ladies are exercised in a system of calisthenics that cultivates grace of movement without the temptations of the modern dance, and promotes health and strength without trenching upon female delicacy. May it long continue to be a fountain of holy influences, that shall make the wilderness and solitary place to be glad, and the desert to rejoice and blossom as the rose.

WHAT IS MEANT?

MR. EDITOR—I was very much interested in an article in your paper of March 12th, headed, "We are in Danger." The writer evidently thinks that many of the professed followers of Jesus Christ are not honest in the fulfilment of their promises and the payment of their debts, especially to their pastors. Is this so? Are men morally bound to pay what they promise to their ministers? And is he a dishonest man in the sight of God who does not pay, or at least make all proper efforts to pay, all that he has promised in due time? But further the writer says, "In many churches of forty, sixty, one hundred or more members the funds for all church purposes are paid by twenty, forty or sixty members, this, too, where all are able to pay." Is this so? And are all morally bound to pay what they are able to support the Gospel among themselves? Or is every man at liberty, in the sight of God, to subscribe or not to the support of the Gospel as he may see fit, and then bound to pay only what he promises, so that if he promises nothing he is bound to pay nothing? Suppose a man is able to pay fifty dollars to the support of the Gospel, and it is all needed to make up that support, but he subscribes only twenty dollars and pays that, has he honestly paid his whole debt? This view, I think, is held by many members and some officers of the church.

Again, God charged his ancient people with robbing him in withholding the tithes and offerings which he required. (See Malachi 3: 8 to the end.) Have we anything to do with that? Does that mean that a man who withholds that support from the Gospel which he is able to give to it robs God? And is it as great a sin, as great a dishonesty to rob God as to defraud man, or intentionally get rid of paying a just debt?

Again, the writer speaks of pastors and of the pledges voluntarily assumed by the people to support them. But a large portion of our ministers are not pastors in the technical sense of that term. They are stated supplies. They probably would prefer the pastoral relation. But the people are not able, or do not feel themselves able, to give them a competent support. If one of these weak congregations should call a man to the pastoral office and promise no more for his support than they are willing to pledge themselves to pay, the Presbytery would not put the call into his hands, regarding the amount promised inadequate to a support. Hence the minister serves the people as a stated supply. In many cases these stated supplies do the work of pastors as faithfully, I apprehend, as those who have been installed as pastors. The people, too, look upon them as their pastors and expect of them the work of pastors, whilst they are not jointly pledged for their support, and are willing to pay no more than the sums severally annexed to their names. If half the subscribers fail to pay the full amount of their subscriptions, in many cases, perhaps, the other half could make it up, with a little effort, without discomfort to themselves. Does honesty require them to do this? Or are they doing all that God requires in such cases, if they pay their own subscriptions, no matter to what inconvenience and want the minister may be subjected?

One more point only at present: Is it the duty of every congregation, and of every member of the church, to aim to provide a comfortable support for their minister? And where the salary of a minister is not sufficient for a comfortable support, even where the minister and his family practice the most rigid economy, are these members of the church, who are living in comfort themselves, doing all that honesty requires, and all that God requires, if they do not deny themselves some conveniences and comforts in order to make their minister and his family as comfortable as themselves? Or is there any reason in the nature of the case, or in the teaching of God's word, why the minister should not live as comfortably as the people? And when the Saviour says "The laborer is worthy of his meat" does he mean that the faithful laborer, or minister of the Gospel, earns a comfortable support by his labors or does he mean a bare living?

Will you, Mr. Editor, answer these questions! I would like also to hear from our friend C. of Lenoir and from the venerable D. L. of Raleigh. I have my own views about them, but it is better that others should answer them. JUSTICE.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

FEMALE PREACHERS.

Until very recently the error of putting women into the pulpit has, in this State, been confined to the Quakers, and, they being a very quiet people, there was but little to be feared from the dissemination of the error. It has of late, however, assumed a different attitude, and is now boldly asking the endorsement of the Christian public, and a part of the Christian public, always ready for sensational innovations, is giving its endorsement. We now see women with no show of ordination, unhesitatingly invited into the pulpit in some quarters, and leading the youth and thoughtless people into spasmodic religious excitements. Should the public sentiment be brought to connive at a practice so irrational and unscriptural it is easy to foresee some of the results—the land full of female mendicants, the Christian ministry dishonored, and Christianity seriously damaged. Has not the time come when the Presbyterian ministry should speak out boldly on this subject? What says the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN? M.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

The Baltimore Herald of which Tom Wash Smith is editor, says: Here is a noteworthy matter. We all remember when Sunday concerts began in London; much was written against their tendency, but other people said they were good and would tend to good by keeping the idle from worse places; but the evidence is that when men begin to disregard the sanctity of the Lord's day, progress downward is rapid. The Chicago Alliance has a few words on the subject: "Chicago is now full of Sunday theatres, which are generally of a low character, catering to the low and vicious classes. Their influence is demoralizing in the highest degree. It was not many years ago that Sunday theatres were forbidden by an ordinance of the Common Council, which was thoroughly enforced, being sustained by public sentiment. But a clamor arose from the daily press for Sunday concerts—pure, and even sacred music, of course. These were tolerated, but were not long in being followed by a very natural deterioration. Concert saloons came next, which very soon degenerated to the lowest depths. Sunday theatres came in due time, and, as they are very profitable to the liquor interest, they have continued and multiplied until they disgrace every part of the city."

A JAPANESE VIEW OF CHRISTIANITY.

The Japan Mail quotes a Japanese newspaper, the Hochi Shimbun, an article headed, "Of what good is Christianity to Japan?" After remarking on the manner in which Christianity is spreading in the country, the native journal says:

"We have no wish to obey it, nor have we any fear of being troubled by it. As we can enjoy sufficient happiness without any religion whatever, the question as to the merits or demerits of the different forms never enters our head. Indeed, we are of those who, not knowing the existence of religions in the universe, are enjoying perfect happiness. Thus we do not receive any favor from the Christian religion, nor have we any enmity against it. We have no intention of either support it or attacking it. In fact, religion is nothing to us. Although we do not know what religion is, we do not doubt that it is necessary to govern human morality—and we do not consider believers in Christianity to be odd or foolish persons, but we take them to be those who are guided in their morals by their religion, and, in consequence, we may say that believers in the Christian religion are those who, spending time and labor, import their laws of morality from a foreign country. This is the point on which we wish to say a word to the Christian believers and those persons whose only employment is in teaching the Christian religion. In associating with foreigners, in what way can we benefit our country? To improve ourselves where we are inferior, to gain knowledge of what we do not yet know, and to perfect where we are deficient, are the most important objects of foreign intercourse. Thus what we are deficient in we must try to get with all our power. Now, is Japan deficient in human intellect or in morality? Although the morality of our countrymen is not without blame, if we compare it with that of some western people, it will be found that we are, in the main, certainly not inferior to them than otherwise. However, in intellect (the sciences, arts, &c.) this is not the case, and we are far below them. What we are inferior to them in, what we are deficient in, and what we are ignorant of in intellectual capacity, is beyond our estimation, and we fear that, even if our most competent men exerted themselves to the utmost, day and night, we should be still behind them. This is the present state of things. Therefore we must do our best to improve our intellect from foreign countries, so as to reach a position equal to them. What is the reason that our country does not strive to excel them more and more in morality? Is it on account of the insufficiency of money or intellect? The latter is, indeed, the cause. Look at the Americans, for instance. Those who emigrated there first were almost all vagrants, possessing not a sen, but they have gradually advanced, and have finally reached a state of prosperity in common with other European nations. This is simply because they were not inferior in intellect to Europeans; and in this case of our country, if we had intellect equal to the Europeans, it would be an easy matter to hold our own against them. Indeed, our deficiency in intellect is the cause of our being unable to compete with foreigners. Therefore, competent men should do all in their power to disseminate knowledge obtained from foreign countries, and thus lay the foundation to becoming ourselves equal to them. What is religion? Is it not the source of morality? Moral is not deficient in us, and therefore the improvement of our morals is not at the present an urgent necessity, but, on the contrary, it may be called unnecessary, and hence our clever men need not waste their time on the matter. If the time and trouble wasted on improving our morality, which is not deficient in us, were directed towards gaining intellectual knowledge, which is deficient in us, the benefit accruing to our country would not be a little. How careless the Christian believers are in judging the importance of matters! The present Japan is an active country, busy in gaining intellectual acquirements, and therefore no time ought to be allowed to be wasted on any useless affairs. Our learned men should therefore be satisfied with the existing state of our morality, and direct their attention towards gaining intellectual power. We will simply suggest to the converts to Christianity that they must not in the future be wholly taken up by the vigorous precepts of the Christian religion to the detriment of more important matters conducive to the welfare of our country."

MOTHER.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M. D.

Mother, I dreamed when sterner age
Were on apace advancing,
And all things else enhancing,
Thy name could then no more engage,
As when in boyhood's longing
I gazed on others thronging,
And would with them tread manhood's stage.

How oft, when borne in youthful glee,
Whence thou hadst fain withholden,
When others would embolden
To plunge in scenes I would but flee,
How oft hath thy protection
Then held me from defection
In whispering "thou still lovest me."

Time since hath flown, and deep thy name
Hath graven on endearance,
No more of vain appearance,
But like the well-fed living flame,
It burns yet brighter, clearer,
And brings thine image nearer,
To tell me thou art e'er the same.

When at the loved ancestral dome,
I bade adieu in sorrow,
Fondly I saw a morrow,
When I again as then might come,
And own thy smile, my mother,
Which beams not in another,
As in my own, my childhood's home.

And now, while from this hallowed spot,
Beset by thousand dangers,
I wander forth 'mid strangers,
To seek with them life's pending lot,
It is thine own assurance,
That bids me in endurance,
Be up and on disheartened not.

I go—the conflict is begun—
In manhood's sacred calling;
With foemen thick appalling,
Life's noble conquest must be won;
I go, for though none other,
I know that thou, my mother,
E'er prayest for thine absent son.

Yet soon I know thou must remove,
Must close thine earthly mission,
And go to own fruition
Amid the glorified above;
But can thy kindness perish;
Can memory cease to cherish
Mementoes of thy tender love?

No never till this heart succumb,
And cease in death its beating,
Shall thy maternal greeting,
Which gave in youth its charm to home,
From memory be discarded,
Be less in love regarded,
Till my departure too shall come.

GOD'S SPARROWS.

A Christian woman was visiting among the poor in London one cold winter's day. She was trying to open the door of a third story in a wretched-looking house, when she heard a little voice inside say, "Pull the string up high." She looked up and saw a string. She pulled it, when it lifted the latch, and the door opened into a room where she found two little half-naked children all alone. They looked cold and hungry.

"Do you take care of yourselves, little ones?" said the woman. "No, ma'am; God takes care of us," replied the elder of the children.

"You have no fire on this cold day. Are you not very cold?" "Oh! when we are very cold we creep under the quilt, and I put my arms round Tommy, and he puts his arms round me, and then we say, 'Now I lay me down to sleep; I'll sing my Maker's praise'—and then we get warm," said the little girl.

"And what do you have to eat, pray?" asked the visiter. "When granny comes home she brings us something. Granny says we are God's sparrows, and He has enough for us; and so we say, 'Our Father' and 'daily bread' every day. God is our Father."

Tears came into the eyes of this good woman. She had sometimes felt afraid that she might be left to starve: but these little "sparrows," perched alone in that cold upper room, taught her a sweet lesson of trust in the power of God which she felt that she could not forget.

THE HAPPY WIFE.

There is always a great deal of good advice floating around the world for those who need it. The difficulty is to bring the advice and the needing person together at the proper moment, that the one may take hold of the other in a way that will do the most good. Few people are so much in need of good counsel probably as the man who is selecting a wife, and a large number are doing this all the time. For the benefit of this ambitious and hopeful class some philanthropist has set afloat some excellent suggestions about seeking women who are happy in preference to those who have only beauty, or talent, or style. The complete soundness of the advice may be understood from the philosophical summary that "the sweetest wives are those who possess the magic secret of being happy under any and every circumstance."

A man may marry a happy woman; it is easy indeed to do that, because nearly every woman has the good sense to be happy at marriage, and she has a vague sort of idea, doubtless, that she will always be the same. But she will not, because no human being ever has been, and in half a dozen cases out of twelve, she will have a good cry and threaten to go back to her mamma before the honeymoon is half over.

When she thought how happy she would be she never contemplated the picture of a husband coming home as cross as a bear, and going to bed without speaking to her; she had never thought of the long evenings when he wouldn't come at all; or his bringing some one home to dinner without warning or preparation; of his awful profanity over so trifling a matter as the gas bill. She had no idea, in fact, that there could be anything but happiness in married life, and she had determined to be happy and to distribute her happiness to those about her. It is not often her fault if she doesn't succeed.

It is impossible to on through life with never a shadow across the path, but there is nothing dangerous in a sorrow that is not nursed and encouraged. The man who cannot turn from the pursuing shadows and threatening clouds of his business life to a heart-giving cheerfulness at home, must, in ninety-nine cases in a hundred, count his human nature a failure; he is a deplorable wretch, indeed, for he has doubtless himself hung his home with clouds, and driven out, not only from his heart, but other hearts, the sunshine of happiness that he ought to have even aided to gild.

Advising a man in search of a wife to select a happy woman is a good enough suggestion on one side, but it may as well be accompanied by a little advice to young women in search of husbands to beware of a man who doesn't know enough about cheerfulness to understand its value in daily life. Such a man would improve the first opportunity to grind the cheerfulness out of his home, to frighten a sunbeam into a shadow, and then wonder what the deuce is the matter. Such is no better than no husband at all; and when you want a husband go find somebody else, somebody who will give you at least some chance to be happy far into the life beyond the honeymoon.—Scottish-American Journal.

THE GREAT FOUNTAIN.

An aged gentleman at a watering place said to a lady, a stranger to him, as she came up to take her usual draught of water, "Have you ever drank at the Great Fountain?" The lady colored, and turned away without replying. The following winter, in another place, he was asked to visit a lady who was dying. As he entered her room, she said, with a smile, "Do you not know me? Do you not recollect asking a woman at the spring last year, "Have you ever drank at the Great Fountain?" "Yes," said he, "I do remember." "Well, sir, I am that person. I thought at that time you were very rude; but your words kept ringing in my ears. I was without peace or rest till I found Christ. I now expect shortly to die, and you, under God, have been the means of my salvation. Be as faithful to others as you have been to me. Never be afraid to talk to strangers on the subject of religion."

REST REQUIRED.

The true worker understands the importance of rest, and rarely overtaxes himself; consequently he can work at any time. Many a man can only work at particular seasons and in particular moods. His mind is like a horse running loose in the pasture, and he cannot always catch it; at least, it will take some time to bring it up and put it into harness. Now it is evident that a man can do nothing in twenty minutes if it takes him half an hour to get his mind at work; but the true worker has his powers always at command. In any odd fifteen minutes he can do a full quarter hour's work. These fragments of time count up in the long run. The gift of work must be accompanied with the gift of resting. To get the most money out of a team of horses not only must they be pushed hard when under harness, but between work hours they must be unharnessed, rubbed down and made most comfortable. Some men manage their minds in so bad a way as to leave the harness on over night. They worry over their work during the intervals of labor so that when they come back to their toil they are half exhausted before they begin. But the noted workers are those who in intervals of toil take things more easily. Such a one, when the work hour is over, drops his task and unharnesses his mind. Then, when called again to his work, he can put his whole strength in it.

FOR GIRLS.

Never marry a man who has only his love for you to recommend him. It is very fascinating, but it does not make the man. If he is not otherwise what he should be you will never be happy. The most perfect man who did not love you should never be your husband. But though marriage without love is terrible, love only will not do. If the man is dishonorable to other men, or mean, or given to any vice, the time will come when you will either loathe him or sink to his level. It is hard to remember, amidst kisses and praises, that there is anything else in the world to be done or thought of but love-making; but the days of life are many, and the husband must be a guide to be trusted—a companion, a friend, as well as a lover. Many a girl has married a man whom she knew to be anything but good, "because he loved her so." And the flame has died out on the hearthstone of home before long, and beside it there has been sitting one that she could never hope would lead her heavenward—or who, if she followed him as a wife should, would guide her steps to perdition. Marriage is a solemn thing—a choice for life; be careful in choosing.

AN ITALIAN LADY'S DYING DISCOVERY.

The necessity of correct spiritual teaching is illustrated by a sad case related by a French minister. A lady lay on her death-bed in a beautiful Italian city. She was a Roman Catholic, and received the last rites of the church. She made confession of her sins to the priest, and received absolution, or, at least, he professed to absolve her. She was not satisfied with a verbal assurance, and requested it to be made in writing. This was done; but even with the document in her hand she did not feel at ease. She wanted something more than a priest's forgiveness, and so, at her request, friends telegraphed to the Pope at Rome, who immediately responded with his verdict of absolution. Then, taking the priest's paper in one hand and the Papal telegram in the other, she declared she felt safe, and could defy all the evil spirits of hell on the one hand and even God Himself upon the other. The Papal absolution was the stronghold of her faith, but, alas! mortal man cannot speak the word of life to immortal souls, and just before she died she evidently realized the vanity and fallacy of her misplaced confidence. She tore the papers of absolution, the supposed passports to heaven, into pieces, and crying, "Sonno perduta!" ("I am lost!") died in hopeless despair.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From Christian Intelligencer:

The mission property of the United Presbyterian Church destroyed in the Kaffir war is valued at $19,500. This sum is exclusive of the furniture and libraries of several missionaries.

The Wesleyan Methodist Thanksgiving Fund movement continues to make satisfactory progress. The total amount now promised exceeds $400,000, upwards of $250,000 of which have been contributed in the two London districts.

In the German Baptist Union, comprising Germany, Austria, Denmark, Holland, Switzerland, Poland, Russia, Turkey and Africa, there are now 124 churches, 1,479 members, 1,371 preaching stations, 546 Sunday-school teachers, and 7,280 scholars.

The annual meeting of Mr. Spurgeon's church has just been held, and the statistics show the present total membership to be five thousand one hundred and sixty-six. During the last year three hundred and ninety-four new members were received, and fifty-seven died.

From London Christian Signal:

Mr. H. Richard, M. P., presided at the annual meeting of the Protestant Dissenting Deputies, on Tuesday, at the Memorial Hall. The deputies resolved strenuously to resist any measure for the creation or endowment by the State of a Roman Catholic or any denominational University in Ireland for the support of which national money would be used in the interests of denominational education. Further, that they regard the introduction during the present session of six different bills bearing on the burial laws as conclusive proof that it is widely felt that the grievance under which Nonconformists suffer must be settled without further delay.

A significant fact in connection with the election of M. Jules Grevy to the Presidency of the French Republic is that only one member of the French Episcopate has had the courtesy to congratulate him on his elevation to that honorable position. The solitary prelate who has taken this patriotic and sensible course, is the Archbishop of Avignon. But when Louis Napoleon seated himself on a throne founded upon treachery and bloodshed, the Catholic bishops and clergy were the first to offer him their congratulations. They poured fulsome flatteries into his ears, and were forward to bless even his foulest deeds. All this would doubtless have been repeated now if an enemy of the Republic had been elected to the Presidential chair, instead of M. Grevy.

What is called the "communion wine question" has caused serious division in many congregations in Scotland. Among the Independents and Baptists who settle such matters without external interference, the difficulty has been got over more quietly than among Presbyterians, who cannot act without the sanction of their church courts. In many, perhaps the majority, of the churches of these two denomination unfermented wine has been introduced, the non-abstainers having shown a desire to give way to the wishes of those members who had strong conscientious objections to the use of fermented wine at the Lord's Table. The churches of the Evangelical Union, almost without exception, use unfermented wine at the ordinance, and all their ministers and most of their members are total abstainers. The question has, however, raised a good deal of feeling in Presbyterian churches, chiefly those of the United Presbyterian Church. A congregation was lately formed in Edinburgh, with the sanction of the Presbytery, composed of those who object to fermented wine. Another split has taken place in Motherwell, near Glasgow, and a new United Presbyterian congregation was formed last week, which had called a minister. In Goldingham, Berwickshire, a large party left the United Presbyterian congregation, and have formed themselves into an independent church, in order to have, as they said, "liberty of conscience" as to the kind of wine to be used at the Lord's Supper. The excitement, however, is now believed to be declining throughout the kingdom on this matter, and attempts are being made to settle the question in congregations so as to avoid division.

From London Weekly Review:

Besides £100 left to the infirmary at Kilmarnock, Mr. Paterson, Langmuir, has left the following legacies:—United Presbyterian Church and any other church with which it may become united for foreign mission purposes, £500; the National Bible Society of Scotland, £500; the Religious Tract Society of London, £500; the Medical Missionary Society of Edinburgh, £250; London Missionary Society, £500; Market Street Congregational Sunday School in Farnwarth, near Bolton, Lancashire, £100.

PRINCIPAL TULLOCH ON MODERATISM.—Principal Tulloch on Friday evening last, when lecturing to the Edinburgh Philosophical Institution on "The Intellectual and Literary Revival of Scotland in the Eighteenth Century," plunged with considerable warmth into a defence of "The Moderates." "The moderate theology of the moderate clergy of Scotland," maintained the Principal, "was among the most efficient factors in advancing its intellectual, its moral, and its social civilization." He was especially warm against those who had ventilated different opinions, which he characterized as "the sneers of illbred Evangelicalism."

The conduct of Rev. George Bishop which has been severely criticised, as inhuman slaughter has this to say for himself: "Port Hunter, Duke of York Group, Dec. 21, 1878.—We have had troublous times here since you wrote your letter. I daresay you will have heard enough about it, as my conduct in venturing to save the lives of teachers and traders by wiping ont a lot of those cannibals has made no small stir, and it is said in Fiji that I am to be tried for manslaughter. I am not afraid of that trial, come when it may. What we did was a mere simple self-defence; and all the High Commissioners in the world will not prevent my defending myself and teachers from death. The fact is that we did the proper thing, and did it well; it will not want doing again. It is only from people who know nothing about it that the greatest noise will come. Everyone here highly approves, and so do all the Missions in Fiji and elsewhere. The captain of the English man-of-war Sandfly quite justified me and highly approved of our actions; and now, last week, the Ariadne, German ship of war, was here, and made inquiries about it. The consequence was that Captain von Wever sent me a very nice letter of thanks, and enclosed copy of a special dispatch to the German Government, in which he speaks of us in the highest terms, and asks the Government to send through the English Government their thanks to me for saving the lives of the Germans here."

"A. B. cum laude" is to be a Harvard degree for a certain degree of scholarship.

Four 100-ton guns have been purchased from Sir William Armstrong and Co., to be used in the defence of Malta and Gibraltar, two to each, and the price paid for each gun is said to be £16,200. They will be mounted behind earthworks, and their loading can be effected under cover by manual power. Thus we devote a half-million of precious money in these impoverished times for four instruments of war. Compare with the funds raised in a year by all our English churches for missionary efforts, and the cost of these four guns greatly exceeds that total!

The Belgian Royal Castle of Tervueren, in which the widow of the late Emperor of Mexico resided, has been completely destroyed by fire. The Empress was safely conducted to the Palace of Lacken.

There are now in the British army 130,496 English soldiers, of whom 5,788 are commissioned officers; 40,507 Irish soldiers, of whom 1,386 are commissioned officers; and 15,020 Scotch soldiers, of whom 785 are commissioned officers. Of 100 British soldiers 70.30 are English, 21.60 are Irish and 8.09 are Scotch. Of 100 British officers 72.72 are English, 17.41 are Irish and 9.86 Scotch. Of 100 Scotch soldiers 5.22 are officers, of 100 English soldiers 4.43 are officers, and of 100 Irish soldiers 3.42 are officers.

Texas expends from $150,000 to $200,000 annually to support a battalion of State troops for the protection of its frontier.

The Boston Post announces that the American Cable Company of New York has closed a contract which gives it the exclusive right to an invention by means of which it can send twenty messages of ten words each per minute, and at a moderate expense telegraph the entire contents of a newspaper so that it can be published simultaneously everywhere.

The Polar expedition projected by James Gordon Bennett is one of considerable importance. Lieut. DeLong, who has been placed in charge of it, proposes to take an entirely new route through Behring's Strait.

The Bethel at Honolulu, which is still in charge of the Rev. Mr. Damon, has become an important centre for the religious efforts which are put forth for the benefit of the Chinese. Last year 4,000 Chinese laborers landed on the Sandwich Islands. Regular Sunday services are held in the Chinese language at the Bethel.

PIETY AND POLITICS.

Are they irreconcilable? They ought not to be. For politics ought to signify the discussion of the best methods of doing that which is honest, wise and just for the promotion of a country's well-being. And therefore the moral principles of our holy religion ought to control everything political. But the question, are piety and politics then irreconcileable, was painfully thrust forward by reading a recent article in a political paper upon the probable candidate of one of the political parties for the Presidency. Of one of the most distinguished and chivalrous men and Senators of this country—an upright and honest man, above tricks and frauds—this writer says he will hardly be the candidate, "for he is becoming entirely too starchy and saintly for politics, and if he keeps on progressing in his present line of ethical refinement there will soon be no place fit for him outside the bosom of the Church." The bosom of the Church" ought to be a good place for any sinful man, for God and pardon and eternal life are there and ordinarily there alone. We sincerely hope that the distinguished gentleman criticised—if he is not already in that safe haven—and his critic may both soon know the blessedness of being in Christ's fold—"the bosom of the Church."

What is that political life worth that is not governed by truth? And where is eternal truth revealed except in God's Word, in God's Church? What are political principles worth that have not their life, force and blessing in their moral power and justice? And in a land of Gospel light shall we argue that the foundation of all righteous legislation and true moral power exists outside of Divine Revelation, of which the Church is born, and whose spirit it is the Church's mission to foster and propagate? Alas! many to-day ignore these fundamental truths, and divorce utterly piety and politics. The latter degenerates into a "trade," a method of sharp practice for personal aggrandisement. Political life becomes, with multitudes, impure life. Whiskey, money, plots, trickery, cipher telegrams and all manner of twisting and turning are the common implements of the wicked scramble for office and pelf. The Christian statesman is what we want to-day. God give us the reign of piety and politics in our national councils! Whoever may be our next President, of whatever party, we can make no better wish for him or our land than that he may be a truly pious politician, a God-fearing statesman!

COLUMBIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

What we wrote last week of the need of ministers of the Gospel thoroughly furnished for their work, and of Union Seminary as a school of the prophets amply provided with instructors and appliances for their equipment will apply to Columbia Seminary as well. From the catalogue of the latter now before us we gather some facts which will no doubt prove pleasant as reminiscences at least to the alumni of the Seminary, and not uninteresting as information to others.

The first professor of Ecclesiastical History and Church Polity, was Rev. Dr. Thomas Goulding (since deceased) who entered upon his duties in 1828. Rev. Dr. George Howe has been continuously occupying the chair of Biblical Literature since 1831, a period of nearly half a century. Dr. Woodrow, Perkins Professor of Natural Science in connection with Revelation comes next in point of continuous service his term being eighteen years. Dr. Adger who retired in 1874 had been Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Church Polity seventeen years. Dr. Girardeau now fills the chair of Didactic and Polemic Theology, of which Dr. Thornwell was the first occupant, and which Dr. Plumer vacated in 1875 to assume the Professorship of Pastoral, Casuistic, and Historic Theology. Of former professors in the institution, beside Dr. Goulding mentioned above and Dr. Thornwell, Dr. A. W. Leland and Dr. Charles Colcock Jones are deceased, and Dr. Adger, Dr. J. R. Wilson, Dr. McGill, and Dr. Palmer are serving the Church in other spheres. Columbia has furnished seventeen missionaries to the Church. Her alumni are classified as from twenty-three States of the Union—from Vermont to Texas, and also from Canada, Scotland, Ireland, Hungary and England, and they are now to be found throughout the United States and in Ireland, Scotland, Brazil, Japan, India and China. There are six students in the present Junior class, eighteen in the Middle class, four in the Senior class, and one resident licentiate. Davidson is represented more largely than any other preparatory college, viz: by fifteen students. Thirteen students are from South Carolina, and from North Carolina three. The Library of the College now embraces 18,923 volumes. The private libraries of the Professors are large and valuable. The University Library is also by courtesy, placed at the service of the Professors.

THE RIGHT OF BURIAL.

It is sad enough to read of the unchristian refusal of the English Episcopal Church to allow "Nonconformists" to be buried in their parish graveyards, without the performance of the burial service of the Church of England. These cemeteries originally belonged to the Papal Church, but were confiscated by the State at the Reformation, and under the union of Church and State were devoted to the service of the whole parish. Families for generations have been laid there. But a great change has come over ecclesiastical affairs, and the great body of English people are no longer members of the National Church. But the grounds were national property, and for the nation's use, and people like to be laid by their fathers in death. Many godly people seriously object to being forced to have read over their graves a service which they regard Popish in tendency, and by rectors half way in Rome. So the matter is up for debate and legislation in Parliament. The Christian Signal of London says:

"It is evidently well understood by both political parties in the Legislature that the present state of the law in reference to burials in parish graveyards is for the time being the skirmishing ground of the great battle of disestablishment. It is well chosen by the opponents of the State Church. There is clearly a grievance, and in some quarters a very heavy one. It is hard that parishioners, who have lived peaceably as neighbors, have traded together and enjoyed each other's society during life, with mutual respect for each others' religious opinions, cannot be buried in the same graveyard without a religious ceremony being imposed upon the survivors which, in one case, is disapproved. Liberty is ever dear to the English people, and it is to them a grievance to be denied the right, especially at such a solemn time, of having any minister to perform the burial service except the State appointed clergyman. This fact stands entirely apart from all considerations as to the excellence of the Episcopal service or character of the clergyman. It is the compulsion that is abhorred."

Quite a number of bills have been introduced into the English House of Commons for the settlement of this question. Some are willing for a compromise, but High Churchmen are very arrogant and refuse to yield a hair's breadth. To allow a Dissenter in the churchyard would be to encourage his demand to enter the Church. Poor, silly creatures, who stand ready, in many cases, to worship a wafer as God, and to adore a woman, and who remain deceitfully in the Established Church for a living, and yet dread to have a godly man in their pulpit! But many Nonconformists are equally determined not to submit longer to the injustice of the refusal of burial by their kindred, and to yield to no compromise. So the battle is joined, and practically disestablishment may be the issue, and that measure—that must eventually come—may be precipitated on the lordly Church.

REV. JAMES M. ANDERSON.

Our exchanges state that Rev. J. M. Anderson of Mebaneville lies dangerously ill at home. The brother has spent a long life in faithful service, but the very many by whom he is beloved will ardently cherish the hope that many years of usefulness here are yet to be his.

The above is returned to us from the printers that we may add the intelligence received as below:

MEBANEVILLE, N. C., March 31, '79.

DEAR SIR:—Rev. James Monroe Anderson, pastor, of the Mebaneville church died Sunday 30th. A suitable sketch will be prepared. Yours truly, R. BINGHAM.

Our acquaintance with the brother who has gone to his rest, dates from the last meeting of the Synod of North Carolina, and may be said to embrace the few hours we were together as room-mates on that occasion. We never met any one whose voice and manner more surely told of a spirit, humble, gentle, tender, loving, Christ-like; and since it has been no mystery to us, that all who knew him well, and especially the alumni of Davidson College, whom he at one time taught, loved him most ardently.

VALUABLE BOOKS.

We have before us two books just issued from the press of Mess. D. Appleton & Co., of New York city.

The "Fairy Land of Science" is a collection of ten lectures delivered in London by Arabella B. Buckley. The author claims originality for the first lecture only, which treats of 'how to enter, how to use and how and how to enjoy the Fairy Land of Science.' The lectures one and all were prepared for young people and are specially adapted to them in simplicity of style and in the selection and detail of information; but older persons will find them interesting, particularly those whose opportunities have not permitted studies in natural science. The illustrations are very appropriate. We give a few of the contents: Sunbeams and the Work they Do; A Drop of Water on its Travels; The Voices of Nature and How we Hear Them; The Two Great Sculptors—Water and Ice.

"Ocean Wonder: a Companion for the Seaside," is a book which every one might very well enjoy at home or abroad, but especially on the seashore among the creatures of nature of which it treats. The author, W. E. Damon, says in his preface, "my purpose is not only to describe the organic features and modes of life of these creatures, in their native ocean and river houses, but also to give careful and practical instruction as to where and how many of them may be procured and preserved in parlor and public aquaria."

We consider the works valuable though they are not costly. We regret that the publishers have not informed us of their price.

The books are 8 vo. about 240 pp. and well put up in cloth binding, green and gilt, making a very suitable ornament for the parlor table.

We devote so much space to this subject because we believe that it is most desirable to supplant with what is really moral and instructive, the trash—worthless or worse—which is flooding our land.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

The British people, with that unanimity so creditable to them in such emergencies, are united in sustaining the government in its determination to prosecute the war in South Africa vigorously. The situation of the British troops is exceedingly critical. Col. Pearson with a small force is at Ekowe awaiting reinforcements. The place is considered impregnable to assault, but the supply of provisions, it was feared, might be inadequate to a long seige. Later news, indeed, states that Col. Pearson, in command, had been attacked in his entrenchment and had repulsed the Zulu Chief, inflicting heavy loss and driving him back some distance; further that Col. Pearson had burnt the military kraal of Cetewayo the Zulu chief. The British force only numbers about 1,200 men, and the difficulties of the situation are greatly enhanced by the open revolt of the Basutos, occupying Caffraria, a British province which was annexed to Cape Colony in 1871. The Basutos number 130,000 and occupy the territory west of Natal which is, saving Orange Free State, yet further west, and the population of which is decidedly friendly, the only province not hostile to the Queen's government. Zululand where the disaffection first culminated in open resistance, lies north and northeast of Natal. The Transvaal republic lies to the west of Zulu. Its chief is said to have formed an alliance with the Zulus. The ultimate outcome is not doubtful, but the first reverse to the British arms at Isandula was most serious to the English and, as in all such cases, encouraging to the savages. At Isandula over nine hundred British soldiers were killed; a greater loss than the British sustained at the battle of Alma in the Crimea, or British and French combined at the battle of Inkermann. The steamers Ontario and Borussia have been chartered by the British government, the former to take 500 mules from the United States, and the latter to embark cavalry for the seat of war.

What may be the political results of the war is not yet apparent, but that practically, if not actually, Zululand will become a British province is hardly doubtful.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The Louisville Presbyterian is to be merged in the St. Louis Presbyterian. This is owing to withdrawal of one of the editors—Dr. Stuart Robinson we believe. Dr. Robinson will not entirely cease to write. This the readers of the former paper will be glad to know, for Dr. R's. editorials were always marked by timeliness, point and power.

Our correspondents whose articles appear on our first page do not of course expect replies to their interrogations. The questions are really answered in the asking, and we thank our friends for the very satisfactory manner in which they have discussed the subjects in hand.

Queen Victoria is said to have remarked: "I am Queen of Great Britain and Empress of India," said Victoria the other morning, "but I have not power enough to make one of my servants put coal on the fire, if she has been hired to look after the bed chambers."

So our Southern ladies may comfort themselves, that they are not alone in their trials.

While persons are casting about here and yon for special persons to come and bring God's Holy Spirit with them, is it not well for us to remember that the Father will surely give His Holy Spirit to them that ask Him? that salvation comes direct from God to the sinner? that there is but "one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus"? that the greatest gift of God to man can be had for the asking? The offer is absolute as to individuals. There is no exception. The king in his robes of splendor and the beggar in his rags, the purest of earthly characters and the vilest of mankind, stand alike as to the terms of salvation.

It is just this: "Ask and ye shall receive." "Whosoever will let him take of the water of life freely."

Patrick Macnamara, who was put on his trial three times for the murder of Patrick Kearney, at Crusheen, county Clare, was released on Friday, in compliance with a memorial, on condition of his leaving the country and proceeding to the United States. His expenses to America will be paid by the Crown. —London Review.

The Methodist Conferences of this region are beginning to consider in good earnest the subject of a minister's legal claim for salary. Several of these Conferences will make this one of the subjects for discussion at the meetings to be held in April. Under the present Methodist regulations it is considered that a minister does wrong in using legal measures to collect his salary, no matter how remiss his congregation may be in paying him.—New York Sun.

Not long since a Methodist minister sued his church for the amount of salary due him, and the claim held good in law. Hence the stir.

The animus of the Northern secular press is very apparent in the manner in which they are dealing with the Brooklyn Presbytery. No abuse or ridicule was too vehement for Dr. Talmage but a few weeks ago. Why? Dr. Talmage was a minister of religion. Now that the Presbytery arraigns Dr. T. for the very things they condemned it is ridiculed and censured most unsparingly. Why? They can best serve the devil by so doing.

The Passion play, which is so popular at Ober-Ammergau was essayed in London but stopped promptly by the authorities. The play is now being acted in San Francisco. It is said to be treated with outward respect, yet it is denounced, and justly so, as insulting to a Christian community. From our point of view it is hardly short of blasphemous. Ober-Ammergau is a small village in Bavaria, more celebrated for this play than for aught else. The play representing the passion of Christ is performed decennially on twelve consecutive Sundays. There are 350 actors and the orchestra consists of 80 members. The performances last several hours, and as they are always in the summer season large crowds from foreign countries attend, there being sometimes as many as 5,000 or 6,000 spectators, which is greatly more than the home population of the village. In 1634 a vow was made by the inhabitants, that in the event of their escaping the vow that then prevailed, the passion play should be acted every ten years. With the Tyrolese then it is a religious service and performed with the deepest solemnity.

Quite a new departure is the proposition made in England to ordain as deacons in the Church of England, business men who will support themselves by their own exertions while they perform the charitable and secular work of the Church. But more surprising still, Rev. J. Hyatt Smith, an open-communion Baptist, performed the rite of baptism in this wise: An Episcopal patient in a Roman Catholic hospital in Brooklyn desired to be baptized. By consent of the Sisters in charge, Mr. Smith was sent for and baptized the patient according to the ritual of the Protestant Episcopal church by sprinkling. It is proper to say that immersion, in cold water at least would have been instant death. The statement comes from a New York paper, but sounds almost incredible. The officiating minister is amenable to his own congregation only, having been disfellowshipped by the close communion wing of the Baptist denomination.

It has been quite common for Roman Catholic papers to represent the labors of the missionaries of their Church as far more fruitful of results than those of Protestant missionaries, and their Church itself as more liberal in its contributions for the conversion of the heathen. Some secular journals have also expressed similar opinions. Directly the opposite is the conclusion to which, after examination and comparison, Dean Stanley has been brought, who says: "The missions of the Jesuits and of the Romish Church over the whole world have, on the whole, left but feeble traces: and the contributions of the whole Roman Church at this moment to the missionary cause do not amount to one-third of what is contributed by the Protestant communions of Great Britain alone." When to these contributions are added those of Protestant Churches on the Continent of Europe and in the United States, the disparity will be found still greater. And where, in all the history of Roman Catholic missions, can we find such a trophy for the cross as Madagascar or the Sandwich Islands?—Pittsburg Banner.

Ingersoll, the blatant infidel and atheist, has been lecturing in Chicago, taking as his subject the "Mistakes of Moses." The Interior gives some quotations from it which are enough to make one shudder at the blasphemous temerity of the wretch:

The "eloquence and the brilliant satire" were the coarsest and most brutal ridicule of a religious faith which is inexpressibly sacred and hopeful to that part of the community upon which the prosperity, order, safety and morality of the city and the country depend. We cannot quote much from such a lecture, but to give an idea will say that it was full of such expressions as this: "In India they believe in one god with three heads. In Chicago they believe in three gods with one head." He represented God as "standing with a rib in his hand thinking whether he had better make a blonde or brunette." In regard to the demand of the human soul for spiritual and religious hope and faith and love, and the question what he had to substitute for it, he represented Christians as saying: "What do you propose to give us in place of that angel? We can't afford to trade off an angel of that sort for nothing. [Great laughter.]" He represented a robber and thief as going unrepentant to heaven, and a just and true man as being sent to hell, denounced the atonement of Christ, and interlarded his coarse blasphemies with scraps of moralizing which he himself had stolen from the Bible, but which he had not sufficient honesty to credit the Book from which he had plagiarized it.

The Sunday law was enforced lately in New York in the stoppage of a walking match in which two or three women were engaged. It is about time for a new "craze." The present, it is to be hoped, has about spent itself. In regard to the pedestrian contest in New York city which excited so much interest, the Interior says:

The country is at least $200,000 poorer in money for that walking match in New York, and has only a damaged condition of public morals to show for it.

The defalcation of Archbishop Purcell has alarmed Archbishop Wood of the Roman Catholic diocese of Philadelphia. He calls upon those who have money in his hands to come and get it. The property of his Archdiocese amounts to $12,000,000 and the indebtedness to $600,000.

If secular papers in North Carolina or elsewhere, publishing original items of news concerning the Presbyterian church, will send us marked copies, they will oblige us and we will take pleasure in giving them due credit. We ask this to insure that such items are not overlooked.

PITTSBORO CHURCH.

We are enjoying a precious season of grace. The Holy Spirit has descended upon us and revived us. The whole church is animated with increased zeal and earnestness. Five persons have already professed faith in Christ and others are awakened. Bro. W. S. Lacy has been with us and the messages he delivered were superlatively precious.

SMITHVILLE, N. C., March 23, 1879.

DEAR BROTHER:—Morning dawned darkly at this place and old "Sol" hid his face behind the clouds until about 9 A. M., when the clouds cleared away, all nature revived and the day was made beautiful by sunshine. The notes of the song birds upon the soft still air, mingled with the sweet tones of the church bells calling the people to serve God in the Sanctuary.

As there is no Presbyterian church in this place my wife and I, with our children, went to the Methodist church, on entering it was evident from preparations that had been made that it was "communion day." I felt like the Psalmist of old, "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go into the house of the Lord," for since my conversion seven years since, I have never turned my face on the Lord's table and would not for all the world contains.

After a very excellent sermon appropriate for the occasion, was preached by the Rev. H. F. Wiley, from 1 Cor. xi. :24, 25, he, assisted by the Rev. Wm. Ferguson administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper to about fifty communicants. The service was solemn and impressive and was greatly enjoyed by the communicants; and many who did not commune, sat in respectful silence during the services.

The Methodist church here is presided over by the Rev. H. F. Wiley, a gentleman who serves the Lord with fervency and zeal, and one who is well calculated to build up his church in this little town which has been so long without a resident preacher, and we as a people feel thankful to our Heavenly Father that Brother Wiley has been sent to live among us and teach us the way of the Lord.

A SURPRISE.

DEAR BRO. MCLAURIN:—While other brethren are telling the world of the kindness of the people whom they serve, please allow me a small space in your paper to return my sincere thanks to friends from the Beth Car, Brown Marsh and Elizabethtown congregations for a pounding which they gave me and mine a few weeks ago. One pleasant feature of this surprise was the presence of members of the Methodist and Baptist churches, showing that there is a unity of spirit while we may differ outwardly as denominations. This manner of expressing good-will on the part of my people is not altogether new to me. South River did this once since the commencement of my labors among them. In giving publicity to these surprises, I cannot forget those in my charge who all along help their minister with what good brother Walter W. Pharr calls "stray shots."

Fraternally yours,
A. MCFADYEN.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The pamphlet on Fish Culture in North Carolina—a report by Mr. S. G. Worth of the operations in the propagation of fish under his immediate superintendence and under the auspices of the Department of Agriculture—has been in hand some time. Previous notice would seem due to the courtesy to us in furnishing what is really a very interesting treatise on the modes of fish culture and prospective benefits to be derived from it, but by delay we have been enabled to read the report carefully, and rise from its perusal with more knowledge of, and more interest in, the subject than we had supposed could be acquired from so brief a sketch of operations. Mr. Worth has certainly presented the matter in a manner sufficiently detailed to give all necessary information, and yet in so concise a form as to insure perusal. Fish culture is, we are persuaded, a branch of industry which should be under the fostering care of the State, and it might, to a more limited extent of course, profitably engage the attention of private individuals.

North Carolina Medical Journal, Thos. F. Wood, M. D., Wilmington, and M. J. DeRosset, M. D., New York city, editors. A very valuable publication. Every physician who would keep with the times by a constant acquisition of knowledge of diseases in their ever-varying manifestations, and every one who desires to avail himself of improved modes of treatment adopted by the profession, ought certainly to take this magazine. We can only name the departments, which are rich with medical instruction: Original Communications; Selected Papers; Correspondence; Editorial; Reviews and Book Notices; Current Literature; Medical Annotations; Obituary. $3 a year.

Sunday Afternoon for April at hand. We must accord to this magazine a freshness and piquancy in its articles that will commend it to public patronage. It sometimes trends—putting it very lightly—a little out of the orthodox, but its animus and general tenor are right. Here are some of the contents: The Mormons; Christianity and the State; The Tenement House Question; The Howgate Scheme of Arctic Discovery, &c.; &c. Editor's Table: Mint, Anise and Cummin; College Frands; Our Laws and Our Law-Makers. Literature: Springfield, Mass. $3 a year.

Messrs. Appleton & Co. send us A Thorough Bohemienne, a novel. We must say distinctly that we never find time nor inclination to read such books. The house of Appleton & Co., however, we feel persuaded, would send out nothing damaging in terms to the morals of society.

We thank Mr. B. F. Moore for the Proceedings of the Bar of North Carolina relative to the decease of Hon. Bartholomew Figures Moore, with the addresses delivered on the occasion.

D. Appleton & Co. are republishing "Health Primers," a series, each primer of which is to be the work of a specially competent writer. They are to be brief and simple, yet filled with information suitable for the guidance of grown people. The primer before us is entitled Personal Appearances in Health and Disease, by Sidney Coupland, M. D. It will doubtless prove very instructive.

Wide Awake: Capital for the children, being full of amusing and entertaining pictures and full, too, of just such reading as the juvenile intellect craves. The editor, Ella Farman, evidently is a child-lover; none other could cater as does she to the child instinct. We belong to that fraternity—child-lovers—and always have choice gleams of pleasure in forecasting what the children will say when they seize Wide Awake. Here are a few, and a few only, of the contents: "The Maid of Norway," historical; The Forbes-Doolan Affair; Don Quixote, Jr.; "Poots' Homes," treating of our Southern genius, Paul H. Hayne. $2 a year. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, Mass.

A Good Name a Goodly Heritage. By Mrs. Mary D. R. Boyd, author of Wat Adams, &c. 1879. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." This book narrates a story, the history of a lad, Duncan Croft, as illustrative of this proverb. It teaches the value and power of a good character. The contrast drawn between the careers of Duncan and Gilbert will prove impressive to youthful readers and render a steady and virtuous life attractive. We regret that when the author speaks of Duncan's devotional habits and conversion her language is so very general, and makes not even casual reference to the birth in the heart of exercises of penitence and faith in the redeeming work of Christ, under the power of the Holy Spirit. Integrity of character and moral walk are not religion. Let Christ be in front always in His work and power.

Dancing as a Christian Amusement, by Rev. G. C. Heckman, D. D., President of Hanover College; 18 mo. tract, 36 pages. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. An excellent pointed discussion of a fashion brought forward now prominently, and too often indulged in by professing Christians.

The Boston Book Bulletin: A quarterly eclectic record of American and foreign books. March, 1879. 30c. a year. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, Mass.

The Primary Teachers' Monthly, Mrs. W. F. Crafts, editor. April, 1879. 60c. per annum. Western Sunday School Publishing Co., Chicago, Ill. Besides the usual instructive lesson department, this number gives the Home Department, by Mrs. Miller; Temperance Lesson; Children's Sermon, by Rev. W. F. Crafts; The Teachers' Normal Class, by Miss Merrill, and other pleasant reading.

BOOK OF CHURCH ORDER.

I have disposed of several copies of the Revised Book according to announcement heretofore published and have a few copies still on hand. If any person desires a copy he can have it postage free on sending me his address and fifteen cents in stamps.

Some fourteen months ago Rev. John H. Menges organized Grace Lutheran church, West Philadelphia, with twenty-two members who had formerly belonged to Grace Mission before that enterprise was abandoned, and the chapel rented or sold to the Methodists. Now the church numbers eighty-five members and the average attendance on Sunday service is 325. The Sunday school has grown from 26 to 175 scholars.

Ferguson and Forest read prayers at the opening services and Mr. Stevens preached from Nehemiah 1. The convocation was composed of one presbyter, three deacons, and delegates from fifteen congregations. Three missions and two mission Sunday schools, besides the congregational schools, are in connection with the convocation. Five church buildings have been improved and five begun and are in process of erection. There are 1183 communicants, 38 Sunday school teachers, 517 scholars. The church property is valued at $6080, with debts amounting to $1666 45. The collections for the year were $1485 68. Services held by the ministers 511; baptisms 140; marriages 23; burials 37.—Appeal.

GENERAL.

A new Protestant sect, distinguished, like the Shakers, by physical extravagances, has appeared in Westphalia, the proselytes being mostly women.

The Newsboy's Home of Chicago cares for some 300 gamins, and has just paid off its debt of $2,500.

The Christian people of Springfield, Ohio, have formed a law and order association, to attempt to prohibit the sale of papers, liquors, cigars, &c., on Sunday, and to suppress Sabbath desecration generally.

During a heavy thunder storm at Cairo, Ill., recently, the Roman Catholic Convent in that city was struck by lightning and burned to the ground. No one was injured.

There is in Minnesota a "Catholic Colonization Bureau," which is under the auspices of the Coadjutor-Bishop of St. Paul's. It is the object of this bureau to encourage the planting of Roman Catholic colonies in the State. Four such colonies have been successfully placed since 1876. One, that of Swift county, is organized in two parishes, each with its pastor, church and schools. The farms range from eighty to five hundred acres each, and such township names as St. Michael's, St. Joseph's, St. Francis' attest the ecclesiastical atmosphere which pervades the same. Beyond Swift county lies the colony of Graceville, where, in three months last year, one hundred and seventy-five families were located. The first building up was the church. Around this is now grouped a pretty village, and at least a hundred and fifty settlers' cabins have arisen within a radius of half a dozen miles. In Southwestern Minnesota is a third colony, of St. Adrian, where the bureau controls seventy thousand acres, of which twenty-two thousand have been already sold to settlers. Here the parish priest was on the ground when only three had been built; and there is now a school house, a church, a pastor's house, while a population of one hundred and sixty Catholic families is expected by the coming spring. The fourth and newest of these Minnesota colonies is that of Avoca, just north of St. Adrian, comprising fifty-two thousand acres. The rule in the founding of all these colonies has been that the resident priest and the church should go in with the first settlers, whether they be few or many. The Roman Catholic idea is not our idea, but who shall say that it is failing of its effect? Is not the Church of Rome in the United States laying deep and broad foundations for the future? After all its policy is only that which was followed in a different form by our Pilgrim Fathers at Massachusetts Bay, and it is by no means certain but that the Pilgrims' sons need to revive it in their time.—Christian Union.

We call attention to the advertisement of clothing by Messrs. R. B. Andrews & Co. and commend the prices to attention. Messrs. Andrews & Co. will do the right thing for those who will patronize them.

ECLECTICISMS.

THE LIFE TELLS.

Pacific Methodist:

The highest proof and best illustration of the truth and power of religion is found in the life and character of true Christians. Such a life, firm in integrity, rising above selfishness, strong in the right, patient to bear rough usage, should it come, and full of useful activities—is an argument, the like of that can be felt and appreciated by the world. Creeds and modes of worship may be little understood by the great jury which weighs all pretensions. It may know and care as little about the niceties of theological speculation or about the scientific method of constructing a syllogism in logic. But it is keen-sighted enough in all that concerns consistency of character, and is apt to bring the test of common sense to the judgment of religious pretensions.

IT IS NOT WELL.

Christian Intelligencer:

It is not wise to read a secular paper on the Lord's day. It is especially unwise in those who are very busy and carry many cares through the week. Every industrious man needs one day of rest in every seven, and one of the most important ingredients of that rest is a negative one, namely, the exclusion of the world, its pleasures as well as its pursuits. The secular newspaper, whether a daily or a weekly, brings the world into the Sunday and prevents the rest needed by mind and heart.

GET IN POSITION.

Southern Presbyterian:

If we would move the world, we must get nearer to the right end of the lever where the power resides, nearer to God and his law. The Church is now too near the fulcrum, and its power is lost. It is a false idea that by approximating the views and ways of the world, we gain greater influence. Our effectiveness will always be found to be in proportion to our distance, morally and spiritually, from those whom we would raise from the degradation and ruin of sin.

CHEERFUL CHRISTIANITY.

Congregationalist:

Have a cheerful Christianity. More good has often been done by a happy smile, than by costly gifts of money, or the advice of a score of books. Be sunshine to somebody. You will have cares and perplexities, and crushing sorrows perhaps. There is always One higher than all others to whom you can go, and He never tires of listening. Don't often confide your troubles to others. Each has enough of his own. Let your part of life be to lighten burdens, to give sympathy, a pleasant word of commendation if possible, to be sunny in face and soul.

MEASURE OF FRIENDSHIP.

Sunday School Times:

The true measure of one's friendship is what it secures to one's friend, not what it secures to one's self. What one can give by his friendship, not what he can get by it, shows its real value. He who can ask, What is this friendship worth to me? can never be a friend. He who is a friend will only ask, What is this friendship worth to my friend? Selfishness and friendship are absolutely incompatible.

PREACH CHRIST.

Presbyterian Weekly:

Let us preach Christ—in our pulpits, prayer-meetings, homes, societies and wherever we speak of things that are religious. It sounds learned to talk of Darwin, protoplasm, and the other persons and subjects so rudely thrust upon the attention of Church, but our strength is in letting them alone and preaching the Gospel of Salvation. The power of the cross and blood is greater than our argument and eloquence; and only "the fool saith in his heart, There is no God."

LAYMEN NEEDED.

United Presbyterian:

The desire just now is for more lay service, and this is good, for to every one the Master says, "Son, go to work to-day in my vineyard." But in order to do this work it is not necessary that men shall make themselves professionally and by announcement, lay evangelists, to travel the country and conduct exercises of worship where the regularly appointed ministers of the gospel are properly at their work. They can find enough to employ them at home, acting under the direction of their pastors, holding up their hands and furthering the results of their preaching and influence. If there are those who "cannot but" preach the Gospel in a public way, let them make application for liberty and authority to do so through some regularly constituted church court.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT
OF THE NEXT
General Assembly.

At this time I desire to make known to our Church that the official report of the next Assembly will be published on a plan different from any heretofore adopted. Dissatisfied, as all must have been, with the published report of the last Assembly—the only one at which I have had the honor to act as official stenographer—and dishonored by the marring of work painfully and conscientiously performed, I have obtained from the other members of the Assembly's Committee appointed over the business, their hearty assent to publish the report of the next Assembly upon my own responsibility; and thus freed from many restrictions by parties exempt from liability to the Assembly, and from a method which prevented me from making my last report as complete as I desired, I hope by a plan of my own, not only to satisfy my own judgment and conscience, but to provide the Church with (what it has never enjoyed) prompt intelligence of the proceedings, and a complete verbatim report of the debates of our next Assembly. Details will be published in due time. G. L. WOLFE.

FOR THE FAMILY.

The Safeguard.

A baby crept to his father's knee,
And was lifted up and lulled to rest,
Till the blue eyes closed, so tired was he,
And his little head fell peacefully
At ease on the ready shoulder there,
While the baby hand, so soft and fair,
Lay like a shield on his father's breast.

Of old t'was said that when men drew near
To fierce temptation or deadly strife,
And lost their way in a maze of fear,
Or perilled their souls for worldly gear,
By a way unknown an angel hand
Would lead them ont of the dangerous land,
Into the light of a nobler life.

The story is true for the world to-day;
We see no white-robed angels mild;
But out of the dark and perilous way
Where men and women forget to pray,
Into the peace of a purer land
They are led by a gentle, shielding hand,
The hand of a little helpless child.

—Elizabeth W. Denison, in Sunday Afternoon.

Nora and Her Bible.

Little Nora was an Irish child, who lived not many years ago with her mother and two sisters, in a small village in the north of Ireland. Her mother was a widow, and it was with great difficulty she managed to support herself and her three little girls. Nora, being the youngest, could be the most easily spared from home, and her mother sent her to a school near the village, where she learned to read and write, but very little more. One day, when Nora was about ten or twelve years old, it happened that as she was returning from school she met a lady who was speaking to some other children on the road. When Nora came up the lady stopped her, and asked her name. Nora answered politely, and the lady, seeing the book in her hand, asked whether she had been to school.

"Yes, ma'm," said Nora, "I go every day."

"And do you go to Sunday school!" asked the lady.

Nora looked surprised and said, "Oh, no, ma'm, we have no school on Sunday; we play on Sunday."

"But," said the lady, "will you come to me next Sunday morning? I have some pretty pictures to show you. These little girls are coming, and you may ask your mother to let you come, too."

"Thank you, ma'am," said Nora, as she looked up with beaming eyes to the lady. "I will tell mother, and I am sure she will let me come."

So the next Sunday, when the lady entered her little school, she found a group of eager faces awaiting her, and sitting down among them she showed them a pictnre, and told them the story of Joseph and his brethren, and then taught them a verse of a hymn.

Nora came home in great delight to her mother, and told her all she had learned, and all that week she was thinking of what the lady had taught her, and wishing for Sunday, that she might go again.

After Nora and her little companions had attended the Sunday school for some time the lady desired any of them that had Bibles to bring them, and she marked a few verses which they were to learn each week. As some of the children had no Bibles the lady procured some for them, which she told them they might buy at a low price, so any of the children who were able brought their money next day and got their Bibles.

But poor Nora had no Bible, nor had she any money to buy one. She asked her mother, but she said it was hard enough to get clothes for them all, and she had no money to buy books.

So Nora stayed away from school for two or three Sundays, for she said, "I cannot learn like the others unless I have a Bible, and I do not like to tell the lady I have no money to buy one, for that would look like begging."

At last, one Sunday morning, just after the cold weather had set in, Nora saw her mother preparing to go to town.

"What are you going for, mother?" asked Nora.

"Why, indeed, to get something to keep you warmer, child," answered her mother, as she looked at the shivering little girl, who was bending over the small fire, rubbing her hands and her bare feet, which were quite blue with cold. "That old petticoat is all in rags, and I have just got money enough here for the eggs I sold yesterday to buy you a new one, and you will be glad of it, I'm sure, won't you, dear?" added the mother.

"Why, yes, mother," said little Nora, "but—" and here she stopped, and her mother was surprised to see the child's eyes filled with tears.

"But what? why, what ails you, child?" said the mother, coming close to her, "won't you be glad of the petticoat? You know I have not enough money to buy you a frock; was that what you wanted?"

"No, mother dear, said Nora, looking up beseechingly, "but if you would give me the money for the Bible, and never mind the petticoat."

"Oh, nonsense, child!" said her mother, "look at the snow on the ground, and you with nothing but that old rag of a petticoat; you'd catch your death of cold. You can do without the Bible better."

"Oh, no, mother, I can't. I want to go back to school; and I want to read the Bible to you, too. Do let me have it, and I will patch up my old petticoat, and you will see it will do for me for a time very well."

The mother hesitated for a moment. "I don't like to refuse you, as you wish so much for the Bible," she said, "but I am afraid, my dear Nora will be perished without her new petticoat; and remember, if I give you the money you must not ask me afterwards for the petticoat, for I can't give you both."

"No, mother, I'll never say a word about the petticoat if you let me have the Bible," said Nora, looking up brightly.

So her mother gave her the money she wanted, and Nora felt as happy as a queen, and when her mother was gone, she sat down and began to patch her old petticoat, which was now to last her all through the winter.

Early next morning, with a merry face, Nora rose, and in spite of the snow which still covered the ground she started for her school, which was two miles off. "The Bible must be a wonderful book," said her mother, when she saw how anxious the little girl was for it. "I will let her read it to us of an evening."

When school was over Nora ran home as fast as she could, and bounding into the cottage she laid her treasure on her mother's knees, saying, "See there, mother, I have got it; isn't it a beauty? and you can't think what beautiful things are in it. You will let me read it to you, won't you?"

"Yes, dear, I will," said the mother, "for I want to know what it is all about that makes you so fond of it."

That evening, sitting round the fire, Nora began to read, and so much was the mother interested that it was late before they closed the book and retired to rest.

Next evening, when the elder girls had finished their work and had sat down to their knitting, on one side of the fire, and the mother with her spinning wheel was seated opposite, Nora said, "May I read you some more, mother?"

"Do, dear," said her mother, "I like that book."

So Nora brought her Bible again, and by the bright blaze of the cheerful turf fire she continued her reading again till a late hour hour.

"Girls," said the mother, when she had ended, "I wish you could read like Nora." She looked at her two eldest girls as she spoke.

"I wish we could, mother," said the eldest; "but you can't spare us from home, can you?"

"Not both together," said the mother; "but I think you might go day about till you can read. Nora is big enough now to help me at home, and she can stay at home when I want her."

The girls were delighted, for the interest they felt in the Bible made them wish they, too, could read. So they went to school, and by diligence at school, together with Nora's help in the evening, they soon learned to read; so that before the next winter set in they all three were able to attend the Sunday-school.

Nora never complained of the cold after she made the choice which we have narrated. But even in outward things she was no loser. Some one told the teacher of Nora's self-denial for the sake of getting the Bible, and the teacher told a kind lady, who sent her a present of warmer and better clothing than her mother could have afforded to buy.

The rest of this simple and true story is soon told. Nora was much happier now, with her Bible, than ever she had been before; and what a joy it was to her to find that that blessed book brought peace and joy to her mother's heart, who, about three years later, breathed her last in Nora's arms, rejoicing in the hope set before her in the gospel.

Nora and her sisters still live in the same village, where they now have a little school, and teach other children to read and love the blessed word which gave such joy to them.

Oh, that all little children who read this story may learn to love their Bibles like little Nora, the Irish girl!—Canada Presbyterian.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Moon.

HOW IT LOOKS AS SEEN THROUGH A TELESCOPE.

A Rochester journalist, who visited Professor Swift the other evening, and had a view of the moon, says:

"The telescope, with a power of thirty-six diameters, was turned upon the moon. At first the flood of light was blinding, and the view but cursory. The moon looked like a shield of embossed silver—the shield of Achilles—hung by his goddess mother in the azure of the heavens. Professor Swift looked over the field, and noted as he looked at many of the interesting points, and suggested that we follow the sunrise on the moon. On the moon the dawn advanced at the rate of ten miles an hour, lighting up new fields, and furnishing to him an ever changing panorama. Still, there is naught but desolation, yawning craters, and sharp peaks of volcanic mountains, and circular walls with perpendicular sides that surround deep pits. The moon is dead to all appearance—burned out with volcanic fires. No water laves the desolate and rugged shores of its great sea bottoms. But in the gray plains, where some astronomers think an ocean once spread, craters are seen with perpendicular walls.

"The gray plains can be seen with the naked eye, forming what is called "the man in the moon," on a map like the Eastern Continent. Under the telescope we could trace what seemed to be shore lines on the borders of this plain. On closer inspection, instead of wave-washed sand, these lines appeared to be but rounded steps formed by successive lava-bursts spreading over the plain and marking, by the lessening flow, the gradual exhaustion of the volcanic force. From one of the largest craters rises three volcanic cones, the summits of which are tipped with sunlight before the floor of the crater is lighted. In another crater two cones arise. From the larger craters rays spread out, as though the volcanic force cracked the firm crust in its upheaval, injecting through the broken surface ridges of dazzling white lava, that spread out like the arms of cuttlefish, covering a vast surface.

"The grandest phenomena are to be observed by following the sun on the moon. The advancing dawn forms a ragged crescent line upon the surface still in darkness. The sun's rays pass over dark chasms and low fields, lighting up ragged mountain-tops far in advance. They appear like little islands of light, lying off the coast of an illuminated sea. High mountains and crater walls, near the shore of light, cast deep shadows. The circular rims of crater are illuminated, and shine like rings of silver glittering upon a cushion of darkness. The advancing dawn now lights up the basis of the outlying mountains that but a moment ago showed but a speck of light, and still new mountain-tops are tipped with silver far in advance.

"The sunlight strikes upon the side of a circular wall of a crater, and there is a silver crescent, with a black space between it and the sea of light. Slowly the summit of other portions of the circular walls are lighted up, and then the sunlight invades the depths of the crater, while the shadow of the wall nearest the sun stretches half across the floor of the chasm. Frequently great gaps are broken in the crater walls, and streaks of light stream across the floor. The jagged rocks, in calm, cold beauty, shine and glitter in the fierce, white light. The mountains are mountains of desolation, and the valleys are valleys of silence and death. They are wrinkled with the flow of lava, and torn with upheavals. The moon is dead. No air, no sea, no forest shade or living thing. The moon is a never-failing source of delight. It is also awful in its suggestion of power, and in its loneliness of utter desolation."

Glass Sponges.

The natural history of sponges had, up to the middle of this century, been comparatively neglected. Until 1856, when Lieberkuhn published his treatise on sponges, very little or nothing had been written on the subject. Later, Hæckel did much to determine their exact nature, and it is now universally admitted that sponges form one of the connecting links between the animal and the vegetable kingdom.

Sponges, generally considered, consist of fine porous tissue, covered, during life, with viscid, semi-liquid protoplasm, and are held in shape and strengthened by a more or less rigid skeleton, consisting chiefly of lime or silica. The tissue consists of a very fine network of threads, formed probably by gradual solidification of the threads of protoplasm. The inorganic skeleton is formed by larger and smaller crystals and crystalline threads. In the various families of sponges the quantity of inorganic matter varies greatly; some sponges are nearly devoid of an inorganic skeleton, while other families consist chiefly of lime or silica, the organic tissue being only rudimentarily developed.

As observed in their natural state, sponges are apparently lifeless. When, however, a live sponge is placed in water containing some finely powdered pigment in suspension, it will be noticed that in regular, short intervals water is absorbed through the pores of the tissue and ejected again through larger openings, which are called "oscula." Following up these into the interior, we find them divided into numerous branches, the walls of which are, under the microscope, found to be covered with minute cells, fastened at one end only and oscillating continually. By means of these cells the sponge receives its nourishment.

Sponges with very rigid inorganic skeletons may be divided into two classes—calcareous and silicious—according to whether the skeleton is chiefly composed of lime or silica.

The "sprinkling pot sponge," Euceleptella aspergillum, is generally found in very deep water throughout the Pacific. Specimens were found over fifty years ago, but, as they had to be brought up from depths between 500 and 800 fathoms, they remained very scarce and sold at fabulous prices.

The skeleton is formed by small crystals and long threads of vitreous silica, cemented together, during life, by protoplasm. They are arranged in longitudinal and annular bands so as to form a long curved cylinder, about nine to twelve inches long, the walls of which are about one inch in thickness. The threads and bands are interwoven with the greatest regularity, and when the skeleton is freed from the adhering organic matter, it looks extremely beautiful.

Up to about ten years ago the price of specimens of this sponge was very high. At that time, however, a colony of Euceleptellas was found near the cities of Cebu and Manila, in the East Indies, a depth not exceeding 100 fathoms, and since they have appeared in larger quantities in the market. It is remarkable that, contrary to their habits, these organisms have immigrated into regions to which they were totally unaccustomed. Yet it must be regarded as a greater curiosity that they have been accompanied to their new abode by a few animals living in equally deep water and never met with before at depths less than three or four hundred fathoms. Among these animals is a Phormosoma (water hedgehog) noted for its long spines.

Glass sponges are not confined to tropical regions. They are met with in latitudes as high as the Färöe Islands, where the beautiful Holtenia Carpenteria abounds. Its cup-shaped skeleton is similar in structure to that of the Euceleptella, numerous crystalline needles protrude from the surface of the upper part. Lately some specimens of Holtenia have been found on the coast of Florida.

Glass sponges serve as dwellings for numerous animals, especially crustacea. A small shrimp inhabits the tubes of the Euceleptella, a male and female generally living together. They are shut up as in a prison in their crystalline home, as they are generally too large to pass through the meshes formed by the bundles of crystals. It was formerly believed that these skeletons had actually been built by the shrimps, and we can find no explanation for this curious circumstance other than that the shrimps entered these habitations while very small and became too large to leave them.—Scientific American.

Magazine Editors.

Magazines, like ancient families, must have a beginning somewhere, and there are editors who are determined to do their utmost for the new venture, which at best has to contend with long-established favorites, and who take a positive pleasure in unearthing undeveloped genius. And that is the editor to whom we should pin our faith, had we been rash enough to stake something pecuniarily on his enterprise. When he draws his chair round to the fire after dinner, and lights his post-prandial pipe or cigar, in place of taking up the evening journal, or some trivial periodical, he helps himself to a heavy armful of papers. Lying back luxuriously on his cushions, with vague hopes of possible discoveries to soothe him, he flips his fingers through the pages of manuscript. A sample or two taken almost at random suffices. With a shrug of the shoulders he throws a packet aside, and another and another follows in course, with what the unfortunate rejected would call a hasty judgment; when suddenly he draws himself together. There is something in the set and stiffening of the shoulders that might suggest a pointer drawing in a scent, or a spaniel cocking its ears in a cover while a sparkle of dawning interest lights up his indifferent eyes. There is really something in this young man. That expressive picture by itself bears some evidence of original genius. There is talent in that scene, though it may be crudely conceived, and power in those characters, although they are sketchy and unshapely. The story may have to be revised or rewritten, but it contains the elements of a success, and the promise of a literary career. He sits down on the spur of the moment and dashes off a note. The novice receives it next morning with a throbbing pulse, and is elevated straightway to the seventh heaven. He keeps the momentous appointment in a mingled state of nervous excitement and irrepressible jubilation, for we presume that he has sensitive literary temperament. And in the place of the austere critic, whose approbation he has had the audacity to court, he makes a cordial and sympathetic acquaintance, who mingles advice with hearty encouragement, and welcomes him as a man and a brother into the aspiring guild of the penman.—Blackwood's Magazine.

The Study of Hair in its Medico-Legal Aspect.

In a recent monograph on human hair by M. Jeannot, the author proceeds first to point out the difference which exists between hair in a healthy or diseased state of the body and on the corpse, and then gives certain peculiarities by which we may be enabled to distinguish between human and animal hair, and, finally, shows what varieties are found in hair itself, in reference to its place of growth, and the age and sex of the individual. He then goes on to prove how very important a knowledge of all these facts may be in any case of supposed murder, for in this way hair found either on the instrument with which the crime has been committed, or on the clothes of the victim, may help to identify the murderer. The author afterwards shows by what means it is possible to prove whether hair has been pulled out by violence, cut off or whether it fell out spontaneously. One very interesting point advanced is the assertion maintained by Hoppe-Sayler and Sonnerschein, that arsenic may exist and be traced in the hair of persons who have died from the effects of this poison. The truth of this theory, however, remains to be proved; all the experiments made by Stadel on patients under treatment with arsenic have always given negative results.—Scientific American.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrapper.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

THE BAPTISM OF SAUL.

By the light thrown on the subject of Baptism by the able treatises of Dr. Dale, I am convinced that the usual exposition of Acts 9:18, in reference to the nature of the Baptism Saul is there said to have received, is incorrect.

Supposing that it was ritual Baptism, that is, the outward symbolic ordinance of the visible Church, administered by man—a question which will hereafter be considered—it was not a Baptism into water.

1. Because Baptism into water will certainly produce death by suffocation, if a human being be the subject. A command to baptize a man into water, given in the Greek language, would have been understood by the ancient Greeks as a command to drown him. The Greek word Baptizo invariably means to put an object into a certain state or condition, the nature of the state or condition being indicated by the agent, or by the instrumentality by which the Baptism is expected. And when an object is put into such condition, if it ever gets out, it must be done not only without the will, but contrary to the demands of the baptizo as obedience to which it was put into that condition. The word never means to dip, that is, to put in and take out; although a Baptism may be effected by dipping as well as by drowning or by drinking a large portion of intoxicating liquor. A certain Greek writer, speaking of people crowding into a boat, says they "perished, being baptized by their own weight." Their weight baptized (drowned) them—it did not dip them. The Greek writers constantly speak of ships, sunk to the bottom of the sea, as baptized—they do not mean dipped. A Greek writer speaks of "one saved in a voyage whom it were better to baptize," that is, to perish by drowning—which could not have been done by a dipping.

The word immerse corresponds more nearly than any other English word with the primary meaning of baptizo. Our brethren who call themselves "Baptists," administer the ordinance of Baptism by dipping, while they say that it ought to be administered by immersion. And neither do they dip the whole person, but only the half of his body, after he himself, by walking into the water, has immersed the other half.

The supposition that Saul was baptized into water, (immersed), and that afterwards by his own act, with or without the aid of Ananias, he emerged from the water, passing out of his baptized condition, and thus escaped drowning, is an inference unwarranted by the language of the sacred writer. Saul was not baptized into water. It is a stubborn fact that he lived and preached several years after his Baptism.

Saul was not baptized into water on the occasion alluded to,

2. Because baptism into water or into any other physical element is not once alluded to in the word of God; (the destruction of Pharaoh and his hosts, and of the antediluvians is alluded to indeed, but not by the term Baptism), and in the case under consideration, where water is not even mentioned, it would do violence to the laws of language to infer that Saul was baptized into water, and then, in order to save himself from a martyr's death, put himself outside of the baptized condition into which Ananias had put him, by divine authority, by emerging from the water. (Saul remains to this day in the condition into which he was put on that occasion, as will be shown hereafter.)

There is not a single case in the New Testament where water is alluded to as the element into which a person is baptized. Persons are said to be baptized en (with) water, and en (with) the Holy Ghost, and en (with) fire, and eis (into) repentance, and eis (into) the remission of sins, and eis (into) Moses, and eis (into) Christ, and eis (into) His death, and eis (into) one body, and eis (into) the name of Paul, and eis (into) the name of the Lord Jesus, and eis (into) the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, but never eis (into) water. It is true that the word "en" is and should be generally translated "in," not "into," but it is translated "with" and "by" 383 times in the New Testament, and in these and numerous other places indicates agency or instrumentality; that the word "en" in the sentence "I indeed baptize you en (with) water eis (unto) repentance" (Math. iii: 1) has the sense of with is evident from the fact that the verbal element into which John is said to baptize is declared to be repentance, and from the fact that in the same verse Christ is said to baptize en (with) the Holy Ghost, where the phrase "with the Holy Ghost" unquestionably designates the agency by which the baptism is effected, and not the element into which the person is baptized. It would be contrary to the rules of philology to translate the sentence above quoted thus: "I indeed baptize you (en) in water, (eis) into repentance; but * * He shall baptize you (en) with the Holy Ghost." By such translation "en" is in one case made to indicate the element into which a person is baptized, and in another case in the same sentence it is made the instrument by which the baptism is effected. Undoubtedly "en" indicates in both cases either the element or the agency. If it indicates the element conjointly with repentance in the first case it indicates the element in the second. But Jesus Christ baptizes souls, not in (into) the Holy Ghost, but with the Holy Ghost. Saul's baptism could not be baptism into water;

3. Because the terms used by Luke and Paul in allusion to it (Acts ix: 18, xxii: 16) forbid such a supposition. The passages, literally translated, would read thus: "And forthwith he received sight, and rising was baptized." "Rising, baptize thyself and wash away thy sins." The structure of these sentences forbids the supposition that any act was done, or needed to be done, between the rising and the baptism, such as going out of the room to a bath-house, or a river, or a pool of water. In the thirty-eight cases in the New Testament in which the word "rising" as a participle is directly connected with a verb indicating the act which was performed, it is evident that there was no act needful to be done after, and in addition to, the rising of the agent, in order that he might be in a condition to perform the act designated by the verb. I will quote a few of the cases: Math. ix: 9, "And he rising, followed him;" Math. xxvi: 62, "The high priest rising, said;" Mark x: 50, "And he (the blind man), casting away his garment, rising, came to Jesus;" Luke xv: 18, "I, rising, will go to my father," v. 20, "And he, rising, came to his father;" Acts i: 15, "Peter, rising in the midst of the disciples, said."

If Saul's baptism was not baptism into water, that is to say, if Saul was not on that occasion drowned, and if he did not even go to the water to have half of his body dipped, after he had himself immersed the other half, the question recurs, was he baptized with water, by pouring or sprinkling? Again I answer, No, for the following reasons.

THE ENNOBLING INFLUENCE OF THE BEAUTIFUL IN LIFE.

The oft repeated quotation, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever," stirs the soul when contemplating the glories of nature and art. The artist who has adopted his vocation from a native impulse, who is a sincere worshipper of the beautiful and picturesque, exerts an insensible but not less real influence upon society, although he may not rank among the highest or float on the stream of popularity. "Man," says Carlyle, "it is not thy works which are all mortal, infinitely little, but the spirit thou workest in, I hold, can have continuance." A man with the soul of an artist is a valuable member of society. The inventive designer, the gifted sculptor, the exquisite vocalist, are ministers of humanity, ordained by heaven. They instruct and refine the senses; with images of grace, with smiles of tenderness, and with tones of almost celestial melody, they teach the careless heart to rejoice in the world's attractions. Corregio's Magdalen's prostrate form, serene, sad, yet beautiful face—sinful yet forgiven—teaches us the lesson of repentance, the blessedness of loving much.

We muse on Raphael's "Holy Family" and realize anew the sanctity of maternity. Then our eyes seek the faces of our own little ones, where we imagine just such beautiful innocency is portrayed in each eye, and the desire grows more intense to have their lives spent entirely in the service of the Holy Saviour.

It is said the peculiar roundness of this celebrated pictures owes its origin to the design being drawn first on the head of a cask. Raphael was traveling on foot in Italy, was charmed with the face of a peasant woman holding in her arms a cherub babe, and, on the impulse of the moment, drew the faces on the first available object near him.

Was it not Sir Joshua Reynolds who said the majority of human beings traveled through life with their eyes shut to its beauties; the varying skies above never possessed any charms for them; the most exquisite landscapes were passed unseen; the power and the glory of the Creator in all His works make no impression? They know nothing of the atmosphere above "the smoke and stir of this dim spot, earth," and are truly "of the earth earthy."

When recently listening to the soul-entrancing music of the famous Mendelssohn Quintette Club we dwelt upon the elevating and refining influence of such sweet strains of melody! What a fine lesson is conveyed to the mind to take no note of time but by its benefits, to "watch only for the smiles and neglect the frowns of fate," to compose our lives of bright and happy moments, turning always to the "silver lining of life's clouds."

If music were more cultivated in the home circle, and the evening hours devoted to it, would not our sons find home more attractive, not going beyond to clubs, socials, &c., where they often unawares learn the debasing effects of the wine cup and other vitiating evils?

A good statue is an invaluable memorial—it preserves the features, if not the expression. In gazing at the fine bronze figure of General Stonewall Jackson, in the beautiful Capitol grounds at Richmond, Va., this sainted hero's soul seems to rise before us. We read at a glance the most stirring chronicles of war and genius, of effort and suffering, of glory and death. But memory carries us back to the beautiful, quiet home life, where the ardent piety of his character surpassed all else, and his voice, in earnest, humble, fervent prayer at the daily altar, can never be erased from memory.

We are always inclined to weave more brilliant crowns of laurel around departed genius and think none can vie with the "old masters"—sometimes a mistake. One name, that of Johannes A. Oertel (who lived for a short time in Lenoir, our State, attracted there by the grandeur of our mountain scenery), ought to be appreciated. He was born in the ancient and renowned city of Nuremburg, in Bavaria, in 1823, and at the early age of nine years showed his genius in two memorable pictures, "The Lord's Prayer" and "Ten Commandments," still in his possession. His crayon sketches, cartoons and paintings are all religious and ideal, and most wonderful gems of art. He early studied for the ministry in the Episcopal Church, but as his fine paintings are all Scriptural, he preaches his theology from the canvas more than the pulpit. When we last heard from this gifted man he was living in obscurity in New York, endeavoring to accumulate sufficient to return with his family to Europe, though many of his paintings sold for many thousands of dollars.

Does it not seem the duty of mothers sometimes to step aside from their daily toils to cultivate the flowers by the wayside, adorn their homes in every possible way and make every object, though trivial in value, attractive, to elevate the tastes of the little hearts around them, and inspire them to cultivate the beautiful and true, and in this way illustrate the truth so often forgotten, that "man cannot live by bread alone?"

If a child shows talent for either music or drawing it should be early developed. Many possess gifts which are underrated by even the fond parent's heart:

"Scatter the germs of the beautiful; by the wayside let them fall,
That the rose may spring by the cottage gate, and the vine on the cottage wall
Cover the rough and the rude of earth with a veil of leaves and flowers,
And mark, with the opening bud and cup, the march of summer flowers.

They shall bud and blossom, and bear the fruit, when the endless ages roll;
Plant with the flower of charity the portals of the tomb,
And the fair and the pure about the path of paradise shall bloom."

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

"Science in the abeyance of our spiritual powers attains not to God."—Dr. McLeod Campbell.

To the best of our knowledge and belief the material human body is only a temple or tenement for the more important spiritual part. Science teaches us what God allows us in our human nature to investigate and elucidate for the purpose of adding to our knowledge, and to the comforts of this life. It therefore in a great measure, with the exception of so far as it deals with revealed truth, refers to Nature and Nature's laws. But in all candor we would ask, Why science should select as its only peculiar and legitimate province, the transient and perishable world, which is our home for only a short season, and ignore Spirituality as revealed by our Heavenly Father? We contend that it does not. The Christian religion bears the impress of immortality and fills the thirsty soul with visions of eternal bliss. It satisfies the soul that it embraces love, knowledge, and truth. Now also this comes in the province of Science; for it is its very essence to search after knowledge and truth, wherever to be found, either in nature or revelation. But there are some forms of knowledge which are exceptional, and should not be followed as for instance those to be pursued by unholy and unlawful curiosity. Our first parents were actuated by this in eating the forbidden fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, which brought death into the world and all of our woes. They should have been contented with what God in his infinite bounty, chose to grant. It is so even now. Illegitimate investigation—without authority, and with the pride of human nature and impulse, leads to scepticism; but not to the discredit of science properly pursued which should call to its aid Revelation the brightest light in God's creation.

DOUBT.

We must be careful to recognize the fact there may be no sin in doubting. Some doubts are wicked beyond all expression. Others are no more sinful than is the action of a human stomach in rejecting uncooked food. Doubt, begotten of needless ignorance, unreasonable prejudice, or indulged sin, possesses the character and should have the name of crime against truth. But doubt is not a sin per se. We have need only to define the word to see that this is true. It is in essence but the withholding of assent to an alleged fact or truth, for lack of convincing evidence—not that there may not be testimony in existence, and that of the most convincing kind, but it is not accessible or has not yet been brought before the mind in question.

But we should be careful not to encourage doubt as a permanent condition of mind. No man should be content to rest in in this state. Natural wisdom as little as God's Word justifies the cherishing or cultivation as a habit of intellectual or moral skepticism. Such a state of incertitude is most demoralizing and disastrous to all the mental and moral powers. Its direct tendency is to beget imbecility of thought and recklessness of life. We are encouraged in God's Word to prove all things, to demand sufficient evidence, and to question until this is furnished; but nowhere are we taught or permitted to regard doubt as desirable, or its continuance as a boon. Rather is the desire and demand for sufficient evidence intended to end our doubting thoroughly and finally, as soon as possible to put an end to all hesitancy, to settle faith, and lead the soul to recognize and hold fast the good. Doubt is simply a means to an end. It leads to the testing of the bridge, not because that is the most desirable and congenial employment, but in order that we may afterward cross safely and reach the rest of faith. Hence, there is no greater fallacy current, no more arrant nonsense, than that pitiful aping of wisdom, which, labeling itself "the spirit of inquiry," is ever circling at a distance the Gibraltar of our Christian faith, declaring it to be only a mass of rock-like clouds, and yet persistently refusing to come near enough to settle the question. Such is the folly and abuse of honest doubt, which we find in all those boastful skeptics whose delight and study it is to be ever questioning and never to come to the knowledge of the truth.—Christian Weekly.

LITTLE THINGS.

BY LOUISA E. NIVER.

Not the great things, but the little,
Troubling all our weary days,
'Tis that mar and dwarf our natures,
Harsh, unlovely make our ways.

Oft great waves of trouble rolling,
Rouse us up in sudden might,
But the eddies 'round us whirling
Leave a dreary, clinging blight.

Little acts with birth in malice
Often weigh our hearts with grief;
Friends (so-called) present a chalice
Potion filled from bitterest leaf.

Little drifts of wilful wand'ring
Sadden One (our dearest Friend);
By-paths for their flowers chosen
Oft in thorny roads do end.

Little sorrows make us question
Whence a balm for grief proceeds;
Little grains of faith well nurtured
Show us help for all our needs.

FOUR STEPS TO JESUS.

Florence felt that she must be a Christian. Her heart was heavy with the knowledge that it was sinful. For many days she had been carrying this burden alone. She did not think she could speak to any one about it. She had been away in her bed-room alone, and prayed many times; and still was dark and heavy in her little heart. "Oh, if I knew how to believe," she would say to herself. "And Mr. Marlette says it is easy. If I could only ask him!" Mr. Marlette was her dear silver-haired pastor. At length a thought struck her: "If I cannot talk with him, I can write him a little note."

When Mr. Marlette found an envelope directed to him, which some one had quietly laid on the large Bible in his study, he was surprised to find in it a note from his little friend Florence. When he read it, he was very glad too. "The dear child! what can I say to her?" he thought. Then he closed the door, and asked, as if he were a little child, going to a father, to be guided in answering that note. And I think he was. He began it with Florence's own question; and this is what he wrote:

"'How shall I come to Jesus?' The desire to come now is the first step.

"Feeling my sinfulness and danger and the need of His help is the second step.

"Feeling that He is both able and willing to help and save me is the third.

"And then asking Him to do for what I cannot possibly do for myself is the fourth.

"Four steps to Jesus. That's all. Perhaps I should say there is but one, and that very short. Out of the heart gushes the prayer, 'God be merciful to me a sinner'; and on the wings of the prayer the soul flies to the Saviour, in a moment, saying:

'Here, Lord, I give myself away:
'Tis all that I can do.'

"This seems to be the short, the simple, and the only way to the Saviour. May my dear Florence find it so!"

Florence read the note very carefully.

"I think it is the third step I need," she said. "I have tried the first and second and fourth, and I do and will believe He is able—yes, and willing to save me." So taking the third step, and then trying the fourth, it was not very long before Florence felt that in her heart she had found the answer to her own earnest question, "How shall I come to Jesus?" And she said, with a glowing face to her pastor:

"It is an easy way."

A PRECIOUS REMEDY FOR AN OLD DISEASE.

"Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me." This verse is rich in precious truth. For eighteen centuries it has been peculiarly dear to Christ's believing servants in every part of the world. Many are the sick rooms which it has lightened. Many are the dying hearts which it has cheered!

We have here a precious remedy against an old disease. That disease is trouble of heart. That remedy is faith.

Heart trouble is the commonest thing in the world. No rank, or class, or condition is exempt from it. No bars, or bolts, or locks can keep it out. Partly from inward causes and partly from outward—partly from the body and partly from the mind—partly from what we love and partly from what we fear, the journey of life is full of trouble. Even the best of Christians have many bitter cups to drink between grace and glory. Even the holiest saints find the world a vale of tears.

Faith in the Lord Jesus is the only sure medicine for troubled hearts. To believe more thoroughly, trust more entirely, rest more unreservedly, lay hold more firmly, lean back more completely—this is the prescription which our Master urges on the attention of all his disciples. No doubt the members of that little band which sat around the table at the last Supper, had believed already. They had proved the reality of their faith by giving up everything for Christ's sake. Yet what does their Lord say to them here? Once more he presses on them the old lesson with which they first began: "Believe! Believe more! Believe on Me!"

Never let us forget that there are degrees in faith, and that there is a wide difference between weak and strong believers. The weakest faith is enough to give a man a saving interest in Christ, and ought not to be despised, but it will not give a man much inward comfort as a strong faith. Vagueness and dimness of perception are the defect of weak believers. They do not see clearly what they believe. In such cases more faith is the one thing needed. Like Peter on the water, they need to look more steadily at Jesus, and less at the waves and winds. Is it not written "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee?"—Canon Ryle.

WHY THE BABY CAME.

Pillowed on flowers, with a half-open bud in his tiny hand, the baby lay, a beautiful image of repose. Nothing could be lovelier than the delicate face, the little lips just parted, the white brow shaded by soft silken curls. There was nothing of the repulsion of death which some people always suffer beside a corpse, to be felt by the most sensitive here. As beautiful now as he ever had been in his brief sweet life, the darling seemed to be asleep.

But it was a frozen sleep. The strong man, pale with suppressed emotion, was one who had felt the fountains of fatherhood stirred for the first time, when the little one uttered his first feebly cry. The mother, leaning on his strength now, because grief had crushed all her own, had been thrilled with the highest joy of womanhood when this nursling was given her, six months ago. Everything was over now. The little garments must be folded up, and put away. There would be no need of wakening in the night to take care of baby. Baby was gone.

The minister said tender words and prayed a prayer of thankfulness and trust. He had been to so many baby funerals in the last quarter-century during which he had led his flock, the words of comfort came readily to his lips, and he meant them every one. He felt that of such as this wee blossom were the flowers fittest for the kingdom of heaven.

By and by the last rites were performed. There was one little mound the more in the cemetery, and one more desolate house in the town. These bereft parents were elect members of the largest household under the stars, the household of the mourning.

The world is full of sympathetic hearts, but it is full also of hearts that are busied with their own cares and perplexities. There are always many to have a passing and sincere sorrow for those who have been afflicted, yet after awhile, when in the opinion of friends there has been time enough for the recovery of cheerfulness, even relatives and friends begin to chide the persistently sad.

"Why did the baby come, if it was so soon to be taken away?" say these.

You may notice that you seldom hear this question from the lips of a mother. She is glad, away down to the profoundest depths of her wounded heart that she had the child, though it be removed from her arms. She is glad to wear the mother's crown, though it be a crown of thorns.

To the inquirer may this answer be made. The baby came for two great reasons. One was that he might broaden and enlarge the whole life sweep of all who loved him. Their care for him gave them a comprehension of the mystery of childhood, and a feeling of the Fatherhood of God, that without him they might never have possessed.

The other was that the little spirit, flying heavenward, might draw by a slender silver thread, invisible but never slackening, the hearts of father and mother, to the land where He dwells, of whom the whole family in heaven and in earth is named. The baby came not in vain.—Margaret E. Sangster in Illustrated Christian Weekly.

THE JOYFUL SOUND.

The strains of beautiful music—soothing, quickening, spirit-stirring—are falling on the ear from the interior of an ivy-colored church; the listener, wonder stricken, approaches the door with a feeling of awe. He enters and sees something in a gallery that appears like a house, with large gilt edge pillars, and is told that from thence the music comes. He is shown how these pipes are made to emit sound by air blown in; each one different; that the air enters from one pair of bellows. Unseen some one touches the keys; tones deep, low, full, then high, sweet, ravishing are heard; some like the loud trumpet summoning to battle—again like the far off plaintive air of the Arabian desert. He is told that one individual was bringing out all this variety, the reading of the one piece of music, each portion being necessary for the completion—the perfection of the whole. But that without the wind the keys were touched in vain, they did not speak. So God has given to us his blessed word—the Holy Scriptures; above thirty men wrote, of different ranks in life, at different eras, "as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." One beautiful air runs through the whole—"the song of Moses and the Lamb." But we must have the Divine afflatus—the Holy Spirit—else we shall read, touch the keys, in vain; the whole is in beautiful harmony then. Let us, before we read, ask; the promise is explicit; "if ye then, being evil, know how to give gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him," then "joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody."

"MAKE A FEW."

A pretentious student in Brown University once told Dr. Wayland that he thought it would be easy to make proverbs like those of Solomon. The reply of Dr. Wayland was, "Make a few!" If skeptics who have spent so much time in railing at the Bible would try their hands at making a better book, a book that would take hold upon the heart of humanity; which would interest children and comfort old age; which would inspire manhood and womanhood with the highest, truest, noblest thoughts; which would chasten them in joy and comfort them in sorrow; if infidels would produce the first page of such a book as this, we would gladly listen to what they have to say. But this eternal fault-finding, this everlasting negation; this seeking to rob people of a healthy and comfortable faith and leave them nothing in its place; this parading of a few worn out sneers and objections, never will accomplish much with a world that is hungering for the bread of life, and that longs to drink of the water of salvation.

TASTE FOR READING.

Sir John Herschel has declared that "if he were to pray for a taste which should stand under every variety of circumstance and be a source of happiness and cheerfulness to him through life, it would be a taste for reading." Give a man, he affirms, that taste, and the means of gratifying it, and you cannot fail of making him good and happy; for you bring him in contact with the best society in all ages, with the tenderest, the bravest, and the purest men who have adorned humanity, making him a denizen of all nations, a contemporary of all times, and giving him a practical proof that the world has been created for him, for his solace, and for his enjoyment.

KNOW YOUR BUSINESS THOROUGHLY.

A young man in a leather store used to feel very impatient with his employer for keeping him, year after year, "handling sides." but he saw the use, years after, when, in an establishment of his own, he was able to tell by the touch the exact quality of the goods. It was only by those thousands of repetitions that the lesson was learned; and so it is with everything in which we acquire skill. The half-informed, half skilled in every business, outnumbers the others dozens to one. Daniel Webster once replied to a young man who asked him if there was any "room in the legal profession," "There is always room at the top." The better you know your business the better your chance to rise. You can gather much information by making a wise use of your eyes and ears, and perhaps be able to surprise your employer in an emergency by stepping into the "next man's" place and discharging his duties satisfactorily; so learn your business.

FOUR YEARS LOST.

A mother once said to a clergyman, "When should I commence the religious education of my child?" He asked her, "How old is your child?" She replied, "Four years old." The clergyman answered, "Madam, if you have not begun already, you have lost four years."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From London Weekly Review:

An application has been received at the Ursuline Convent, Quebec, from nuns of that Order in France, for admission therein in the event of their expulsion from France.

The Pope has sanctioned preliminary steps for the beatification of several French missionaries, a mandarin, and twenty-five other natives who were martyrs to Christianity in China and Cochin China between 1820 and 1860.

A singular law case is now going on at Soleure, in Switzerland. A priest who died there some months ago, left, after bequeathing legacies to the Emperors of Austria and Brazil, the residue of his property to the Pope. The Emperors immediately renounced the legacies, but no answer has been received from the Pope, and his Holiness is now summoned to appear before the Tribunal of Soleure, as the relatives of the deceased priest have commenced a lawsuit against him, asserting the testator was not in possession of his mental faculties when he made his will.

A curious case has come before the Bourges law courts. The Patriote de la Nievre publishes an article accusing a curé named C—— of forcing his flock to buy wax candles. Thereupon all the curès in the department whose names commence with C, and who are fifty in number, brought a joint action for libel against the journal. The case came on for hearing on Friday, when the advocate for the defence stated that he was ready to give the name of the priest alluded to, and to prove the fact charged against him. The court admitted this course of procedure and postponed the case for a week for the production of the necessary evidence.

On Sabbath morning, at the service in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, the following letter was read from Mr. Spurgeon: "Mentone, March 5th.—Beloved Friends:—With great gratitude to God I am able to report myself as restored to health and spirits. I am still very far from strong upon my feet, and after a short walk I suffer pain in the knees; but even this is improving, and I have every reason to hope and believe that at the appointed time I shall be fully able to resume my beloved labour. I desire to present loving salutations to all the beloved members of my church, and to wish them each one every blessing.—Yours, C. H. SPURGEON." The period of rest which the Rev. gentleman's flock prevailed upon him to enjoy was three months, one-half of which has expired. The services in the Tabernacle last Sabbath morning were conducted by Mr. C. Spurgeon, Jr.

Among the numerous bills brought in for the consideration of the French Chamber of Deputies this session is one affecting marriage laws as laid down in the "Code Civil." M. Saint Martin desires to see marriages between brothers and sisters-in-law legalized, his arguments being that they are not contrary to natural rights, and that as a matter of fact, they actually take place by means of a dispensation, no less than 1,467 marriages of this kind having been registered during the year 1876. The most important feature of M. Saint Martin's measure is, however, the proposal to render the marriage of priests legal. As the law stands at present, not only are priests prohibited from marrying by the Civil Code as well as by Canon Law, but in the event of a priest entering into wedlock the union is considered null and void.

Gleaned from exchanges.

Sales of Moody and Sankey Hymns in England amount to nearly seven millions. In the United States they are 6,392,460.

The Free Church Sustentation Fund receipts for the past nine months show a decrease of $25,140, the total being $577,260 against $602,400 received up to the same date of last year.

In the Roman Catholic Church they believe in Bishops, for in Protestant Scotland they have 6 Bishops, 272 priests, 264 churches, and the Pope is seriously thinking of giving them a Cardinal.

The British Wesleyan Methodists set out at the beginning of the year to raise a special fund of $1,000,000 for church building, debts, etc., one-quarter of which they hoped to raise in Great Britain and the rest throughout the world. But already two districts in London have contributed more than the quarter, and now it is expected that $1,000,000 beside will be raised. This is noble giving in hard times.

It is stated that there are now twenty-one French Presbyterian ministers in charge of French congregations in Canada, with elders, deacons, communion-rolls, and all other features of a Presbyterian church.

Miss Field, a lady sent to Swatow, China, by the Baptist Board, has been remarkably successful in her sphere. She has twenty women constantly employed in teaching and distributing the Bible in a territory covering 4,000 square miles.

What a grand outlook it is for our continent that of the 60,000 students in the 350 Universities and Colleges of the United States and Canada, 25,000 are professing Christians.

Active steps are being taken for the formation of a Female Missionary Association to be connected with the English Presbyterian Church, having for its object the Christian education of the women of China.

MISCELLANY.

Munkacsy, the Hungarian artist, who, the other day, sold his painting "Milton Dictating Paradise Lost to his Daughters," for $52,000, a few years ago was a carpenter.

The temperance people of Indiana are conducting a successful fight in many parts of the State against the issue of license to saloon keepers, by which some counties are already wholly cleared of saloons and in others the work is progressing most hopefully.

At a meeting of the evangelical clergy of all denominations of Boston and vicinity, the following resolution was passed, unanimously: "That the practice of shooting birds and other live animals from traps for sport is most unjustifiable and contrary to the plain dictation of morality and humanity, and we most earnestly ask the Legislature of Massachusetts, now in session, to enact laws for its prevention."

The authorities of the State of Illinois have suppressed 3,600 quack doctors, the greater number of whom have gone to other localities, beyond the reach of the State laws, to "practice" upon the credulous. The State Board of Health is also taking the medical colleges in hand, and putting limitations upon the granting of diplomas. This work will be pushing to more vigorous conclusion, and examinations be required of all who offer themselves as practitioners of medicine.

About one-fourth of the population of the State of New York are Roman Catholics. The penitentiaries of the State contain 4,200 prisoners. Proportionally one-seventh or six hundred of these should be Roman Catholics; and yet three-fourths, or thirty-one hundred and fifty are of that denomination! Why is it that over five times more criminals come from that denomination than from all the other religious denominations—five times more than from all the rest of the population? Who can tell?

There is in Chicago a Sunday-school for Chinese which meets every Sunday afternoon. Of the hundred or more Chinamen in that city twenty-six attend the school regularly, and there is a teacher for every scholar. The converts are said to be generous contributors for religious and charitable enterprises.—Presbyterian.

It is not, we believe, generally known that in the prayer-book of George III., of England, where the congregation used to implore the Almighty to bless and preserve "Thy servant, George, our most gracious King and Governor," these words were struck out in the copy used by the king, and the following written with his own hand: "An unworthy sinner."

LIVING DEATH.

Singular, isn't it? There's our neighbor Hurry "driven to death." Fact; for he has told us so three times this week, as a reason why he couldn't be at the prayer-meeting. Yet young Brown said just now that they two had a "jolly" three hours at billiards last evening, and a social game of whist at Mr. Thompson's the evening before. If we drop a hint of this to brother Hurry he'll say that recreation is necessary to one "so driven to death as he is. Well, when billiards rest a tired church member, and prayer doesn't, it may indicate "death"—"in a sartain sense," as our teacher used to say. Isn't there a verse somewhere that calls a certain class of people "dead while they live?" And is that style of life worth living?—Congregationalist.

"Amid my vast and lofty aspirations," says Lamartine, "the penalty of a wasted youth overtook me. Adieu, then, to the dreams of wasted genius, to the aspirations of intellectual enjoyment!" Many a gifted heart has sighed the same sad sigh, many a noble nature has walked to the grave in sackcloth, for one brief dallying in the bowers of Circe, for one short sleep in the Castle of Indolence.—Bayne.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 1879.

A REMARKABLE PROPOSITION.

In the April number of the "Missionary," the question 'Shall the Missionary live on, or shall it be extinguished?' is seriously discussed. We could wish it were not so, and must confess our great surprise that any one can, in full view of the subject, fail to see that the suppression of this newsbearer and mission advocate, would be of incalculable damage to the mission cause.

One proposition which was made to the last General Assembly, is that the Missionary be united with the Earnest Worker and Child's Paper and thus there be one official organ for the whole church.

The proposition did not met with special favor last year, and we have no reason to suppose will be more favorably considered in the next Assembly. The present number of the Missionary discusses this phase of the question to an extent beyond our space, and to it we must refer our readers.

But there are some points in the second proposition to which we must refer more at length, rather to enforce, however, what has appeared in the pamphlet referred to, than to add to what has been said.

The second proposition is "to publish the contents of the Missionary, or so much of them as may be deemed necessary, in the columns of the weekly religious journals, it being presumed that these papers would agree to the arrangement and would publish gratuitously." This proposition is said to be from "one who is known to be sincerely interested in the missionary work, and whose judgment has great weight in the Church."

When this plan is carried out, one who is sincerely interested in the Sabbath-schools, will no doubt propose that the Earnest Worker and the Child's Paper be published in the weekly religious journals, adding with the same refreshing naivete, "it being presumed that these papers would agree to the arrangement and would publish gratuitously."

We feel prompted just here to call in question the generosity of the second proposition, and we feel very sure that the zeal of the proposer for the cause of missions exceeds his knowledge of the rights, duties, privileges and requirements of newspaper editing, but we commit the case to the editors of the Missionary who state it very fairly:

As to the matter of publishing all missionary intelligence, as well as all kinds of official matter, in the columns of the weekly religious journals, it is doubtful whether the plan would be found either practicable or economical. At present these papers circulate a good deal of intelligence taken from the columns of the Missionary, and in this way the sphere of its usefulness is greatly enlarged. But when the question comes up of employing these papers for the purpose of circulating all kinds of missionary intelligence, as well as all official matter, thus giving them a sort of semi-official character, the subject at once assumes a many-sided aspect. In the first place, a very large portion of the space of these papers must be devoted unconditionally to this purpose. We say unconditionally, for no missionary committee could afford to submit to the discretion of an editor what should and what should not be spread before the Churches. On the other hand, it is equally evident that an editor could not consent to surrender any considerable portion of his paper to the absolute control of a second party, especially when that party shares none of the expense of publication. More than this. To render an arrangement of the kind effective, all of the weekly papers must be brought into the compact. Otherwise it would be impossible to reach the entire constituency of the Church. But suppose that in the course of a year or two, for good and sufficient reasons, one or more of these papers should withdraw from the engagement, then the whole arrangement would necessarily fall to pieces, and the benevolent schemes would be left without the means of reaching corresponding portions of the Church. At the same time it is manifestly unreasonable to expect the weekly papers to publish all that may be deemed necessary without any kind of compensation. It would be laying upon the editors of those papers a much heavier tax to support the institutions of the Church than upon any other class of persons. If one or two of them only were to publish such information, it might increase their circulation, and in this way it would prove to be a benefit instead of being injurious. But when all of them come into the compact, which is necessary to the proper working of the scheme, we do not see how their general circulation would be increased beyond what it is at present. If the editors of the papers were to charge simply for publishing receipts—and this would be but reasonable to say the least—yet the aggregate cost would probably amount to a good deal more than the whole cost of the Missionary, at the present time over and above its receipts.

WILMINGTON PRESBYTERY.

Certain things were specially noticeable with regard to the session of the Presbytery of Wilmington which closed its exercises last week.

There was more than usual interest manifested by the citizens—that is more interest than is usual in cities—much more, which was very gratifying.

The ruling elders present too were more free than usual in taking part in discussions before the body. This is a decided improvement, and the Moderator and the ministerial brethren evidently recognized and appreciated the circumstance.

We have never heard we think more earnest and pointed addresses on the subject of Foreign Missions than those delivered on occasion of the report of the agent. The addresses were brief, but each speaker chose his special point and presented it with remarkable clearness and force. Hence the whole possessed the charm of variety.

The verbal reports on the state of religion in the churches were unusually satisfactory. At the suggestion of the Chairman on the Narrative to the General Assembly the addresses were confined principally to the points suggested by the General Assembly, and thus the Moderator calling the subject when desired, the information obtained from the churches was more precise and at the same time more full than could be obtained from talks at random.

Those who know, which is saying those who love, Rev. N. Z. Graves, will be pained to learn that he lies in a very low state of health at his home in Warrenton, N. C. This information was elicited on the call of his name from the roll of Presbytery. No further information could be obtained.

TOPSAIL SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The Topsail church, of which Rev. G. W. McMillan is stated supply, has now a Sabbath school of about twenty members. The school was organized about three weeks since and Mr. D. McMillan elected superintendent. At the same time a lady and a gentleman were elected assistant superintendents. By means of a collection enough money was raised to provide singing books. The International Series as published in the Earnest Worker was adopted, and is in use in the school.

The school is a Presbyterian school in charge of the session of the Presbyterian church, but it is only fair to say that to the zeal and energy of the ladies of the congregation is its organization, due and upon them must depend in great measure its future prosperity and success. The prospect is very bright.

REVIVAL IN CONCORD.

From the Concord Register we see that a revival is in progress in the Presbyterian church, of which Rev. L. McKimmon is pastor, in that town. Rev. Dr. J. Henry Smith of Greensboro and Rev. J. H. Thornwell, Evangelist of Concord Presbytery, preached frequently during the past ten days. Their sermons are spoken of as being very forcible and delivered with great spiritual earnestness. Twenty persons have been moved to seek an interest in the salvation of their souls. We hope to have further and more explicit news in our next.

CALL TENDERED.

The churches of Mt. Tirza and Waxhaw, of Bethel Presbytery, have, so we learn, extended a call to Rev. R. A. Miller. The matter is under advisement.

REV. D. MUNROE.

This brother, pastor of the church at Soddy, Tenn., who has been residing in New York city for some months, under care of a physician, writes us the following, which will be matter of rejoicing to many friends in North Carolina and elsewhere:

334 BOWERY, NEW YORK, April 3.

Mr. Editor: Please send the next number of my paper to my old address, Soddy, Tennessee, instead of to this place. After an absence of nearly four months on account of affliction, I leave to-night, God willing, for my former field of labor. Anticipate stopping at London to attend meeting of Knoxville Presbytery. If not Providentially hindered shall reach Soddy early next week. With the continuation of our Heavenly Father's blessing, hope then to again enter upon my regular ministerial duties. If Presbytery transact any business of special importance I may give you a brief sketch of it for publication.

I attended Dr. Talmage's trial two or three days last week, but the house was so full that I failed to get in the last day I went over. The sympathies of the people generally, so far as my observation extends, are with the accused pastor, but the testimony of the witnesses against him last week so far is stronger that what I heard last.

Fraternally,

D. MUNROE.

CURRENT NEWS LETTER.

Our correspondent "M." writes us from Greensboro, that the Young Men's Christian Association of Greensboro held its first anniversary meeting, the last in March. The Association has a hall that will seat some three hundred people, but on the above occasion the Benbow Hall had to be used to accommodate the audience. The Association was addressed by Judge Dick, Col. Gilmer and others. During the exercises Mr. W. E. Edward fell in a fit of apoplexy, and was carried home. He never revived to consciousness, but died next morning. The Young men's Associations, says our correspondent, are doing great good in Greensboro, Winston and other places. Our friend adds with regard to quiet Sabbaths: We enjoy great quiet from railroad trains (except mail trains) —no sound of rolling wheels, nor shrill whistles; no gathering of crowds and no laborers at work as on other days. The Legislature has done well, and we have cause to be thankful. The example is well worthy of invitation everywhere.

Graduating from Union Theological Seminary are:

William B. Arrowood, Old Furnace, N. C.; William C. Campbell, Gerardstown, W. Va.; William E. Cave, Salem, Va.; William F. Cosner, Red Creek, W. Va.; George W. Davies, Lynchburg, Va.: Theodoric P. Epes, Nottoway, Va.; Littleton E. Scott, Jefferson, W. Va.; James H. Smith, Lexington, Va.; Ballard F. Thompson, Shop Spring, Tenn.; James H. Weaver, Atoka, Tenn.; Horace M. Whaling, Clover, Va.

A student writes from the latter institution:

"There is no doubt but the Synods of North Carolina and Virginia should lift up holy hands and thankful hearts to bless God for this institution, and more, also, for the able, wise and godly faculty to whom her interest is committed. Without good teachers no institution would meet its aim, but all who are acquainted with the faculty of this institution will join me in saying that no institution has its chairs better filled than our own dear old U. T. S. May God ever bless it and all her interests, and especially those who instruct and are taught, filling the hearts of all with the fear of God. 'L. A."

Dr. Preston's church, the First Presbyterian of Richmond, Va., have bought a church building, lately occupied by the Northern Methodists, and will carry on a mission work in it. The prospect is very favorable.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We had expected in the present issue to have presented our readers a suitable memorial of Rev. J. Monroe Anderson, from his late pastoral charge, but it has not yet come to hand. His last illness was one of protracted weariness and pain, which he bore with patient resignation. A private letter to a friend, from a member of his family, writing before his death, most tenderly and affectionately refers to his sufferings and his perfect resignation to God's will, saying: "He lies like a weaned child in the arms of his loving Savior; only yesterday he said, 'I cannot help thinking of going to be with Jesus!'"

The Southern Home says:

Mr. Anderson was a native of South Carolina. He married Margaret Neel, sister to General William H. and Capt. Alexander Neel of this county, and leaves a large and devoted family. His life has been one of constant and earnest labor for the cause of Christ, for the happiness of his family, for the good of mankind, and he is now reaping the reward of his works, crowned with a diadem of glory, whose lustre eternity can never dim or impair.

After making numerous bequests, ranging from $5,000 to $25,000, to various other objects, Deacon Asa Otis leaves what was first supposed to be about half a million dollars, but which, it since appears, will be over a million, to the American Board of Foreign Missions. The Christian Herald says:

The bequest is, so far as we know, unprecedented in the history of benevolent societies in this country. A Scottish earl some years since gave a check of £100,000, the largest check ever drawn on the Bank of Scotland, for home missions in that land. But these munificent gifts stand hitherto unapproached and alone.

Deacon Otis died a bachelor at the age of 93 years, and he leaves no collateral heirs to thwart the purpose of his will.

We copy from the New York Sun an account of a new plan for curing drunkenness. It will not do to say that no man can entirely reform, short of such a change of heart and life as we call conversion, for we have known surprising reformations by the power of human will. Yet it is plainly evident that there are many cases beyond the power of man, which the grace of God does reach; and in every case religious character and life is an inestimable aid in resisting temptation. We give the item:

Two years ago a few citizens, after examining the various methods of dealing with drunkenness, decided in favor of what they called the Christian plan. They rented a building near the Central Park, and announced that they would receive intemperate men who desired to reform. The cure of intemperance is sought at this reformatory, not by medical treatment or physical agencies, but the inebriates are taught that drunkenness is a sin against God, and no other means of reform are employed. The results, according to a report just published, have astonished those who undertook the experiment. Of 303 persons received they assert that 187 were wholly reclaimed, and have been long enough away from the asylum to test the thoroughness of their reformation. This proportion is believed far to exceed that of any other inebriate asylum.

Attention has lately been called in the English journals to the persecution of peasant families in Bohemia, who make the effort each Sunday to meet together for Bible study, singing and prayer, but are as regularly dispersed by the police. Over a year ago these persons seceded from the Romish Church and declined to connect themselves with the two evangelical churches acknowledged by Austrian law, because these churches do not regard conversion as essential to church membership. They declare themselves evangelical and acknowledge the Bible as their guide, and the Heidelberg Catechism as containing their statement of doctrine. For this independence of thought they have been repeatedly fined, in one instance $20 each, and two of them were thrust into jail for six days. Other fines or imprisonments hang over their heads unless their appeal to Vienna shall receive a favorable answer. There is little doubt, however, but that in time a favorable decision will be reached, since what these poor people in the country are not allowed to do, is done every Sunday in nearly all the large cities of Austria.

We trust our friends will not forget that a special representative of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN will be at the various Presbyteries in this State. He will gladly receive any funds that may come in for renewals and new subscriptions. Bear us in mind, and oblige us if possible in the matter.

We have been asked every now and then why Rev. H. B. Pratt's articles on Romanism have not been published; and if there is a probability of its being done. Now a friend offers to pay ten dollars toward expenses of publication, and when published to take the same amount in books for distribution. Those who are anxious for the publication of these articles in durable form might do well to correspond on the subject with Rev. H. B. Pratt at Winnsboro, S. C. We write without any conference with, or suggestion from, the author of the articles named.

The present Emperor of Russia undoubtedly desires to alleviate the hardships and advance the intelligence and general prosperity of his people, yet Nihilism is rampant in his dominions. The strongest measures are resorted to for its suppression, but without avail. The wealthy classes and those in high official position are taking active part in the treason. The late arrests include court chamberlains, officers of the guard and two daughters of a prominent minister. The life of General Van Drentilm was attempted and forty-five arrests were made. To show the intensity of the fanaticism, especially as to the higher classes, the penalty is banishment to the wilds of Siberia. A punishment almost worse than death to a habitue of court circles.

First let Archbishop Purcell ask all the Archbishops and Bishops throughout the United States for their co-operation. Let said Archbishops and Bishops call upon their respective pastors, and then let the pastors appeal to the congregations. Let it be an envelope collection. Have the envelopes distributed on Sunday at all the masses and collected on the following Sunday. Let the top part of the back of the envelope be printed thus: "Aid for Archbishop Purcell from St. Stephen's church, New York," and others; then underneath a space for the name of the individual: beneath that a space for residence and beneath that a space for the amount. Then when all the envelopes are collected by each church, let them be safely packed in a box or packages and sent by express to Archbishop Purcell's address at Cincinnati.

In this way committees and their jealousies and disagreements will be done away with. I venture to say that there are at this moment over one million people ready to respond, and only waiting for the call.

Just think of it. All the Archbishops and Bishops and priests in the United States, holding the keys of heaven and hell, at least so doing in the opinion of their congregations.

Then the space left for the name of the individual is significant. No non-contributor could escape. The plan would raise the money. And yet one cannot but doubt whether the money would be appropriated as designed. What a harvest there would be for those who might be disposed to follow the Archbishop's illustrious example. By the way the Archbishop's letter of explanation puts to blush those who have been giving him credit for misfortune rather than fault. He denies positively any such debt as would accrue from interest. Tried by rules that would be applied to non-clerical defaulters, it must be confessed his case doesn't look well.

Right on the heels of the above defalcation comes a new and most extensive scheme of finance: The establishment of an Anglo Universal Bank with directorates in London, Paris and other great financial centres. Of course New York must have a directorate. It is intended to create a bond of sympathy between all Catholics throughout the world. It will be a terrible engine of power, if it can be consummated.

The news from South Africa is not reassuring. The Scottish-American Journal, which is good authority furnishes what is appended:

The latest reports by cable of the condition of affairs in Zululand are sufficiently grave to excite alarm. It is painfully evident that the trouble is not at an end. There is no trustworthy intelligence from Col. Pearson, and anxiety concerning his safety is becoming intense. Several runners, induced by large rewards, started for Ekowe without dispatches, but returned reported the roads destroyed, every approach commanded by military kraals (forts), and the country swarming with Zulus. With the utmost care Col. Pearson's supplies, it is believed, would be exhausted by the end of March. The expedition in course of organization on the lower Tugela for his relief amounts to fourteen companies of regulars. It will be pushed forward as rapidly as possible; but in the meanwhile another overwhelming disaster may occur. The safety of Colonel Pearson and his men at Ekowo becomes the pivot on which the future of the campaign hinges.

MT. AIRY CHURCH.

MADISON, April 1st, 1879.

MR. EDITOR:—I have just returned from Mt. Airy, where I preached last Saturday and Sunday. (This little church, as many of your readers know, is vacant.) We received into the communion of the church two ladies, both of whom I baptized, together with the infant of one of them. On Friday night the ladies of our church, assisted by ladies of other denominations, gave a supper for the benefit of the church. They realized about fifty dollars, more than enough to pay off a small debt, and secure a deed for the church.

Yours, truly, C. MILLER.

CHURCH AT GRAHAM.

GRAHAM, N. C., March 31, 1879.

TO THE EDITOR OF N. C. P.:—DEAR SIR:

On the second Sabbath of this month we ordained three elders, viz.: James H. Holt, John Denny and W. C. Donnell; and five deacons, viz.: J. L. Scott, J. W. White, L. B. Holt, John W. Whitsett and Robert M. Denny. We have now six elders and five deacons, and I think their efficiency will be of great benefit to our church.

We have just closed a three days' meetings at Company's Shops, N. C., which is within the bounds of our Graham congregation, and at the communion on the Sabbath, we received eighteen members—four by examination and fourteen by certificate—one from the Lutheran church, four from the Methodist Episcopal churches and nine from other Presbyterian churches. We now have a membership of one hundred and three.

We are also engaged in repairing and refitting our church building. We expect to put a cupola on it, reroof it and repaint it. When this is finished, we shall have a very neat and comfortable house of worship.

Yours, truly, B. W. MEBANE.

RALEIGH FIRST CHURCH.

RALEIGH, N. C., April 7, 1879.

MR. EDITOR:—At our last communion season the "glad tidings" were communicated to you of the addition of thirteen to the membership of the First Church of this city. On yesterday, as we again "commemorated the dying love of our blessed Saviour," we were made to rejoice in having nine more to come forward and cast their lot with us. Four of this number were admitted on confession of their faith in Christ and five by certificate.

They have proven precious seasons indeed, and have afforded us new material for praise and thanksgiving. Rev. John S. Watkins, our beloved pastor, is laboring earnestly in the Lord's work, and with the blessing of God upon his labors they are resulting in great good to this church. W.

PRESBYTERY OF WILMINGTON,

Met on 2d inst. in Second Presbyterian church of Wilmington. Rev. Dr. R. H. Chapman was elected Moderator and Rev. A. Kirkland and Ruling Elder A. H. Perry temporary clerks. Rev. B. F. Marable was re-elected Trustee of Davidson College. Rev. J. R. Wilson, D. D., and Ruling Elder Alex. Sprunt were elected commissioners to the next General Assembly, with Rev. A. Kirkland and Ruling Elder D. McMillan alternates.

The pastoral relation between Rev. K. McDonald and Black River Chapel was dissolved.

Rev. G. W. McMillan was authorized to supply Topsail and Mt. Williams churches.

A resolution was passed unanimously, after some discussion, formally disapproving of preaching by students for the ministry before their licensure.

A committee of five was appointed to visit Whiteville and investigate and adjudicate a case of discipline.

The Committee on Susteutation was instructed to organize a church at Burgaw if the way be clear.

The narrative to the General Assembly was drawn to meet the points suggested by that body and states:

"1. That our ministers are punctual in meeting their engagements, and our ruling elders and deacons are commended for their fidelity in the discharge of their duties.

"2. In most of our churches there are growing and attentive congregations.

"3. Fifteen of our churches report additions, numbering from thirteen down to one.

"4. Intemperance, worldly amusements and other forms of sin are not indulged in as much as heretofore.

"5. Family worship in a majority of our congregations is sadly neglected.

"6. Catechetical instruction of children in our Sabbath schools and families is receiving increased attention.

"7. The Sabbath is desecrated to such an extent as to call for an expression of sorrow on our part.

"8. Notwithstanding the financial stringency of the times, our people have made some advance in honoring God with their substance.

"9. All churches, save in one instance (Swansboro), have been regularly supplied with preaching during the past year.

"10. We are doing nothing worthy of remark in the way of instructing the colored people, more for want of opportunity than of zeal for the salvation of their souls."

Presbytery adjourned to meet at Brown Marsh church on Thursday before the fourth Sabbath in March, 1880.

SHARPLY WRITTEN.

I suppose that nobody reads Miss Hannah More these days. And yet she was once a star of the first magnitude in the great London literary and social world, and was esteemed to have done important service by her writings to both Church and State in England. Her correspondence is more important these days than her works. We see how the big-wigs of a hundred years ago disported themselves,—what effusive compliments to each other, what verse-making, what mirth and wit, what good sense, and sober piety withal. Dr. Johnson, Garrick, Langhorne John Newton, Mrs. Montague, Mrs. Carter, Horace Walpole, Wm. Wilberforce and Dukes and Duchesses and Bishops, and great folks without end. It was a brilliant circle, but has been succeeded by others even more brilliant, wise and witty.

Some of my late reading has brought together two little jeux d' esprit of those half-forgotten days—themselves now quite forgotten, and only to be unearthed in some correspondence or Reminiscences. Hannah More was good at occasional verses to her friends. Some of these, slight as they are, are probably better than her more labored efforts, notwithstanding Dr. Johnson's solemn verdict that he considered her "the most powerful versificatrix in the English language." "Versificatrix" is good and truly Johnsonian and expresses exactly her position among the poets. Among her great friends were the amiable Bishop of London, Dr. Portens and his wife. On one occasion the Bishop was clearing up in the garden of his palace a dense overgrown thicket in a retired spot known as the monk's walk, and said to have been frequented by Bishop Bonner, Bloody Mary's tool. Hannah More thereupon sent the following sprightly verses to her friend, which were afterwards handsomely turned into Latin by the unfortunate son of Dr. Beattie, then a boy of sixteen.

Bonner's Ghost is supposed to start from the gloomy shade, and remonstrate upon the invasion of his ancient solitary retreat, and lament the decay of Romanism and persecution.

Reformer hold! ah, spare my shade,
Respect the hallowed dead!
Vain prayer! I see the opening glade
See utter darkness fled.

Just so your innovating hand
Let in the moral light;
So chased from this bewildered land,
Fled intellectual night.

Where flow that holy gloom which hid
Fair Truth from vulgar ken?
Where now that wisdom which forbid
To think that monks were men?

Those charming intricacies where?
Those venerable lies?
Those legends once the Church's care?
Those sweet perplexities?

Ah! fatal age, whose sons combined
Of credit to exhaust us;
Ah! fatal age, which gave mankind
A Luther and a Faustus!

For knowledge flew, like magic spell,
By typographic art:
Oh shame! a peasant now can tell
If priests the truth impart.

Ye counsels, pilgrimages, creeds!
Synods, decrees, and rules!
Ye warrants of unholy deeds,
Indulgences and bulls!

Where are ye now? and where alas!
The pardons we dispense?
And penances, the sponge of sins;
And Peter's holy pence?

But soft—what gracious form appears?
Is this a convent's life?
Atrocious sight! By all my fears,
A prelate with a wife!

Ah! sainted Mary, not for this
Our pious labors joined;
The witcheries of domestic bliss
Had shook ev'n Gardiner's mind.

But tortured memory vainly speaks
The projects we designed;
While this apostle bishop seeks
The freedom of mankind.

And who shall change his wayward heart,
His wilful spirit turn?
For those his labors can't convert,
His weakness will not burn.

This is very well and very pretty, and was received by Hannah More's High Church coterie with great applause. She had friends however, outside of that gilded pale who had perhaps some reason not to think quite so highly of the liberality of the Bishops of the English Protestant Church. Mrs. Barbauld was Presbyterian enough to reply to her friend Hannah, and though her verses were probably debarred an entrance into the Bishop's palace, they had their circulation among wits, and in a circle that revolved in a place lower socially, but intellectually quite the peer of any that England's palmiest days can record. In H. C. Robinson's Reminiscences we find Mrs. Barbauld's lines preserved.

The Bishops reply in a body to the attack of Bonner's Ghost upon their liberal policy to Dissenters and heretics. These lines contain the pith of the whole—which is "we would if we could."

'Tis not to us should be addressed
Your ghostly exhortation;
If heresy still lift her crest,
The fault is in the nation.

The State in spite of all our pains,
Has left us in the lurch;
The spirit of the times restrains
The spirit of the Church.

Our spleen against reforming cries
Is now as ever shown;
Though we can't blind the nation's eyes
Still we may shut our own.

Would it but please the civil weal
To lift again the crozier,
We soon would make those yokes of steel
Which now are bands of ozier.

Church maxims do not greatly vary,
Take it upon our honor;
Place on the throne another Mary
We'll find her son at Bonner.

MONTHLY REVIEW OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

We have intelligence from Campinas as late as the 30th of January. Miss Kirk had gone to Sao Paulo to recruit her health after the labors and fatigues of another session. She had it in contemplation to establish a training school for girls at the last mentioned place at her own charges. This is an important undertaking and will doubtless result in much good, but it can scarcely be carried on in connection with our mission at Campinas. So far as our letters from Campinas speak on the subject, the missionaries were in the enjoyment of health and pursuing their labors as usual. The annual report of the Mission, published in the present number of the Missionary, is very encouraging. Intelligence has been received from Mr. and Mrs. Dabney as late as the 10th of February. They were nearing the island of St. Thomas on their way to Campinas, and thus far had had a very pleasant voyage.

We have a letter from Miss Rouzone to the 28th of January. She speaks of the intended visit of Rev. Mr. Tu-in, the Waldensian minister at Milan, to the churches in this country and bespeaks for him a cordial reception. We publish below a communication from Miss Ronzono to Mrs. Boyce, an English lady who is deeply interested in the evangelization of Italy, and who has frequently befriended Miss Ronzone, in relation to the character and progress of her school. Our readers will not be the less interested in this letter because of its foreign idiom.

From China we have letters from the 25th of December to the 13th of January. Mrs. Stuart's letter of the first mentioned date alludes to three Chinese women who were under deep religious convictions, and she hopes at the same time that they have already been made the subjects of regenerating grace. Miss Safford, we learn through an indirect source, had got back to China in health much improved. Mr. Davis under date of 12th of January writes: "I write to let you know that we are all getting along very well at Soochow, and our missionary work goes on as usual."

From Greece we have intelligence as late as the 13th of February. Mr. and Mrs. Sampson had returned to Athens, to remain there for the time being at least. He is needed very much both at Volos and Athens. The annual report of this Mission, published in our present issue, will be read with interest. We received specimen copies of the two Greek papers published by the Mission at Athens, which are remarkably well executed as to the printing, and from the caption of the articles we judge that they are well adapted to the wants and circumstances of the whole Greek field. It is a fact worthy of note that a considerable number of these papers have been ordered through our office by the different colleges in this country, to be read in connection with the study of ancient Greek. Dr. Kalopothakes is the editor of these papers, and we judge that the work is performed with decided ability.

We have sundry late letters from the Indian Country: one from Mr. Reid, at Spencer Academy, of the 17th of February; one from Rev. W. J. B. Lloyd, at Bennington, of the 7th of January; one from Rev. John P. Turnbull, at Good Land, of February 20th; one from Mr. James Dyer, of Eagletown, of the 25th of January; one from Rev. C. J. Stuart, of Philadelphia, Red River county, Choctaw Nation, of February 20th; and one from Rev. J. C. Kennedy, of Green Hill, Choctaw Nation, of the 22d of February. Mr. Kennedy mentions that a large number of Choctaws had removed from the neighborhood of Green Hill under the impression that the place had become sickly, and in consequence the number in attendance upon the school and church had been much diminished. At all of the other stations the missionary work was going on as usual, except so far as it had been interrupted by sickness and inclement weather. Missionary.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States

Will meet in the Second Presbyterian church, Louisville, Ky., on the third Thursday (15th day) of May, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M. The opening sermon is to be preached by the Rev. T. E. Peck, D. D., the Moderator of the last Assembly.

The undersigned Committee on Commissions, will be in attendance at the Lecture Room of said church, on Wednesday, the 14th of May at 8 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of enrolling the names of Commissioners.

JOSEPH R. WILSON, Stated Clerk,
WM. BROWN, Permanent Clerk.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. R. M. Baker, of LaFayette, Ga., expresses his gratitude for a box of clothing from the church of Rev. Dr. Van Dyke, of Brooklyn.

Revs. Messrs. Lacy, Leps and Wilhelm are actively engaged in holding meetings in the churches in various parts of Greenbrier county, West Va.

Rev. William Stoddard, of Cumberland county, Va., will preach the Baccalaureate sermon at the commencement of Hampden Sidney College, in June next.

POINT PLEASANT, BLAND COUNTY, VA.—A church is to be built at Point Pleasant, to be known as a Presbyterian church, but open to all Christians. Dr. William E. Hoge has consented to pay the whole cost, and give us what he is wishing to assist, time to pay what they choose. —Central Presbyterian.

ROCKBRIDGE BATHS, VA.—Rev. C. W. Humphreys writes March 31st: "As an item of church news, I write to state that I am conducting a series of meetings at a school-house, on the border of my congregation, and that up to this time, six professions have been made. There are many yet deeply interested about personal salvation. Private conferences have been the method employed, and it has been successful in both keeping down excitement and leading inquirers to Christ. God's Spirit has evidently been moving on many hearts. I shall continue the meeting while the Spirit stays."

Rev. S. F. Tenney, of Crockett, Texas, reports: "All the churches in the southern part of the Presbytery of Eastern Texas are supplied now, except the church of Orange, in the town of Orange, Orange county. It was organized last year and has yet but few members but with fair prospects of growth. Orange is an important lumber town on the New Orleans and Houston Railroad and on Sabine River. I understand that a fair support can be raised there for an acceptable minister who is unmarried or has a small family. There is also a good prospect for building a house of worship soon if they but get a minister. Will not some brother who is soon to graduate at the Seminaries regard this call to a very needy and important field?"

The Presbyterian church of Thibodeaux, La., are trying to raise means to build a parsonage. They are helping themselves and ask others to aid them. Address Mrs. M. K. Fulton, Thibodeaux, La.

Rev. Dr. H. M. Smith, editor of the South-Western Presbyterian, has been delivering lectures in the First Presbyterian church of New Orleans on the "Monuments of Egypt and the Exodus of the Israelites." The New Orleans papers praise the lectures very highly.

The address of Rev. Granville T. Story is Mount Carmel, Miss. He has taken Covington county, Mississippi, as a missionary field.

Rev. S. M. Neel, of Shelbyville, Ky., assisted by Rev. W. E. Detler, of Bloomfield, are conducting a very interesting religious meeting. Seven of the baptized children of the Church have been received into full fellowship, and the interest is increasing.

The post office address of Rev. W. H. Verner evangelist of Brazos Presbytery, has been changed to Velasco, Brazoria county, Texas.

Rev. J. H. Moore has been elected to the pastorage of the Third Presbyterian church, of this city. In connection with his labors in this church he will supply the pulpit of the Park Mission chapel, and will assist the pastor of the Second Church. Mr. Moore last Sunday terminated his connection with the Portland-Avenue church, of which he was the pastor elect, and which has prospered while he has been supplying its pulpit. Mr. Moore thus enters on a wide field of usefulness, which will afford him abundant occupation, and will, we trust, yield abundant fruit under his ministry.—Christian Observer.

We learn that the church served by the Rev. J. P. Briscoe, near Bristol, Tenn., was burned on Sabbath morning, March 23d. The house caught fire in the early part of the morning service. The congregation escaped without loss of life, and saved the seats, library, chandelier, windows, etc. The building was erected about five years ago.—Christian Observer.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church of Laurens, S. C., have very nearly secured the erection of a new Sunday-school room.

Rev. Dr. J. J. Bullock, of Alexandria, Va., recently elected Chaplain of the United States Senate, is connected with the Presbytery of Chesapeake.

It is reported in Richmond, Va., that the State, that Rev. Dr. Hoge has received a call from a Philadelphia congregation.

GENERAL.

A postal card from Rev. R. H. Wills brings intelligence of the death of A. Nicholson, an aged member of the Methodist Protestant church in Winston. His death occurred last week in Yadkin county, and his remains were interred at Kernersville.—Central Protestant.

The Orthodox Quakers of Baltimore open their places of worship daily, and their most effective preachers address the congregations.

The Episcopalians will have an organ to be called the Southern Churchman in Richmond, Va., after April 15th.

NORTHERN.

Gleaned from exchanges:

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. Dwyea's church in Brooklyn is wrestling with the question, How to provide for a debt of $80,000.

The Northern Presbyterians of Austin, Texas, have re-erected the old building in which Rev. Dr. Daniel Baker formerly preached and call it the Daniel Baker Chapel.

The Rev. Edward M. Deems of Longwood, son of Rev. Dr. Deems of New York, has been appointed chaplain to the Woodruff expedition, the floating college, which is to circumnavigate the globe. It is understood Mr. Deems has accepted.

The Rev. Louis Mezawaeanayans—Louis Left Thunder—once a hostile savage but now ordained Presbyterian minister of the gospel of Christ, is pastor of a church at Buffalo Lake, Dakota, consisting of fifty-five members, all of them full blooded Dakotah Indians.

BAPTIST.

A new Baptist church in Saline Valley, Kan., was lately ruined by wind.

The Baptists have started a Quarterly Review, edited by Rev. J. R. Baumes, D. D., and published in Cincinnati.

Rev. Dr Howard Malcolm died in Philadelphia a few days since, in his eighty-first year.

Miss Mary S. Betts, who died recently at New Brunswick, N. J., has set a good example. Instead of leaving her property in the form of legacies she gave it all away before her death. Among her gifts are the following: to the Reinsen avenue Baptist church in New Brunswick, of which she was a member, $1200; to the Baptist church at Cortland, N. Y. $1000; to the Baptist church at Asbury Park, N. J., $600; to the Baptist Home Mission Society, $500; to the Baptist Missionary Union, $1500; to the Young Men's Christian Association of New Brunswick, for the purpose of building a chapel $2,000.

LUTHERAN.

Twenty-four Lutheran ministers died in the United States during the year 1878. Their ave-age was a fraction over fifty years.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

The Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, Mass., is in a very prosperous condition. Important additions are to be made immediately to its already beautiful group of buildings. By the gift of John A. Burnham, Esq., of Boston, a refectory is to be built with accommodations for 100 students. Mr. Lawrence will shortly enlarge the dormitory so as nearly to double its capacity, and work has been begun on a new and picturesque house for the Dean, the Rev. Dr. Gray, within the Seminary grounds.

Dr De Koven, the warden of Racine College, was buried after an elaborate Ritualistic service. He was "habited as a priest," and laid in the coffin with "a clasped crucifix on his breast." There were three celebrations of the holy communion between 7 and 9 o'clock in the morning. Processional chants were sung in the chapel and at the grave, and when the services were closed Sisters Margaret and Sarah, of Kemper Hall, led in prayer by the new made grave.

MORAVIAN.

The annual statistics of the Moravian Church in this country for the year ending December 31st last show a total membership of communicants 9,407, a gain of 36 during the year; including non-communicants over 13 years old and children, the total membership reported is 16,-236, a loss of 27. Five hundred and thirty-two persons were baptized during the year, 456 were confirmed; the number reported "received and readmitted was 479. Two hundred and forty-four members died, 428 were dismissed, and 563 were excluded and dropped from the roll. The number of Sunday school scholars is estimated 11,517.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Second Congregational Church of Omarga, Ill., organized only a month ago, has since added twenty members to the original twenty six. The baptism of four was by immersion.

Placing two Latin crosses on the roof of the First Congregational church at Fair Haven, Conn., and painting the same emblem upon the inside walls, have caused so much controversy that they have been removed.

METHODIST.

The Methodist Book Concern of Chicago has sold forty thousand copies of the new Methodist Hymnal since its issue in August last.

The Methodist Missionary Society have made arrangements for missionary work in the interior of Africa. Mr. Osgood, who is now in Africa, will locate a mission post somewhere in the interior, and Miss Mary A. Sharp will soon leave this country for work there.

A meeting was held at the Simpson Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, to discuss the itinerancy question. Addresses were made by the Hon. Enoch L. Fancher and the Rev. David H. Wheeler, D. D., and resolutions were adopted declaring it to be the sense of the meeting that a modification of the present limitation of pastorates to three years is essential to the best interests of the Methodist Church.

The new edifice of the old Common Methodist church at Lynn, Mass., cost, including site, eighty-five thousand dollars, was re-opened, and before the building was dedicated the entire indebtedness was secured.

A revival in the Methodist church at Weedsport, N. Y., resulted in the conversion of about one hundred persons. Mrs. Van Cott spent between two and three weeks there, and the pastor, in reporting the revival, puts it in the following: "Notwithstanding hor hallelujahs, God was with her and with us."

GENERAL.

An evangelist by the name of Haskell is creating great religious fervor in Illinois. He is only partially educated, and unsectarian, but in such demand that Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist clergymen invite him to fill their pulpits. He preaches three times a day, and appears to know the Scriptures by heart.

The American Board of Foreign Missions is to receive the largest gift ever made to foreign missions—provided lawyers do not break the will of a Mr. Otis, lately deceased. He leaves for missionary work something between $500,000 and $900,000. Already the Secretaries foresee the danger, and are warning the churches not to diminish their contributions lest the work be hindered or embarrassed.

SECULAR NEWS.

A famine is prevailing in Northeastern Brazil and 27,000 persons are said to have died in two months past.

Switzerland has gone back to capital punishment for capital crimes.

John W. Covington, Esq., of Richmond county, who was severely wounded by the late railroad accident on the Carolina Central Railway, is about and steadily though slowly improving.

Gen. J. M. Leach, formerly member of Congress from North Carolina, fell in Washington City, a few days since, and broke his leg.

The frosts of the past week are reported as having been severe and damaging in various parts of the State. The Charlotte Observer says: "Fruit is nearly all, if not all, killed. All vegetables out of the ground, except advanced peas and lettuce, suffered a like fate. The plants and the fruit buds were found in many instances frozen stiff, although the atmosphere has been usually dry for four or five days past. The general impression seems to be that so much of the wheat as has jointed will be almost totally destroyed. The oats could not have suffered to a considerable extent, and comparatively little corn and no cotton is up in the country. Farmers are quite gloomy over the prospect." Around Wilmington the damage was very great. All early vegetables killed except the most hardy.

Gen. Robert Ransom, in charge of Neuse river improvement, says it is progressing very favorably. He expects, with the appropriation made, to render the river navigable to boats of suitable draught, as far up as Goldsboro bridge, nearly the entire year.

The new tar law, requiring that article to be sold by weight under penalty of five dollars for each offence, has gone into operation in Wilmington.

After the 1st day of May it will be unlawful to sell any spirituous liquors within three miles of Back Creek (Presbyterian) church, within two miles of Christ (Episcopal) church, Unity (Presbyterian) church, Oak Grove (Methodist) church, "Luther's Chapel," and Prospect (Presbyterian) church.—Carolina Watchman.

The cold snap has been very severe through the South generally. In Norfolk the thermometer fell to 28 degrees. In Georgia, in many places, it is said, the potatoes, cucumbers, beans and tomatoes are entirely killed or seriously damaged. The fruit crops around Atlanta were ruined.

Madame Elizabeth Patterson Bonaparte, relict of Jerome Bonaparte, died in Baltimore last week.

The Western Railroad has been consolidated with the Mt. Airy Narrow Gauge Railroad. Julius A. Gray, Esq., of Greensboro, was elected president of the consolidated company, which takes the name of the Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley Railway. L. C. Jones, Esq., who declined nomination for the presidency, was elected chief engineer and superintendent, and all the old officers of the Western Railroad were re-elected. Work is to be vigorously pushed.

Two cases of yellow fever were discovered on board U. S. steamer Plymouth, when about three hundred miles east of the Bermuda Islands. The vessel had yellow fever on board last fall but had wintered in Boston harbor and been fumigated thoroughly though she was not thereby rid of the germs of the fever.

The Daily News' correspondent at Alexandria says: "The employes of the Government are still evincing a threatening spirit. Sixty officers and men of the Khedive's postal steamers to-day (Thursday) made a demonstration in consequence of the non-payment of their claims, but were quieted by promises of the Director General of the Post Office."

The new Quarantine Board for the District and Port of Wilmington has been organized. Dr. J. C. Walker is Superintendent of Health; Dr. W. G. Curtis, Quarantine Physician at Smithville; and Dr. T. F. Wood, Secretary of the Board. The quarantine regulations to guard Wilmington from infection from abroad are very strict.

CHANGE OF FIRM.—Col. J. L. Brown and J. H. Weddington of Charlotte have bought out the entire interest of Weddington & Allen in the hardware business of the latter at Charlotte, and the business will be continued under the firm name of Brown & Weddington, at the old stand of Brem, Brown & Co. The partners will be glad to see their old friends and customers and will serve them on liberal terms.

It would be hard now for Col. Brown after an exceedingly busy and pecuniarily successful life to retire from active business so we are not surprised to see the above announcement.

The people know the gentlemen who are represented in the new firm, and any commendation from us would be superfluous.

A DESIRABLE ARTICLE.

We verily believe that it would be rendering any family a very great service to introduce into it Kitto's Cyclopedia. This Cyclopoedia is the work of John Kitto, D D, F. S. A., author of the "Pictorial Bible," the History and Physical Geography of Palestine, and editor of the Journal of Sacred Literature, etc., etc.

It is arranged expressly for Sunday School Superintendents, Teachers and Bible Students, and embraces a complete and authentic description of all the characters, customs, countries and events mentioned in the Bible, and those connected with them in Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, Grecian and Roman History. Including the period of over four hundred years between the Old and New Testaments, to which are added many valuable tables, and the products of the latest researches in Biblical literature, together with the knowledge gained by the explorations and discoveries of eminent travellers. The whole illustrated with numerous cuts, maps and full page engravings from the best authenticated models and designs that antiquarian research and ancient monuments can produce.

By special arrangement we can furnish this work well printed and bound in cloth, with the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN one year for $4 50—or to any new subscriber, or any one sending us a new subscriber, at $4 00 for paper and cyclopoedia. Publishers price is $4 50.

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

☞No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

In Winston, of scarlet fever, March 23d, GEORGE CALVIN, only son of Henry L. and Mary E. Graves, aged six years and ten days.

The child's sickness lasted two weeks, and the promise of recovery was fair until a few hours of the end. Little Calvin was a child of the covenant, and it seemed good to our Father in heaven to take him early to himself—good for the dear boy—good for the stricken household and sorrowing friends.

"Will not that joyful be,
When to meet us rise and come,
All our buried treasures home,
When our arms embrace again,
Those we mourned so long in vain?"

PASTOR.

Christian Advocate please copy.

VICTORIA W. OVERCASH died in Statesville, October 26, 1878.

More than a common interest attaches to the life and death of this little child. She was born blind at least to all appearance, but after a year or so, she could see a little better, and continued to see a little better every year, and when she was dying, could for the first time see distinctly.

She was a bright and happy child—was familiar with the child's catechism, many verses of Scripture and hymns which she loved to sing.

Her death was comforting to all who witnessed it. When asked if she understood what the minister said who prayed for her, she answered, "Yes he prayed for me to go and be with Jesus." In the morning before her death speaking of her condition she said, "I think I will die to-night." And as she grew weaker towards evening, asked, "Do you think I am dying." Shortly afterwards she clasped her little hands together and said: "Jesus is blessing me now. I can die any time now."

"None but a parent e'er can tell
How hard it is to part
With the sweet child they love so well
The treasure of the heart.

Great God! our wandering footsteps guide,
That we may faithful prove!
Help us to cross death's chilling tide
And meet our child above."

JAMES MONTEITH was born in Cabarrus county, March 19th, 1833 and died in Statesville, January 5, 1879.

He lived for a while in Arkansas. At the opening of the war he entered the Confederate army and followed its fortunes to the end. He received no injury in battle, except a mere scratch, but came out of the service with ruined health.

He was a very modest man, and his true worth was not known except to them who were intimately acquainted with him. He was a man of fine judgment and firm principles—an excellent neighbor an earnest Christian. He died with a good hope and faith fixed on Christ.

Every reader of this paper can have free one month's subscription to our Illustrated Magazine of choice literature, LEISURE HOURS, by sending eleven cents to pay for mailing the premium that goes with the magazine, viz: a pair of Easter Cross chromos. THE OFFICIAL REPORT
General Assembly.

At this time I desire to make known to our Church that the official report of the next Assembly will be published on a plan different from any heretofore adopted. Dissatisfied, as all must have been, with the published report of the last Assembly—the only one at which I have had the honor to act as official stenographer—and dishonored by the marring of work painfully and conscientiously performed, I have obtained from the other members of the Assembly's Committee appointed over the business, their hearty assent to publish the report of the next Assembly upon my own responsibility; and thus freed from many restrictions by parties exempt from liability to the Assembly, and from a method which prevented me from making my last report as complete as I desired, I hope by a plan of my own, not only to satisfy my own judgment and conscience, but to provide the Church with (what it has never enjoyed) prompt intelligence of the proceedings, and a complete verbatim report of the debates of our next Assembly. Details will be published in due time.

FOR THE FAMILY.

World's Help.

The world is brighter for women fair,
For the tender eyes and the flowing hair.
With its glory rare;
For the ripe-red lips that can smile and sing.
For the touch of grace on each lowliest thing,
Like the breath of Spring.

The world is better for women brave,
Who stand with the Master, strong to save,
By each sin-wrought grave;
Who walk with their tender feet the way
That is weary and rugged, day by day,
For a torn soul's stay.

The world is nobler for women true,
Who carry the freshness of morning's dew
At the noon's high hue;
Who see, with their clear soul-vision, far
To the glory that shines where no time can mar,
Like the changeless star.

The world is stronger for women pure,
Who shine in their sphere, serene and pure
From all false allure;
Whose snowy palms are not shamed to fold
Over hands that are rough and stained and cold,
With a saving hold.

The Fairy Wishing Cap.

BY ANNA F. BURNHAM.

"Well, you may call it the 'Fairy Wishing-Cap,'" said papa, who believed in giving enticing names to his stories.

"O-ee!" said Lily, with a little gurgle of delight. "That's a kind of story that I like!"

"The Fairy Wishing-Cap," said papa, "and it was 'once upon a time.'"

"That's right," said Lily, approvingly.

"Once on a time a little boy lived in a happy home in the country. He was a very discontented little boy, always wishing for something he hadn't got."

Lily looked up anxiously at this juncture.

"Are this story got any morills to it? Because that's a kind what I don't like!"

"Always and forever wishing," said papa, who was used to interruptions from Lily. "But his wishes, like those of most of us, never amounted to anything, which was not so great a misfortune after all. For he wanted such queer, useless things—useless, that is to a little boy like him.

"There was a beautiful green place by the side of a lilac clump, where little Jan used to go after school to learn his lessons. A grassy place, all lovely with dandelion stars, and sprinkled thick with the pale, purple blossoms of the lilacs.

"One day Jan went out here and studied till he fell asleep. When he woke up the stars were shining and everything had a strange, enchanted look in the soft moonlight.

"'What a lovely place to live in always!' thought little Jan. 'I wish—'

'(It was midsummer night, you know, when wishes come true, according to all the fairy books that ever were written.)

"'Better not,' said a silvery little voice that seemed to come from the very heart of a lilac tassel which had been nodding knowingly at him for full five minutes.

"Jan did not trust himself to speak, but waited with open eyes and ears. And presently a tiny fairy, all blue and gold, with eyes like baby violets, slid down a ladder of mist and moonshine and stood before little Jan, who opened his mouth wide enough to swallow her and all her fairy train.

"'You are sleeping under my lilac,' she said, in the sweetest voice that ever belonged to a fairy.

"'Indeed, I meant no harm,' stammered poor Jan, very much confused.

"'Oh, it's no harm!' laughed the fairy. 'I'm glad you like to come here. But I have power to grant all wishes spoken on this night, and under my lilac tree. And you are very fond of wishing!'

"The fairy looked so arch and loving that little Jan's courage came back, and he said,

"'Yes, I am very fond it. I like wishing better than anything else in the world—except having. I wish—'

"'Wait!' said the fairy, lifting a tiny forefinger. 'I can give you only one, so don't wish foolishly.'

"'What shall I do?' said poor Jan. 'One can't tell till afterward whether a wish is foolish or not.'

"The fairy stepped forward as she spoke, and took a lovely rose-colored cap out of her pocket and fitted it on Jan's head. How such a big cap ever came out of such a little pocket Jan could not imagine any more than you or I.

"'That will help you to choose,' said the fairy.

"'Will my wish be sure to come true if I have this on?' asked Jan.

"'No, just the opposite. If you want your wish to come true you must take it off. Whenever you think you have found the one wish that is better than all the rest just put on your wishing-cap. Then wish—it won't come true; but you will see, as if you were looking in a fairy glass, just what would happen if it did come true.'

"'How nice that is!' said Jan.

"'I'm glad you think so,' said the fairy. 'Now don't be foolish. When you are sure you have found the right one, wish three times in the same words, and I give you the word of a fairy it shall come true. Remember, you have only one, and it will keep.'

"Jan felt something cool and sweet on his forehead; he caught a vanishing gleam of a blue-and-gold fairy ascending her ladder of mist; he heard a soft rustle of wings in the heart of the lilac blossom, and stood up, rubbing his eyes and feeling very much as if he had been sound asleep. He would have certainly thought so if he hadn't known! There was a dewdrop on his forehead in just the place where the fairy had kissed him, which helped the illusion.

"But there was the wishing-cap, he couldn't deny that.

"Jan found that his new possession put an end to the thousand and one little wishes with which he had tormented himself and his friends. He no longer wished for some magical way of learning his lessons. He would never waste such a splendid wish on that, when by a little industry he could easily master them without. So with a score of others.

"Once he thought he would like to be a sailor and sighed for 'a home on the billow,' but a half hour under the wishing-cap convinced him that a sailor's life was not what fancy painted it.

"Later, when the question of college came up, lazy Jan had a vision of the joys of a traveler's life, and dreamed wistfully for a while of its delicious vagabondism. But one glance in that fairy glass disgusted him with the picture of an ignorant old man sitting in the midst of an inheritance of books; wandering through famed galleries which he could not appreciate; meeting scholars of whose language he had not learned the alphabet. So that wish was unspoken.

"Suddenly his desires took a new turn. Jan would be famous! Surely, the dreadful wishing-cap could have nothing to say against that.

"But it showed him a life of lonely effort, gladdened only by gleams of appreciation; days and nights of toil and solitude; years of waiting and poverty. Jan, though a bright young fellow enough, was not enough of a genius to be willing to accept the lot of one, even with its rewards.

"Jan all this time was growing older. He was a minister now, trying to live on half a salary, and he thought very often what an exceedingly pleasant thing riches might be. He even went so far as to say once, 'I wish I were rich!' but he had his wishing-cap on, and of course it didn't come true.

"Instead, he saw himself (as if it were in a dream) suddenly rich and living in a splendid house, full of all manner of beautiful things, with no more need to scrimp and worry. It was all very pleasant; but he noticed that the handsome chandelier was not half as cosy as the little centre table lamp in the shabby home parlor, and the 'registers' all over the house had the effect to scatter people. He liked better a cheerful fire which gathered them all in a happy circle. Wondering at the stately stillness of the new home he found that the children had been banished to a far off nursery.

"Jan hesitated a long time over this wish. How very hard it was to choose!

"'This can't be the one best wish,' said Jan at last, taking off his cap and looking into it as if he were reading his fortune. 'I should like to be rich, but where there is only one wish—!'

"And foolish Jan—without once thinking to consult the cap again—shut his eyes and wished, actually wished 'the one best wish,' three times in the same words:

"'I wish for a happy home and loving friends!'

"Then he opened his eyes and looked around. He had the word of a fairy, you know. And, sure enough, the wish came true. There was the 'happy home'—but just as it had always been! Five or six merry children played about him with racket enough for half a dozen; and, from the low rocker opposite, his wife looked up at him with happy, smiling eyes.

"Seems to me your story pieces out your sermon," observed Di, shrewdly.

Papa only laughed.

"And he wished for ereer kind of fings, I fink," said Lily.

"Why, what would you have wished for?" asked papa.

"A coop-la!" replied Lily, undaunted by sermon or story.

"What became of the 'wishing-cap'?" asked Dely.

"Oh!" said papa, "that's the fun of it. People will never believe that he had one. They call it a 'thinking-cap,' and say I am in a 'brown study.'"

"Oh!" said Lily, "you're Jan, papa! That story's a weal frog!"

Praying and Doing.

"Bless the poor children who haven't got any beds to-night," prayed a little boy just before he lay down on his nice warm cot on a cold, windy night.

As he rose from his knees, his mother said: "You have just asked God to bless the poor children; what will you do to bless them?"

The boy thought a moment. "Why, if I had a hundred cakes, enough for all the family, I would give them some."

"But you have no cakes; what then are you willing to do?"

"When I get money enough to buy all the things I want, and have some over, I'll give them some."

"But you haven't enough money to buy all you want and perhaps never will have; what will you do to bless the poor now?"

"I'll give them some bread."

"You have no bread—the bread is mine."

"Then I could earn money and buy a loaf myself."

"Take things as they now are—you know what you have that is your own; what are you willing to give to help the poor?"

The boy thought again. "I'll give them half my money; I have seven pennies, I'll give them four. Wouldn't that be right?"—Exchange.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Flower Culture.

In flowering plants it is well known that an over supply of nutriment will cause an evolution of leaves at the expense of the flowers, so that what would have been flower-buds are converted into leaf-buds; or, the parts of the flower essentially concerned in reproduction, viz., the stamens, and pistils, are converted into foliaceous expansion, as in the production of double flowers from single ones by cultivation, or the futile florets of the disk in composite species, such as the dahlia, are converted into the barren but expanded florets of the ray. And the gardener who wishes to render a tree more productive of fruit is obliged to restrain its luxuriance by pruning; or to limit the supply of food by trenching around the roots. During the time of rapid growth, when all the energies of the plant are concentrated upon its individual structure, the reproductive system remains dormant, and is not aroused until the diminished activity of the nutritive functions allow it to be exercised without injury to them.—Housekeeper.

Shell Heaps.

In a volume of ethnological papers—recently issued by the government as part of the series recording the progress and researches of the Geological and Geographical Survey—is recorded, among other matters of interest, Mr. Dall's examination of the shell heaps of the Aleutian Islands. These shell heaps, extending over tracts of many acres in extent, exhibit three layers. The lowermost consists principally of shell and spines of an Echinus, such as is still eaten raw by the natives. Considering that there is but little to eat of these animals, it can be easily imagined how great a number it takes to feed even a single family; yet so vast is the accumulation of their remains that Mr. Dall reckons 2,000 years for the duration of the earliest period of inhabitation of the islands by wandering coast folk of very low culture; this he calls the "littoral period." Immediately over this deposit lies a layer in which bones predominate, showing a change of life, or the arrival of new tribes subsisting on fishing, but probably eating their fish raw, a habit indeed which prevailed largely till lately, for the old men ascribe the diseases which have afflicted modern generations to the pernicious habit of cooking food. It is remarkable, however, that Mr. Dall finds no trace whatever of the use of fire till the close of this second, or "fishing period," as he names it. Improvements in weapons, etc., took place, as the specimens show, and in the upper or mammalian layer the remains found, with their harpoon heads, skin dressers, ivory tags for skin boats, lip ornaments, etc., indicate the condition of a population of hunters and fishers up to the highest level of the Esquimau or Innuit race, to which the Aleuts are supposed to belong. Mr. Dall's conclusions, if sound, have an important bearing on the development of civilization, so that his evidence from the Aleutian shell heaps deserves careful sifting. In another paper he discusses the origin of this Esquimau or Innuit race, which he agrees with Dr. Rink in considering as the outermost wave of population driven up to the northern coasts from the more hospitable central of North America. Here he joins issue with Mr. Markham's issue of their migration from Asia, at the same time pointing out that his question is that of whence the Innuit last came, not the replete problem of the absolute origin of the American races, probably from the Old World.—Scientific American.

Walter Scott's Patriotism

Scott, antiquarian as he was, felt the force of the reaction in which nearly all his contemporaries participated. Almost every line of his writings is intensely national. But there is the broadest distinction between the nationality of Scott and say the nationality of Campbell. There is hardly a line in Campbell to show that he is a Scotchman. "Ye mariners of England that guard our native seas;" and "England sent her men of men the chief;" "Now joy, old England raise, for the tidings of thy might;" "Steer, helmsman, till you steer our way by stars beyond the line; we go to found a realm, one day like England's self to shine," are a few examples of the many which might be quoted to prove that, in Campbell's verse, his individuality as a Scotchman is almost merged in his nationality as an Englishman. But Scott, on the contrary, never forgets he is a Scotchman. "It is the harp of the North" which he desires to waken. It is of the old times and old manners, before "a stranger filled the Stuarts throne," that the latest minstrel sung. He cannot avoid the passing wish that "Flodden had been Bannockburn." The hero of his first novel is an Englishman, but an Englishman who, amid Scotch surroundings, strikes a blow for Prince Charlie at Prestonpans. This distinction between the two authors was the inevitable consequences of their different dispositions. A Scotchman who was always looking back was sure to dwell on the old rivalries of the Scotch and English; while a Scotchman who was always looking forward was as certain to remember that the thoughts and interests of the two nations had become identical. Scott, to the end of his life, was never able to free himself entirely from the old Scotch feeling. George IV., indeed, won his heart, but then George IV. put on a Stuart tartan in Edinburgh. The only occasion on which Scott seriously attempted to interfere with politics was on the attempt of Parliament to extend to Scotland a measure of currency reform which it was applying in England.

The intense love of his own country, which is perceptible in all of Scott's novels, accounts, however, for much of their beauty and much of their popularity. He saw Scotland as no one had seen it before. Up to the time at which he wrote there was no general taste for scenery. It is a striking observation of a forgotten writer, which has been reproduced by Mackintosh, that "there is no single term in Greek or Latin for prospect." "So recent is the taste for scenery," wrote Mackintosh on another occasion, "that a tour through Great Britain, published in 1762, speaks of Westmoreland as remarkable only for wildness, notices Winandermere only for its size, Ulleswater for char, and at Keswick passes the poor lake entirely." There is hardly a line in Burns to show that he had any appreciation for the grander features of his native land; his most exquisite imagery is taken from objects found in lowland as well as in upland—a mountain daisy, a mouse, a field of poppies. Scott, on the contrary, forgets the daisy in looking at the bolder features of the landscape. He is the Turner among poets. His heroes and heroines move among the lovely valleys of his native land, or sail along the sublime coast of western Scotland; but they are only the accompaniments to the landscape, the figures in the foreground of the painter.—Spencer Walpole.

Cultivating Roses.

I have for several years cultivated a few choice roses. Last spring I added twenty to the number, and nearly all of them I set out in three and four-inch pots. In June I plunged these into the soil of my flower-garden. Two of my old roses and three of my new ones, however, were planted directly in the soil. All these roses were of the ever blooming sort. One of the three new roses that were set in the ground, and only one, grew more luxuriantly and bloomed more abundantly than those in the pots. It was that charming rose, Bon Silene. It gave me six roses in midsummer, and then a new shoot sprang up from the roots, grew very rapidly, and put forth three buds; and a branch put forth two more. So in the autumn I had five roses (eleven in all) on that tiny bush. After potting and removing to the house in October, I let it rest a few weeks, and then cut off nearly all of its leaves. From the shoot referred to I removed every one. At this time, two weeks later, there are vigorous shoots, more than an inch long, with buds already peeping forth where I cut off the leaves.

Several years ago I was forced to strip my bushes of their leaves, not knowing then how otherwise to get rid of the aphis; though I have since proved the virtues of hellebore. Soon after thus despoiling the plant, it would repay my harshness by putting forth new shoots at the leaf-joints, crowded with buds. Some people are so careful of their barren rose plants that not a leaf must be cut off, not a branch pruned, so that they have nought but the unsightly bush to care for; whereas, if they would cut down the old wood, they might be rewarded by a new growth. A good rich soil is quite as essential as pruning; also moisture and sunshine. I have seen people who became discouraged because their new rose plants dropped their leaves. No matter how green the stalk, they exclaim, "My rose bush is dead;" and by neglect they soon kill it. Had I pursued the same course, several of my choice plants, that yielded lovely roses two months after setting out, would have been a failure. So long as there is life in the stalk there is hope that it will put forth and bud.

INCONSISTENCIES OF CHRISTIANS,

AN APPENDIX TO WORLDLY CONFORMITY.

MR. EDITOR—No office is more odious than that of censor-general. He who assumes it ought to be very exemplary in his own conduct. But with this admission, which is readily made, it is contended that the exposure of a fault and the detection of an inconsistency may, and always ought to, be made in the spirit of deep humility and of pure and exalted charity. Sin is so mixed up with all that we do, is so disastrous in its consequences, and so unworthy of a rational and immortal soul, that the sight of a fellow creature involved in its ruin, and of a fellow Christian pollnted by its indnlgence, may well excite the deepest sympathy. At the same time we are all so frail, so exposed to temptation, and so blinded by self-love, as to strike it in the highest degree proper to look much to our own hearts and conduct, and with great caution, great tenderness and great humility to say anything in relation to the faults of others. It is with such views that the writer approaches the subject announced in the title, and while he would freely and honestly, yet affectionately, point out any inconsistencies of his Christian brethren, he would bear in mind the humiliating truth that, if a Christian at all, he is "less than the least of all saints," and not worthy of a rank among the teachers of divine truth.

There are but two kinds of inconsistency, and they are of a directly opposite character, that will be pointed out in this paper, and that the writer may not be misunderstood he will express himself as cautiously and as explicitly as possible.

1. Christians are often inconsistent in setting up particular abstinences as tests of religion, and in making use of particnlar duties as commodities by which to purchase indulgences not exactly compatible with self-denial. An illustration of the first of these remarks is to observe that many professors of religion will not frequent the circus, the theatre, the ball room or any other place of public amusement. And in this we most conscientiously believe they are right, as we have elaborately shown in two former articles on "Worldly Conformity." Such scenes are no places for a Christian—they do not suit him, and he should be ashamed to be found in them. But then they are wrong in concluding that because they do not indulge in such amusements therefore they are Christians. The premises do not justify the conclnsion, because motives that do not possess any religious quality whatever may prevent this sort of indulgence. One man, for instance, may wish to establish a character for strict and rigid self-denial; such a character will raise him in the estimation of his church and the community; it will give him more influence and further his views and projects in the world. In respect to this man the abstinence in question really proves nothing more than that he loves his reputation and his interests more than he loves this sort of pleasnre. Another man is constitutionally and habitually grave; these light amusements are not to his taste; instead of relishing such gay sins they only disgust him, and he therefore turns from the nonsense of the stage, the horse laugh of the circus and the trippery and folly of the ball-room with loathing and contempt. Here, again, the conclusion fails; for the fact only proves that he has no taste for this sort of life, not that he perceives the beauty of holiness and delights in it. It is deplorable, then, if a professing Christian relies on the negative evidence, to establish his right to the tree of life and to a part in the inheritance of the saints. And the case is yet far worse if this distaste to mirth and gaiety is used as a compensation for sins of a graver cast and more suited to the taste and habits of the professor. What shall he thonght of one who "would not see a play for the world" and yet will every day take a morning dram and three or five drinks of stiff grog dnring the day, and with all the gravity in the world is barely not drunk? Or, what is to be thonght of one who will fly from a ball-room, as he would fly from excommunication, and yet drives as hard a bargain as any devotee of the world, and draws his purse strings with as mnch rigor as the veriest miser, or makes over all the money to his wife and when applied to for the payment of an honest debt declares he has not a cent in the world, while he hardens his heart against all the calls of Christian charity and public spirit? Those who pursue such conduct give occasion to many to say, "True, we are not of the strict sort, we know that we are sinners, and yet we would not do for the world what some who call themselves Christians do every day." Surely, no mistake is more egregious than that, when men "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel."

2. The other inconsistency is one that may be regarded as the very opposite of this: that is, when Christians make some particular duties the commodities by which to purchase indulgencies not exactly compatible with self-denial. Such Christians are most commendably just in all their dealings, highly liberal in their sentimonts, and sometimes, at least, ready and williug to give freely for the snpport of religiou; and these comprehend the whole range of their Christian feelings, and the whole extent of their Christian coudnct. Bnt if they are just to men, they may still rob God; if they are kind to others, still they may be as indulgent as they please to themselves. Thus they substitute a part of a Christian's dnty for the whole, and cry out against all who are not equally liberal with themselves as strict purists, as morose and rigid. These are the people who dread, as the unpardonable sin, beiug "righteous overmnch," and interprot the caution of the wise man as though there were real danger of loving God too fervently, serving him too faithfully, seeking communion with him too eagerly, or too zealously endeavoring to promote his glory in the world. These are they who think it a mark of weakness "to make such a fuss about religion," and had rather go to any other excess than to an excess in religion. With them the doctrine of self-denial has become obsolete and however it might have been in old times, now they are sure that their wise and beneficent Creator gave them passions and desires that they might be fully gratified; and gratified they shall be, let ministers and zealots say and do what they please. Of conrse, with these Christians, every attempt to exercise discipline in the church is an assanlt on Christian liberty—an assumption of power that onght to be resisted. They are inconsistent, then, because,

They are the champions of liberty, and yet will tolerate no opinions bnt such as agree with their own;

They profess to be disciples of Jesus Christ, and yet make a mock of those who urge on them the obligation to "deny themselves and take up the cross";

They hope for heaven and all its enjoyments, while they "love the world and the things of the world," and plead "the liberty wherewith Christ has made them free" as the reason why they should be laid under no restraints;

They have universal charity and rely on it to cover the multitude of their offences, yet they "cannot bear those rigid, strict, austere mortals" who would cut them off from all the pleasures of life;

In a word, they serve one master and hope to be rewarded by another; they "live after the flesh" and expect to be treated as those who "through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body."

Such are the two classes. Who of our readers fall under either of them? Let us all pour ont the prayer of the Psalmist: "Search us, O, Lord! and try our hearts, and see if there be any evil way in us, and lead us in the way everlasting." D. L.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

THE BAPTISM OF SAUL.

The baptism of Saul, on the occasion of his interview with Ananias, was not ritnal baptism,

I. Because water is not mentioned; and we have no right to suppose or infer that water was used, unless the circumstances recorded in connection with the transaction, plainly indicate the fact. The word of God lays infinitely more stress upon, and speaks more frequently of, the real and effective baptism administered by Jehovah Himself, than of that baptism which is a symhol of the first, and administered by man. The cases of baptism with water, in the Christian dispensation, where water is mentioned, are only two, viz.: the baptisms of the Enuuch, and of Cornelius and the company collected in his house. There are a few more undispnted cases of baptism with water where water is not mentioned, such as the baptisms of certain in Samaria, among whom was Simon Magus; Lydia and her household; the Jailor and his household; the twelve disciples found at Ephesus; and Chrispus, Gaius and the household of Stephanus. On the other hand, there are several phases of the baptism which God administers, especially of the baptism indicating the regeneration of the soul, and the various different effects of the larger measures of the Spirit's influences. I will give the following examples: Matt. 20: 22, Christ's baptism into penal death; verse 23, His disciples' baptism of suffering for His sake; Mark 1:4, the baptism of repentance, into the remission of sins; Luke 3:16, John's allnsion to Christ's baptizing with the Holy Ghost, and with fire; Acts 1:5, Christ's promise to His Apostles that He would baptize them with the Holy Ghost—fulfilled on the day of Pentecost; Acts 11:16, the baptism of Cornelius and others with the Holy Ghost; Rom. 6:3, baptism into Christ and into His death; 1 Cor. 12:13, baptism into one body; 1 Peter 3:21, baptism which is the answer of a good conscience toward God; 1 Cor. 10:2, baptism into Moses.

Since Paul lays such stress upon the baptism of the Holy Ghost which alone binds the soul to God and to eternal life, as to say that there is bnt one baptism as well as hnt one Lord and one faith; and since the various phases of that one baptism are alluded to so much more frequently than the outward symbolic ordinance; and since water is not named in the mention of that one baptism, it is not reasonable to suppose that Saul's baptism in Damascus was ritnal baptism, as if there were no other baptism; when water is not mentioned, and his being filled with the Holy Ghost, which is elsewhere called baptism, is mentioned.

2. This could not have been a case of baptism with water because Ananias was not authorized to administer such baptism. It is the received opinion of the several Churches of Christ that none hut an ordained minister of the gospel has the right to administer the ordinance of baptism. And the form of government of the different Church organizations is professedly derived from the history of the Church as organized by the Apostles. Now, if Ananias, who was only a private member of the Church, if he was yet a member of a regularly organized Christian Church at all, had a right to baptize Saul, then any private male member of the Church may administer the ordinance; unless to Ananias was given on this special occasion the extraordinary right to do this thing by a specific call of the Lord.

3. And this brings us to the third reason why this baptism could not have been the ritual ordinance. There is no record that Ananias was specifically designated by the Lord to administer it. According to the record, there were only two things, in reference to Saul, he was sent instrnmentally to accomplish, and the administration of the ordinance of baptism was not one of them. The purpose for which he was sent to Saul, is contained in the following words which he addressed to Saul: "Brother Saul, the Lord hath.... sent me that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost." The two things which were to he done to Saul were his restoration to sight, and the bestowment of a larger measnre of the Holy Ghost, that filling with the Holy Ghost which, when bestowed upon the other Apostles, was called baptism. Is it on record that these two things were done? It is said that Ananias laid his hands upon Saul, while he revealed to him the purpose for which he was sent, "and immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales, and he received sight forthwith, and rising, was baptized." If this baptism was the ponring upon him of water, and not the filling him with the Holy Ghost, then it is no where stated that one of the things, and the most important one, was done which Ananias was sent to do, while it is stated that he did do a thing which he was not sent to do.

4. That this was baptism with the Holy Ghost, and not with water, is still farther apparent from the fact that on this occasion Saul was made an Apostle, and all the other Apostles had received on the day of Pentecost the special baptism of the Holy Ghost to qnalify them for their work. Ananias said to Saul, "Thou shalt be a witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard." Upon the fact that he was such a witness Paul afterwards vindicated his claim to be an Apostle. His beiug filled with the Holy Ghost on that occasion, that is, his baptism with the same baptism, with which the other Apostles were baptized, constituted his investiture with the office and powers of an Apostle. It is important to note that this peculiar and extraordinary of the Spirit upon the Apostles, was not only declared to be necessary to fit them for their work, bnt was also called by our Lord a baptism. He said to them, "Tarry ye in Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." When this promise was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, it is not said in so many words that they were baptized, but it was said that they were filled with the Holy Ghost, which was the same thing. And when Saul was made a witness for Christ, an Apostle, it is not said in so many words that he was filled with the Holy Ghost—although this was the main purpose for which Ananias was sent to him—but it is said that he was baptized, which is the same thing. But it was not the same thing if the baptism was ritnal baptism.

5. The language of Ananias to Saul proves that this baptism was the extraordinary baptism of the Holy Ghost. "Rising, baptize thyself, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Now it is not lawful for a man to administer to himself the ordinance of baptism. Therefore this could not have been baptism with water. If it be objected that neither could Saul baptize himself with the Holy Ghost, I answer that he had the same power to do this, that he had to wash away his sins. Of course, he could do neither, efficiently. Nothing is more clearly taught in the Bible than the inability of a sinner to perform spiritual acts acceptable to God, while at the same time the obligation is laid upon him to perform them.

Christ said even to His true disciples, "without me, ye can do nothing." Sinners are represented as deaf, blind, dead, that is totally depraved. Yet the command comes to them, hear ye deaf, look ye blind, arise from the dead, make you a clean heart. These commands are precisely of the same natnre as the commands, "baptize thyself, and wash away thy sins." But the means by which the necessary power is obtained, is also indicated in the same sentence, in connection with the commands—"calling on the name of the Lord." Saul, as powerless to open the eyes of his soul as he was to open the eyes of his body, doubtless offered to God a prayer similar in nature to the prayer of the Psalmist, "Create within me a clean heart, O God." "Wash me." "Open thon mine eyes."

It is perfectly ovident to my mind that Saul, on the occasion allnded to, received, not water baptism, but the baptism which qualified him for the Apostleship. P. T. P.

THE ESSENTIAL QUALIFICATIONS.

"In spite of all the vast changes which have passed over the minds of men, the same qualities are still necessary to make a good and sincere scholar, a good scientific student, an efficient medical or legal adviser, an efficient spiritnal pastor. Simplicity, sincerity, love of goodness, and love of truth, and as powerful and as much needed in our day as they were in the days long ago, which formed the great professions and are still the backbone of society."—Dean Stanly.

RECOGNITION IN HEAVEN.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M. D.

Then shall I know even as also I am known.
—1 Cor. xiii:12.

When the days of youth are over,
And advancing time shall cover
Thick the brow with frosts of age,
Shall the scenes of youthful pleasure,
Which we now so fondly treasure,
Then no more the heart engage?

Go, and ask yon aged father,
If his heart no more can gather
Naught that time has overcast;
And how quick his eye will brighten,
As the gleams of bygones lighten
Vistas all along the past.

When the days of life are numbered,
And our spirits, disencumbered,
Shall have bid to earth adieu;
Shall the friends we love so dearly,
And the scenes we pass so cheerly,
Be not then remembered too?

O! methinks that home were cheerless,
And its joys could not be tearless,
Which in hope are held in store,
Were the loved who sleep in Jesus,
When from earthly ties he frees us,
To be met and known no more.

What ecstatic consolation
Could there be in isolation,
E'en in that celestial clime;
Were we, when we meet each other,
Not to know each friend and brother
Whom we here have known in time?

But there will be recognition,
And to memory full permission
To recall what was its own;
For to those at home in heaven,
Lo! the blest assurance given,
"We shall know as we are known."

THE DANCING QUESTION.

Every now and then some question connected with practical Christian life comes up for reconsideration, particnlarly in the matter of amusements. Just now the question concerning dancing, its good or evil influence, has come up for discussion, and newspapers in various parts of the country have taken up the subject, most of them condemning, rather severely, as secular journals might be expected to do, those who object to this form of amusement. It is well that such questions should be reconsidered from time to time, since, otherwise, people are apt to get into conventional ways of looking at them, and of all kinds of conventionality religions conventionality is the most dangerous.

It is time thrown away to argue with worldly people about dancing. Those who live in a wholly worldly atmosphere, whose spiritnal sensibilities have yet to be awakened, cannot possibly be expected to see the evil of that which which we deprecate chiefly on the score of its tendency to increase worldliness of spirit. They might, perhaps, be expected to see the injurious effect of late hours, precious time absorbed in utter frivolity, etc., etc., but "fashion" is so all-powerful with them that they seem insensible even to such considerations. But it is of no use to try to lop off branches here and there, when what is wanted is the power of a new life within. Bnt among those who profess to take Christ as their Master a new set of principles is brought into play. And therefore, it is by no means an unnecessary or unprofitable matter for discussion whether Christians, in encouraging the amusement of dancing, as with some there is a growing disposition to do, are, in the face of the distinct tendencies of the age, doing that which will tend to foster the life of Christ in the individual and in the Church, or the reverse. This, we hold, is the real issne, and on the answer made to it by the conscience, after seeking the wisdom which cometh from above, should depend the action of each individual Christian.

To the writer, at least, it seems clear that in the present circnmstances of society Christians can hardly encourage dancing in any form without the greatest danger—almost the certainty of encouraging its ordinary use and all associated therewith, however far this may be from their intention. Nay more, this amusement is like certain encroaching plants, which crowd ont by their exnberant growth all others in their vicinity. It may be predetermined that it shall occupy only the subordinate place of one of the amusements of the evening. It is pretty sure to encroach until it has crowded ont all others. It may be predetermined that there shall be no fast dances. Some guest expresses a desire for one, or the musician strikes up a waltz, and instantly all previous determinations are put to flight; and even if the hosts do succeed in keeping it within safe limits as to honrs or character, their example will be quoted far beyond what has been actually permitted. People easily forget distinctions which it is inconvenient to remember, and Mrs. —— will fortify herself in giving "a dance," because Mr. and Mrs. So-and So had dancing at their house, and "they are such good people, you know!" Then the guests at Mrs. So-and-So's cannot refuse to go to Mrs. ——'s "dance," for people cannot, without giving offense, decline invitations without some definite reason, and so it goes on, and the party that was meant to be so harmless, and that might have been harmless, had it no consequences, becomes the decoy duck to an amount of dissipation and frivolity which its givers would, if they knew it, be the first to deplore.

It may be said that it is very unreasonable, but then we live in a world of unreasonable people and must act accordingly. Christians at least must, if they are to "bear the infirmatives of the weak and not to please themselves." There might be an ideal state of society in which we might be able to use generally all good things, wine included, without abusing them. But how does the case stand with us here and now? We know that a young man may take a glass of wine in our house without any direct injury there and then. But we do not know but that the glass we encourage him to take may be the first step in a career of fast descending degradation. And so many of us prefer to be on the safe side, by refraining from offering what may be dangerous, even though we do not know that it will be so. At all events our influence goes to the side of temperance. And so the dancing which we think so harmless may be helping to bind in the numbing influences of worldly frivolity some young soul which might be open to the gentle call of a Savior's love, if these very excitements which we are encouraging did not "Fill hearts and brains, and will not let Heaven's harmonies come in."

And there are not a few divided households among us, as every minister knows, in which one of the heads cares only that the children be brought up to "succeed in the world," and the other, with much sorrow and many difficulties in the way, may be earnestly seeking to bring them up for Christ. Our example may be quoted—little as we should desire it—to weaken the hands of the Christian parent and strengthen the position of the worldly one who "cannot see the harm" of what the other objects to. And so in families, where some are earnest followers of Christ and others are still "of the world," our example in this respect may help to weaken the efforts of our Christian brother and sister to resist the encroachments of worldly dissipation, while it encourages in their frivolity those who, "being in pleasure are dead while they live."

These are serious responsibilities, bnt it is because we believe they are incurred by those who encourage dancing as an amusement, in the present circumstances of society, that we have thonght it worth while to refer to a subject we would willingly have let alone. The whole system of fashionable dancing among us, with its almost invariable concomitants of late hours, extravagance in dress, frivolity of tone, is, we believe, one of the greatest evils which the Christian Church has to contend with at the present time. Its life is deadened, through a large proportion of its members, its aspirations are quenched, its energies circumscribed, its words of faith and love sadly limited, its missionary enterprises starved, just because so much of its time, and money, and energy, and brightness and vitality are absorbed by this insidious form of worldliness. There are other forms of course, but with the most hopeful and important class of the Christian Church, its young people, this form is the most destructive. Only a certain amount of time and vitality is given to any one. If this is expended on objects not only useless, but positively injurious, how much can we expect for Christian work? The consequence is that those who engage in active Christian work are, with few exceptions, those who feel compelled, because lines must be drawn, to stand apart from such amusements altogether. And not only is the prevalence of this state of things an evil in a Christian point of view. It is so in an intellectnal one, since what an American secular writer calls the "perpetual whirl" seems to destroy all possibility of more rational enjoyment and all more rational and nobler tastes. It is so in an economic one, for we have ample testimony that to the extravagance which this form of amusement so profusely encourages, very much of our present commercial embarrassment is undonbtedly due. And, lastly, it is so in a physical one, since the late hours, the glare, the excitement, which are almost always associated with this amusement, make it anything bnt a recreation, as many a jaded and languid "next morning" fully testifies. Even our children's parties are spoiled by the intrusion of this amusement, with its accompaniments of kid gloves, fashionably extravagant dress, artificial manners, and elaborate suppers, which prematurely rob childhood of its bloom and simplicity; and parents who do not wish their children exposed to such influences are often obliged to deny them the pleasure of socially meeting their companions at all. Nor does the evil influence stop here. It goes on to the lower grades of society, always most ready to imitate the follies of their social superiors. The mistress who encourages dancing in her own house can hardly refnse to allow her servant to go to "dances" in her own set, and it is well known that these dances are a most fruitful source of demoralization among the lower classes.

Since, then, the extreme to which dancing is carried, is, from a Christian point of view, one of the greatest evils of the time, it is for each Christian to consider prayerfully, and so to decide which course is likely to be the wisest, looking at its influence on those about him, to discourage altogether an amusement "wherein is excess" (almost invariably), and some of whose phases are, to say the least, of doubtful expediency in themselves, or to make attempts to reform it, which, we fear, will be ineffectual and only too certain to be misunderstood as encouraging the evil itself. Let each be fully persuaded in his own mind. We should not desire to condemn any one who acts conscientiously. But it seems to the writer, at least, that the "total abstinence" policy is the safest for those who would keep themselves and those about them "unspotted from the world;" and that our greatest social benefactors in our present circumstances are those who set the example of Christian simplicity in our entertainments, and who take pains to show that even young people may meet together happily, healthfully, and profitably without having recourse to amusements of doubtful character at all.—Canada Presbyterian.

HEROISM IN THE HOSPITAL.

Private Fisher had remained through all his trials stout, fresh and hearty, interesting in appearance, and so gentle-mannered and uncomplaining that we all loved him. Supported on his crutches he had walked up and down his ward for the first time since he was wounded, and seemed almost restored. That same night he turned over and uttered an exclamation of pain. Following the nurse to his bed, and turning down the covering, a small jet of blood spurted out. The sharp edge of the splintered bone must have severed an artery. I instantly put my finger on the little orifice and awaited the surgeon. He soon came—took a long look and shook his head. The explanation was easy; the artery was imbedded in the fleshy part of the thigh and could not be taken up. No earthly power could save him. There was no object in detaining Dr.—— He required his time and strength, and long I sat by the boy, unconscious himself that any serious trouble was apprehended. The hardest trial of my duty was laid upon me; the necessity of telling a man in the prime of life and fullness of strength that there was no hope for him. It was done at last, and the verdict received patiently and courageously, some direction given by which his mother could be informed of his death, and then he turned his questioning eyes upon my face. "How long can I live?" "Only as long as I keep my finger upon this artery." A pause ensued. God alone knew what thoughts hurried through that heart and brain, called so unexpectedly from all earthly hopes and ties. He broke the silence at last. "You can let go——" But I could not. Not if my own life had trembled in the balance. Hot tears rushed to my eyes, a surging sound to my ears, and a deathly coldness to my lips. The pang of obeying him was spared me, and for the first and last time during the trials that surrounded me for four years I fainted away.—Interior.

A STRIKING INCIDENT.

An English actress, passing along a street one day, heard singing. She looked in at an open door upon a little prayer-meeting, and caught the words:

"Depth of mercy! can there be Mercy still reserved for me?"

She entered, listened awhile, then went away, but the hymn went with her. She became a Christian, and determined to leave the stage, but the manager would not release her from fulfilling her engagement. The last night she played with unusual brilliancy and at the close was called before the curtain. Her contract was discharged; she had no master now but Christ. Standing there, with clasped hands and streaming eyes, she sang:

"Depth of mercy! can there be
Mercy still reserved for me?
Can my God his wrath forbear,
Me, the chief of sinners spare?"

The audience was melted by the pathetic confession and plea, and many sought the same mercy.—Interior.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From the London Weekly Review:

The annual meeting of the Scottish Reformation Society was held lately. Principal Rainy, who presided, and other speakers earnestly urged the necessity for the country being aroused from its apathy in regard to the advancing position and strength of Popery in these islands, and to induce a watchful attitude with regard to it.

At a meeting of Welsh clergy at Carnarvon, on Tuesday, it was unanimously resolved to address a respectful remonstrance to the Bishop of Llandaff against the appointment of Dr. Vaughan and other clergymen inexperienced in the peculiar conditions of a Welsh-speaking diocese to the principal stalls in his cathedral, seeing more than three-fourths of the Nonconformist ministers who wield so much political and religious power in Wales teach in the native tongue.

There are now three periodicals in Britain devoted to the exposition and defence of the theory started by the late John Wilson, of Brighton, an old Kilmarnock weaver and Radical, according to which the English people are the descendants of the Lost Tribes of Israel.

Ground at Corbelly Hill, Maxwelltown, near Dumfries, has been staked off for the erection of a convent of the "Perpetual Adoration"—an offshoot from the convent of Le Sacrimentale" in Rome. The convent will be the first of its kind in Scotland.

The fifth annual meeting of the Christian Colporttage Association was held on Thursday afternoon last week at 7, Connaught Place, Hyde Park. There are now 63 districts occupied by the Colporteurs of the association. The total number of sales during the year were—15,782 Scriptures, 154,791 books, 150,719 periodicals, and 28,629 scripture-cards. The committee had reluctantly been compelled from failure in funds to relinquish the work carried on in public houses, but they hope that the liberality of friends will enable them to take up this work again. The cash statement showed that upwards of £6,000 had been received from sales during the year; the balance in hand at its close was £127 1s. 8d.

An extraordinary trial is taking place at Saarbuck. Three girls, daughters of agricultural laborers at Marpingen, a village in Rhenish Russia, spread a report that they had seen the Virgin in a neighboring wood, and this story being spread by the priests of the district caused thousands of persons to flock to the spot, where cures were pretended to be effected by the girls, who professed to have hourly interviews with the apparition. The Government, however, thinking that a political object was at the bottom of this movement, set on foot a prosecution against the parents of the girls, five village priests and six other persons. During the trial, which commenced a fortnight ago, one hundred and seventy witnesses have been examined, but the result is not expected to be known for about three weeks to come.

The Synod's Committee of the Presbyterian Church of England on Lapsed Presbyterians in England met lately. The Rev. Dr. White, the convener, presented an elaborate statistical report, showing, according to his calculation, that if the Scottish and Irish Presbyterians who had settled in England in 1841 and since, with their descendants, had remained true to the principles of their fathers, without reckoning any accessions from the outside world or other Christian Churches, there would now be in England 1,920 Presbyterian congregations instead of under 300, and in London 250 strong congregations instead of fifty weaker ones. The report was adopted, and will be presented to the Synod at its ensuing meeting in Regent Square.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The King of Siam has established a system of general education throughout his dominion and Rev. Dr. McFarland, formerly an American and Presbyterian missionary, has been appointed Superintendent of Public Instruction at a salary of $5,000 per annum.

A new chapel is being built twenty miles from the City of Mexico. Native Mexicans are doing the work themselves, and largely at their own cost.

The Duke of Northumberland has promised $50,000 and the Bishop elect of Durham $15,000 toward the foundation of the Roman Catholic bishroprio of Newcastle.

About 400 attentive hearers crowd the hall of the new Evangelical mission at Marseilles The work has been going on but a short time, and is considered by its promoters a great success.

It is announced in Ireland, as news that is warmly welcomed, that Princeton College has conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity on the Rev. William Johnston, of Townsend street church, Belfast.

The Rev. Bishop Fallows held an ordination service in Christ church, Toronto, Canada, on February 19th, and Rev. Joseph Brown, of the Presbyterian Church, was solemnly admitted to the Presbyterate of the Reformed Episcopal Church.

One hundred thousand dollars have been bequeathed to the Foreign Missions of the Free Church of Scotland by Dr. Hugh Miller, late of Broomfield, Scotland.

The Presbyterian Church of Canada is growing in the grace of giving. Last year its contributions to foreign missions for the western section of the church were $6,000 in advance of the previous year, and this year it is reported that they are in advance of last year's gifts.

In 1830 there were nine missionary societies working in India, and some 27,000 converts. In 1871 there were 318,000 converts, and to-day there are probably 500,000.

Protestant services are now regularly held in Havanna, in one of the leading hotels. They are open to any who wish to attend, and no molestation or interference is offered by the authorities of the city. The Rev. Mr. Kennedy is principally responsible for these services. He was sent to Cuba some time ago by the House of Bishops of this country. He is supported by the Cuba Church Missionary Guild of New York. In addition to these services, there is generally public worship on Sunday evenings on one or more of the English or American vessels in the harbor. The marines from the fort are free to attend these meetings. Besides those in the harbor of Havanna, similar services are held on vessels in nearly every port of the island where the captains and owners are favorable to it.

MISCELLANY.

Varley, Rev. Henry, with his new tabernacle at Melbourne, Australia, will have a large coffee-house in connection with it, where eatables will be furnished at a little over cost.

The Coffee Tavern Company in London has made its mark in the work of temperance reform. Fifteen coffee taverns have been opened, in which about 4,000 persons have signed the pledge. It is said that the coffee is well prepared and good to drink.

The expenses of the last International Exposition, at Paris, were 55,000,000 francs; receipts, 30,000,000.

Magazine property seems to retain some value in Great Britain, as we notice that Good Words and the Sunday Magazine have been sold to Messrs. Isbister & Co., London, for about $150,000.

By the Castle Garden statistics of the first three months of this year, there is an increase in the immigrant arrivals over the same period last year of 2,360. The total number of arrivals since the 1st of January is 10,888. The increase in the January arrivals is 581, in February, 286, and in March, 1493.

The thirteenth annual report of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals shows that the bequests to the society in wills amount to over $1,000,000. The society investigated 3,660 cases of cruelty during last year, making in all 16,857 since its organization. There were 882 convictions in 1878.

The political and social Eden of New England is New Fairfield, in Connecticut. The town instead of being in debt has money at interest. Within its limits it has no distillery, no grog-shop, no court house, no jail, no doctor, no lawyer, no constable, no policemen, no male negroes and only three paupers.

The Stickines, of Fort Wrangel, are casting gold rings, silver bracelets, furs, blankets, fish and labor into the treasury, to secure a comfortable house, where they may worship the true God. Let the Church of God, all over the land, come promptly and liberally to the help of these feeble ones.

A scheme is on foot to collect all the articles of value which the bed of the Tiber is supposed to contain. The golden candlesticks taken from the Temple at Jerusalem, and the gold and silver cups and ornaments which once decorated the palaces of Roman emperors, are imagined to lie beneath the Tiber's yellow mud. By means of drags it is thought all this buried wealth may be recovered and restored to form a national museum of extraordinary value. A committee of distinguished archæologists was appointed to consider the best means of fishing up the legendary statues, coins, and other articles, which for centuries have been covered by the sands of the Tiber. In making excavations for the foundations of the new theatre to be erected behind the Quirinal Hotel in Via Nazionale, an hermaphrodite statue of great value was found. It was perfect, with the exception of one leg, which was missing. The attitude of the figure was recumbent.

Make no man your idol, for the best man must have faults; and his faults will insensibly become yours, in addition to your own. This is as true in arts as in morals.

To love in order to be loved in return, is man; but to love for the pure sake of loving, is almost the characteristic of angels.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16, 1879.

THE NEW BOOK.

Our readers have doubtless noticed that we have had but little to say on this subject. A year ago we stated briefly our principal objections to the Book of Government and at the same time warmly commended the Book of Discipline. The objections then presented still have weight with us. They are: 1st that the Book teaches in effect that the ruling elder is not a Scriptural presbyter, and 2d that its teaching on the authority and work of the evangelist is in our view radically erroneous and defective. There are other and minor objections, but we would be willing to put them all aside if these two could be removed. As it is we would have greatly preferred that before adoption of the book the Presbyteries should have an opportunity to vote on the questions thus raised.

But our chief desire is—in the present state of the Church—to get this question settled and to get away from it altogether. More than all things also, we need now to have the mind of the Church turned to the practical working of our system. What can be done to increase our efficiency and bring us more into contact with the masses of the people? How can we get our congregations, officers and private members most fully engaged in working for the Lord? These are the most important and pressing matters, and they demand earnest, if not exclusive consideration. And the wisest thing our wisest men can do will be to bring all their wisdom to bear upon them.

Let the New Book be disposed of now; and then let all our stores of wisdom, experience and learning be made to contribute to the solution of these practical questions.

FIRST CHURCH, WILMINGTON.

On last Sabbath three persons who had been received into the membership of this church upon profession of faith in Christ, for the first time took their seats at the Lord's table. The services of the day were peculiarly solemn, and it is hoped that these gracious manifestations of the Spirit's quickening power are the precursor of his rich effusion upon the congregation. Two of the persons above mentioned received baptism, and in the afternoon six infants were solemnly dedicated to God in the same ordinance.

DEATH OF THE REV. JOS. D. PORTER.

The Rev. S. F. Tenney of Crockett, Tenn., sends the Southern Presbyterian the following sad news: "It pains me to announce the death of the Rev. J. D. Porter. He was on his way to Presbytery, and died by the roadside, alone, on the border of this (Houston) county. He left Alto last Thursday morning, March 27th, apparently well, but had gone only a few miles when he dismounted, taking off his saddle and lying down. Next morning he was found there dead, his horse still standing by him, two of his fingers clasping the bridle rein. From all the circumstances it is probable he died from apoplexy or heart disease. He was buried at Alto. A good and self-denying laborer has fallen in the harness."

REVIVAL IN CONCORD, N. C.

From the Concord Register we condense the following:

The revival at the Presbyterian church continues with unabated fervor. Up to this time about forty persons have sought spiritual conference with the pastor and his coadjutors. Last Sabbath the pastor preached two sermons to his people full of earnest, spiritual fervor. Their awakening influence was keenly felt.

The Rev. Mr. Thornwell has preached all nights save Sunday since we last went to press until Thursday night, when Dr. Miller of Charlotte filled the pulpit. His every effort was elegant and eloquent, full of spiritual life and marked by intense earnestness. His exhortation on Wednesday night (all his efforts have been exhortations rather than sermons) was one of the most happy spiritual efforts that ever fell from the lips of man. It was akin to inspiration, so impressed was it with the fervency of the Holy Ghost. The Rev. Dr. Miller preached on Thursday night. Language fails us to do justice to his effort. Words like these, full of intense admonition, dropped like blazing jaspers from his lips: "What wait you for? more conviction? There is conviction in hell, but there is no Savior there! Waiting to become better before you come to Christ? You are too wicked now to stay away from Him."

With all the spiritual favors with which Concord has been blessed the past two weeks it were impossible that we should not receive a blessing. The pastor has been ably assisted by the Rev. Mr. Heilig of the Lutheran church, Rev. Mr. Cole of the Methodist church, and Rev. D. G. Caldwell of the Associat Reformed church.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The article on Dancing to be found on first page was sent to us for publication, and we very willingly insert. It is a clear, dispassionate, sensible and therefore most forcible presentation of the subject. We commend it to earnest perusal.

One of those mishaps, so exceedingly mortifying, occurred to us last week. The articles of our correspondent "C. P. S." are always hailed by us with pleasure, and always greatly enjoyed by our readers. The last article we particularly rejoiced over as a gem of its kind, but a typographical error in the last line of the Bishop's Reply to Bonner's Ghost was ruination to the whole. We give the stanza correctly thus:

> Church maxims do not greatly vary,
> Take it upon our honor;
> Place on the throne another Mary
> We'll find her soon a Bonner.

War now between Chili and Bolivia. Nitrate works in Bolivia are conducted by Chilian capitol and owned by Chilians with understanding that they should be exempt from taxation by the Bolivian government for twenty-five years. The Bolivians disregarded the conditions and Chili has blockaded the Bolivian coast. The Peruvian government and Argentine Republic are called to the aid of Bolivia.

We are compelled by press of news from our Presbyteries and churches, for which news we are grateful to our friends, to leave out the marriage and obituary notices and other matter, this week. They will appear in our next.

REV. JOHN MONROE ANDERSON.

The Rev. John Monroe Anderson entered into rest at Mebaneville, N. C., a little before 12 o'clock Sabbath night, the 30th of March.

He was born in Lincoln county, N. C., Sept. 26th, 1821, and was therefore a little over 57 years of age. While he was yet an infant his father moved to York district, S. C., where he was brought up. In 1841 he was graduated with distinction in the South Carolina College, in a class containing unusual talent. Dr. Thornwell, then a professor, said to him on leaving, "Well, Anderson, you are going to study law, but I hope to see you a preacher yet."

After practicing law two years with the Hon. I. D. Witherspoon of Yorkville, father of the gentleman who now bears the name, he entered the ministry. His first charge was Ebenezer and Unity, where he continued to preach until 1853, when he was compelled to quit on account of his health. In the following year he was chosen president of the Yorkville Female College, an institution under the care of Bethel Presbytery. He filled this position with great success till the opening of the war in 1861, when, with characteristic ardor, he entered the Confederate service. At first he was engaged chiefly in establishing and attending hospitals. But he could not rest satisfied, and shortly entered on the more active life of a chaplain in the field.

He served in this capacity until the surrender, accomplishing a great deal for the temporal welfare of the soldiers.

In 1866 he was elected to fill the chair of Logic and Belles Lettres in Davidson College. Those who studied under him bear testimony to his arduous labors as professor and preacher; for in addition to his regular work he ministered during a part of the time to the neighboring church of Bethel. One of his students, who afterwards distinguished himself by taking a prize in the University of Virginia, attributed his success, in a great measure, to the drilling he got in logic in Professor Anderson's class room.

Again did his feeble body succumb, being unable to keep pace with his active mind. In 1873 he retired to the mountains, where, being invigorated by the climate, he began preaching again. A part of his time was devoted to the church in Wilkesboro and a part he spent as evangelist.

In 1876 he accepted a call to the churches of Mebaneville and Bethlehem, in Orange Presbytery. In this field, until called to his reward, he labored with unbounded devotion and consuming zeal. The people of his charge, which embraced the young men of the Bingham School, loved him with an uncommon love. During his months of illness any comfort they could command was procured him, and very often were his wants anticipated.

Mr. Anderson was no ordinary man. Had he been endowed with bodily strength sufficient to sustain his superior intellect there is no telling how much more he might have accomplished.

Early in life he was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Neal of Mecklenburg. Of their children three had gone before, and were waiting to give him a welcome home. His stricken widow and six others remain to follow.

He often expressed the wish that his last earthly Sabbath might end with heaven, and it was so.

> The voice at midnight came,
> He started up to hear;
> A mortal arrow pierced his frame,
> He fell, but felt no fear.
> Soldier of Christ, well done!
> Praise be thy blest employ;
> And while eternal ages run,
> Rest in thy Saviour's joy.

PRESBYTERIAL MEETINGS.

MR. EDITOR—The Presbytery of Mississippi met in the Presbyterian church of Port Gibson on the 3d inst., and was opened with a sermon by Rev. J. S. Shaw of Rodney, the last Moderator. There were present during the meeting eight ministers and six ruling elders.

Rev. C. A. Munroe of Crystal Springs was chosen Moderator, and Rev. C. W. Grafton of Union, Temporary Clerk.

The Temporary Clerk announced the death of the Stated Clerk, Rev. W. Burgess, and Rev. T. A. Ogden. Since the last spring meeting four ministers belonging to this Presbytery have died.

The standing rule allowing the Stated Clerk a salary of $25 was annulled.

Rev. J. Woodbridge was elected Stated Clerk and Treasurer.

The pastoral relation between Rev. John S. Shaw and Rodney church was dissolved.

The free conversation on the state of religion was unusually interesting, not only to the members of Presbytery but to the large congregation who were present. Special prayers were offered in behalf of particular churches and ministers and the baptized members of all our churches.

A committee on evangelistic work was appointed, with full power to employ an Evangelist to supply the many weak and broken down churches in this section.

"Calvinism is not dead" in Mississippi. The sermons preached by the brethren during the meeting of Presbytery, while free from a controversial spirit, were yet full of the grand old doctrines of the Divine Sovereignty and man's free agency, the final perseverance of the saints, total depravity, salvation by grace, justification by faith alone, &c.

Rev. D. A. Planck of Port Gibson and Ruling Elder J. R. Groom of Hazlehurst were elected commissioners to the General Assembly.

The New Book was adopted by a vote of eight against four. Last spring, I think, the vote was twelve against and only four in favor of the New Book.

At an adjourned meeting held on the 7th inst. Rev. G. T. Story was received into this Presbytery from the Presbytery of Central Mississippi. Bro. S. reports the vote on the N. B. R. in the Central Mississippi Presbytery as twenty for and six against it.

The place of next stated meeting of Presbytery is Wesson, Miss. C. A. M.

MR. EDITOR—Red River Presbytery met in Vienna church April 3d. Commissioners to the Assembly: Rev. C. Harrington, principal; Rev. D. A. Campbell, alternate, and Ruling Elder T. H. Morris of Shreveport, principal, and Judge E. M. Montgomery of Rayville, La., alternate. Vote on Book of Church Order: Yeas 5, nays 4, and one excused from voting. Rev. W. C. Dunlap was Moderator. The meeting was harmonious and pleasant, and adjourned Saturday night. All the ministers and four elders were present. J. Y. ALLISON, Clerk pro tem.

Presbytery of Potosi held the largest meeting for years. The Revised Book was adopted by a vote of seventeen to one—one excused from voting. Rev. Robert Morrison and Elder Samuel M. Green were elected Commissioners to the General Assembly; alternates, Rev. T. C. Barret and Hon. T. J. Johnson.

Louisville Presbytery. Rev. M. H. Houston was received from Presbytery of Abingdon. Rev. E. O. Guerrant was received from Presbytery of West Lexington. First church and Seventh and Chesnut street church were united, and Dr. Guerrant has accepted a call. Order was taken for his installation on the fourth Sabbath in April. Rev. J. K. Hitner was dismissed to the Presbytery of Ebenezer. He takes charge of May's Lick church. Rev. J. H. Moore declined call from Portland avenue church. A call from Third church, Louisville, for one half his time, was placed in his hands. The other half of his time will be devoted to take charge of Park Mission and to assist Dr. Robinson in Second church. Rev. Messrs. T. E. Converse and Ben. Helm and Ruling Elders Col. R. K. White and Joseph Logan were elected delegates to the General Assembly; alternates, Rev. Dr. Matthews and Rev. S. M. Neel and Ruling Elders Pat. Joyes and Dr. R. W. Murray. The Revised Book without debate was adopted by a vote of 23 to 2, excused 1. Rev. J. L. Stuart, missionary in China, by letter advised the Presbytery of ordination of Mr. G. W. Painter in charge of the boys school in Hangchow. The ordination was not regular and Presbytery referred the letter to the General Assembly.

Harmony Presbytery: Rev. J. G. Richards and Rev. D. S. McAllister and elders J. T. Hay and A. White as principals, were elected Commissioners to the General Assembly. As alternates Rev. R. D. Perry and Rev. E. H. Buist, and elders W. L. T. Prince and F. Wilson. Thirty-two votes were cast for the Revised Book and eight votes against it.

Presbytery of Western District rejected the new Book of Church Order. Six voted for the Book and eight against it. Full attendance of ministers, but only four elders present.

Columbia Presbytery: Book of Church Order rejected—ayes, six; noes, nineteen. Comissioners to General Assembly: Principals, Rev. W. J. Frierson and elder R. G. Rothrock. Alternatives, Rev. T. J. Rothrock and elder Thomas Gibson.

Transylvania Presbytery: Ten ministers and eleven ruling elders were present. Rev. Barbee Betts was received from the Presbytery of Ebenezer. The church of Bethel Union was dissolved. Kirksville church was added to the roll. Rev. Harvey Glass and ruling elder A. K. Denny were elected Commissioners to the General Assembly, with Rev. T. A. Bracken and ruling elder James H. Lapsley, alternates. A call was presented from the church at Nicholasville in West Lexington Presbytery for the pastoral services of licentiate, Russell Cecil now in Europe. Presbytery ordered call to be placed in his hands. The Revised Book was adopted by a vote of fourteen to seven. The Presbytery has heretofore voted against it.

Presbytery of Central Mississippi: Vote on Revised Book, twenty for and six against. Commissioners to General Assembly, Rev. T. L. Haman and elder Dr. E. R. McLean. Alternates, Rev. Dr. R. McInnis and elder Judge West.

Missouri Presbytery: Rev. John S. Grasty, D. D., and elder John C. Miller, elected delegates to General Assembly; Rev. W. W. Trimble and elder J. B. Henderson, alternates. Book of Church Order adopted by a vote of thirteen to three, excused 2.

Bethel Presbytery: Revised Book adopted, yeas, 22; nays, 5. Mr. J. C. McMullen ordained, and will shortly be installed pastor of Concord Church.

Ouachita Presbytery met at Monticello, Ark., on the third of April. There were present eight ministers and six ruling elders. Rev. W. H. Crawford was elected moderator, and Rev. E. M. Munroe temporary clerk. Rev. W. T. Howison, from Eastern Texas Presbytery, was received as a member of this Presbytery. Licentiate H. C. Moore, from East Hanover Presbytery, was received under care of this Presbytery, and ordained to the full work of the ministry, and a committee appointed to install him pastor over Hamburg and Calvary churches. One church was dissolved, and committees appointed to organize two new churches within the bounds of Presbytery, if the way be clear. Presbytery adopted the new Book of Church Order by a vote of ayes eleven to noes three. Rev. W. B. Crawford and Z. E. Kerr were elected delegates to the General Assembly, and Rev. J. M. Brown and elder Jo. Doby, alternates. Rev. E. McNair, D. D., was granted permission to labor without the bounds of Presbytery, until its next meeting. Presbytery adjourned to meet at Carolina church, at 11 o'clock a. m., Saturday before the third Sabbath in October, 1879. E. M. MUNROE, Temporary Clerk.

MR. EDITOR:—Presbytery of Knoxville met at London on the 3d inst. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. S. R. Preston, of Athens. THYATIRA AND BACK CREEK.

MILL BRIDGE, Rowan county, N. C., April 11th, 1879.

BRO. McLAURIN:—I take for granted you are always glad to hear good news from our churches. You may perhaps remember I wrote you we were repairing Thyatira church. Well it is now completed. We began work last June. The congregation made the bricks necessary to put almost a new foundation under one side, and repair other parts of the walls. It is now more substantial than ever it was, and much prettier. We were greatly assisted by a legacy left the Church by the late Dr. F. N. Luckey. As is usual the credit of carpeting, &c., belongs to the ladies. On last Saturday they met and put the carpets down. And I think I may safely say, what I ventured sometime since to prophesy, that I now serve two of the handsomest country churches in our Synod; and I may add they will compare favorably with many town churches. My communion at Back Creek takes place the 2d Sabbath in May, I will write you, provided there is anything of special interest. Yours very truly,

J. ALSTON RAMSAY.

ROCKINGHAM, N. C., April 10, 1879.

DEAR BRO.:—We had communion in the Presbyterian church at Lumberton last Sabbath, the 6th. Bro. Miller, of Monroe, preached for us with much acceptance and power. Two persons united with the church, making five since our communion in October last. Some of us feel encouraged with the hopeful prospects of our church there. Six persons have joined our church in Rockingham during the last year. We have communion here next Sabbath.

Yours, fraternally,

T. J. ALLISON.

A KIND DEED.

MR. EDITOR:—I desire to express, as far as words can do so, my deep gratitude to a number of my friends, both of the Presbyterian and of other denominations in Lexington for their generous and handsome expression of appreciation made to me and my household on the night of the 9th inst.

While we cannot requite their great kindness, we nevertheless know that "our God shall supply all their need according to his riches in glory by Jesus Christ"; and from their own rich and sweet experience they shall learn, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." ROGER MARTIN.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

The directors of this institution, in Prince Edward county, Virginia, held their annual meeting, on the 8th and 9th inst. There was a full attendance of the members of the board from each Synod, and much important business was transacted. The Seminary is in a hopeful and prosperous condition, both as to its educational efficiency and pecuniary interests. It has had fifty-four students during the year, and sends forth into active service a senior class, numbering eleven. On Tuesday night, an interesting lecture or address was delivered before the "Society of Inquiry" and a large audience by the Rev. B. Helm, our returned missionary from China. He presented in an impressive manner the claims of missions.

On Wednesday morning, the certificates of graduation were presented to members of the senior class by Rev. J. Henry Smith, D. D., of North Carolina, and then they were addressed by Rev. B. F. Marablo, of the same State. This duty assigned Bro. Marable by the board, was performed in a manner creditable to the speaker, gratifying to his friends, and profitable to the young brethren, who received his counsels. His theme was "The Dangers of the Ministry," and it was presented in its intellectual and moral aspects. He especially emphasized the perils of intellectual narrowness, error and indolence, while the danger of spiritual deception as to personal conversion was described as one to which the preacher was peculiarly exposed. The diction and rhetoric of the speaker were marked by good taste, his train of thought manifested vigor of intellect, and his earnestness of manner indicated a heart keenly alive to the welfare of his brethren, and the interests of Christ's Kingdom.

During the year past five thousand dollars had been added to the investments of the Seminary, and two hundred and thirty thousand dollars of its securities had been interest-bearing. Its income has been ample for meeting its yearly expenses, and the trustees felt justified in taking steps for having a substantial library building erected. A plan was adopted, a site chosen, a committee appointed to advertize for proposals to build and to superintend the construction.

The library has reached ten thousand eight hundred volumes, and requires a suitable building for its proper preservation and use.

The board adjourned about ten o'clock, Wednesday night, and on Thursday morning parted with regret from the families of College Hill, whose elegant hospitality they had enjoyed for several days. H. G. H.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, VA.

The annual meeting of the Trustees was held on the 8th and 9th of April, 1879, and this note is furnished the press in pursuance of their directions. Twenty-one of the twenty-four members of the Corporation were present. The following, among other matters were considered:

Number of Trustees—It is proposed, (mainly in consequence of the expense,) to reduce the number of Trustees; but the further consideration of the subject was postponed till the annual meeting in 1880. In the meantime the attention of members of the Synods of North Carolina and Virginia, is invited to this matter of grave importance.

Change of Session—The period of opening and closing the terms, and the length of time to be devoted to the pursuit of theological studies, engaged the attention of the Trustees at this and previous meetings; and due consideration was given to the action of the Synod of Virginia (see Minutes of Synod of 1878, p. 492.) As the result of the present deliberations, the attention of the Synod of North Carolina was respectfully called to this matter, and to a committee (Messrs. Kirkpatrick, A. Martin, E. Armstrong, of Virginia, with F. H. Johnston, H. G. Hill, and R. McDowell, of North Carolina) this question, of difficult solution, was confided, to bring in a careful report and minute for the meeting of the Trustees in April, 1880.

Mess Hall—It was determined to continue the mess hall for another year, referring however to the Faculty and Treasurer to act in the premises, as might be deemed wise. The system of messing is regarded as of doubtful expediency by some; but some of the students desire its continuance.

The Library Building.—Detailed orders for the erection of a suitable fire-proof building for the library, were given to a committee having charge of the execution of the instructions of the Trustees, and according to an approved plan and specifications of Architect Lynde. The Treasurer publishes that he will receive written proposals for the building till the 1st of June, at his office, at Farmville, Va. The Faculty, (Hampden Sidney, Va., being their Post office address,) or some one of them will answer preliminary inquiries till then, but contractors must inspect the plans posted in one of the lecture rooms. The location will be near Rev. Dr. Peck's house. Arrangements for temporary library rooms were made. Only one hundred and twenty-seven volumes have been added since April, 1879. The total volumes is about 10,800.

Valuable Donations.—Mr. W. D. Reynolds, of Norfolk, Va., has made the interesting and generous donation of three tablets, dug up among the ruins of Babylon and Nineveh, dating twenty-three to twenty-five centuries ago: also a dozen large sized (16 by 24 inches) cards, containing, each, six or more elegant photographic views of the ruins of the Seven Churches of Asia. The Trustees recorded their grateful appreciation of the liberality of Mr. Reynolds, who seems, while abroad, to have had the Seminary in his memory.

Certificates of having completed the course of study were awarded, by order of the Trustees, by Vice-President J. H. Smith (Dr. Read being necessarily absent) after an appropriate address from the Rev. Mr. Marablo, to the following graduates: W. B. Arrowood, North Carolina; W. C. Campbell, West Virginia; W. E. Cave, Virginia; T. P. Epes, Virginia; L. E. Scott, West Virginia; B. F. Thompson, Tennessee; J. H. Weaver, Tennessee; S. H. Weaver, Tennessee; J. H. Smith, Virginia; W. F. Cosner, West Virginia.

Rev. Mr. Helm, missionary to China, added to the interest of the Anniversaries, by a practical and earnest address on the great theme of Foreign Missions.

Rev. Dr. Martin delivers the address to the graduates in 1880. The next term begins on the 14th of August, 1879 and ends 9th of April, 1880. It is very important that students should arrive on the 13th of August, and remain till the last hour of the term.

F. N. WATKINS, Secretary.

FARMVILLE, VA., April 11th, 1879.

☞ Will the Presbyterian journals have the kindness to copy, as also the Annual Report which will be published hereafter.

The undersigned Committee on Commissions, will be in attendance at the Lecture Room of said church, on Wednesday, the 14th of May at 8 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of enrolling the names of Commissioners.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Leisure Hour, by J. L. Patten & Co., New York. Price ten cents, and fully worth it, we should say, to those who want tales and a variety of light articles, selected.

The Preacher and Homiletic Monthly for April certainly contains much that is interesting and much that is useful. First under the head of "Sermonic" the reader has twelve sermons from such divines as Drs. Buddington, Storrs, Hepworth, Carpenter, &c. Then there are "Reports in Brief from the English Pulpit," and numerous articles of a practical kind bearing on preaching; Sermonic Criticism; Queries and Answers; Suggestive Themes, &c., &c. $2 50 a year. Religious Newspaper Agency, New York city. Single number 25 cents.

A rapid glance at the American Agriculturist for April leads us to think that the present number is unusually interesting $1 50 a year. The NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN and American Agriculturist sent to any new subscriber for $3.

The Floral Cabinet, published by H. T. Williams, New York city, contains several articles specially pleasing to the ladies. We cull from it freely. Price $1 50 a year. Published monthly.

Sunday Magazine for May, with its usual choiceness and variety, is at hand. What a treasure of knowledge there is in even a single number of this magazine, and twelve numbers are furnished for three dollars. It is a miracle of cheapness, and certainly without a rival of its kind.

South Atlantic for March: The Death of Cynewulfe, by Wm. Hand Browne; Carmelita, W. H. Babcock; Jezreel to Nazareth; The Loveliest Christian; Eugene Aram; John Davidson's Wife; The Power of Woman; How African William Stopped Off; The Novel; Tempest, Paul H. Hayne; Mrs. Whitman; Recent Literature. $3 a year. Mrs. Cicero W. Harris, Wilmington, N. C.

D. Appleton & Co. of New York city send us Natural Resources of the United States. The title very aptly describes the contents of the book. It is designed to acquaint all, especially the young, with the immense natural resources and peculiarly great natural advantages in climate and other things of the United States. Questions are appended that the book may be used in schools.

From the same house we have another of the "Health Primers"—Baths and Bathing. Very opportune. It treats of the Physiological Action of Baths, The Varieties of Baths, Bathing Localities, The Uses of Baths, A Visit to a Bath. Square, 16 mo., price 40 cents.

Destruction and Reconstruction: Personal Experiences of the Late War. By Richard Taylor, Lieutenant General in the Confederate army. This book is worthy of a full and elaborate review, such as could only result from careful and critical reading. The slight attention we can give it at this time justifies us in saying that it is a charming book. The style is that of the freest and easiest conversation. The pen pictures of the statesmen and generals of both North and South are admirable. They represent these notables of course as they appear to Gen. Taylor, but despite the extraordinary number of classical allusions, they will in almost every case quickly bring the person portrayed before the reader of average information and intelligence. The short and sharp turning off of sentences, the point and pith, the snap and sparkle are more than stimulating; they exhilarate. To the full extent of their scope these "Reminescences" will rank with standard histories of the late war. D. Appleton & Co., publishers, New York.

The Sanitarian, a monthly magazine devoted to the preservation of health, mental and physical culture. April, 1879. $3 a year. A. N. Bell, M. D., editor and proprietor, and T. B. Corbally, M. D., associate editor. New York.

We would direct attention to the three leading articles, "The Relation of the Medical Profession to the State," "Milk with Lime Water as Food and Medicine in Nervous Disorders," and the editorial review of the meeting that considered the system of tenement houses in New York city on February, 28th.

Practical Elocution for the use of Colleges and Schools, and by Private Students, by J. W. Shoemaker, A. M., President of the National School of Elocution and Oratory. Philadelphia. 1878. $1 25, to teachers $1. J. W. Shoemaker & Co., Philadelphia.

A book of solid worth, by a teacher of twenty years' experience, who has tested the instructions here offered. To converse well is the germ and basis of effective oratory. This is Prof. Shoemaker's starting point. His discussion of conversation, principles of management of voice, articulation, modulation and gesture are thorough, clear and arranged well for practical drilling. The examples are copious and well selected. It must prove an excellent hand-book for teachers and private students.

Poems of Places, edited by Henry W. Longfellow. America: Southern States. 1879. $1. Houghton, Osgood & Co., Boston, Mass.

Another dainty volume of this series of "Poems of Places" in various countries. In its dress of brown, black and gold, with red edges, "Little Classic" style, it delights the eye and adorns the centre table. This volume is devoted to the Southern States, and embraces a wide selection of poems by Longfellow, Paul Hayne, Whittier, Randall, Mrs. Preston, Timrod, Simms, J. Barron Hope, John R. Thompson, S. Lanier, &c. Many pieces have reference to events of the late war, and express Northern as well as Southern sentiments. At first reading we felt that some of them had better be omitted. Yet it is well for each section of our country to see how the other felt, and then to rest with banished anger in the spirit of the beautiful poem, "The Blue and the Gray."

Boston Monday Lectures. Heredity; with Preludes on Current Events, by Joseph Cook. $1 50. Houghton, Osgood & Co., Boston. 1879.

This Boston lectureship is an unique literary venture. Since 1875 Mr. Cook has handsomely sustained himself before a vast cultured audience in Tremont Temple on abstruse themes, with evidently wide and profound scholarship. This volume on heredity precedes one on marriage, now in press. He assails the audacious lines of materialists, who hold that our necessary beliefs come from individual or race experience during development from their jelly-speck; that our moral sense is only the sequel to accumulation of nerve-tracks in the brain, and that intuition and conscience would have been different under other environments. With trenchant analysis, powerful logic, beautiful and apt illustration, nervous and impressive eloquence, the true theories and laws of heredity are exhibited in the light of latest biological, microscopic and metaphysical English and German investigation. God and the Bible as a Divine Revelation are, with Mr. Cook, supreme. And if our race is to be elevated in virtue and blessed power through hereditary inheritance of choice qualities by children from parents, it must be through obedience to clear laws of science, harmonizing with clear and immutable sanctions of God's Word. Violation of the hallowed laws of monogamy kindles a consuming curse for the world. The "Preludes" are vigorous and interesting handling of current topics of importance and interest, e. g., "The Future of American Poetry," "Agricultural Colonization of the Unemployed," &c.

MADAME BONAPARTE'S CLOSING SCENE.

The physician of Madame Bonaparte, who died last week in Baltimore, says:

"It was on Friday last she asked those surrounding to pray for her. Her attendants at once went to the Rev. Dr. Leyburn, of the First Presbyterian Church, as all were pleased that Madame desired to end her life amid the blessings of religion. And here," remarked the doctor, "I desire to correct an impression which has gone abroad that she was an atheist. She believed in a Supreme Being, but was skeptical as to the future life. She said to me many a time, 'Doctor, I was baptized a Presbyterian and shall die a Presbyterian.' She had been a great reader of the Bible, knew almost every passage by heart, because she said, it gave her a better knowledge of human nature. To say that others caused the ministers to call upon and pray for her is not true. They all well knew her imperious will, and would not have dared to do aught without her command. It was of her own free will that while on her death-bed she sought the comforts of religion.

"She was not like her father, William Patterson, who called a lady to his bedside to see how an infidel could die. On the contrary, not only did she kindly receive Dr. Leyburn, but also Dr. Leftwich, another Presbyterian minister. And while all knew that she simply believed in the Great Being, she would stand no cant, and had often denied that anybody on earth knew anything about the hereafter. She nevertheless often asserted in her sickness that she now adhered to the Presbyterian faith. When the minister had said, 'The blood of Christ washes away all sins,' she readily assented, and said, 'This is in the Bible,' and then asked Mrs. Clark to read the Scriptures to her. The minister quoting from the hymn, 'Just I am without one plea,' she once more assented, and turning to Mrs. Gwinn said, 'Yes, Christ's blood cleanses all our sins.' And as, in her lucid moments, she enjoyed the Scriptural readings, she appeared to have regained that stately look, that piercing intelligence which made her motions of assent to this or that passage exceedingly instructing to an observer."

Rev. Dr. J. T. Leftwich, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, has since confirmed the fact that when Mme. Bonaparte was called upon by him last, and was asked if she desired prayers to be read, remarked, "Yes." When asked if the prayers comforted her, she said, Yes." During the following night, Miss Gwinn heard her distinctly say, "The blood of Jesus, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin; that is in the Bible." These were her last intelligible words.—Presbyterian Weekly.

In the Bethel, New Orleans, recently there were three additions on profession of faith. They were of persons over fifty years of age.

The Presbyterians near Delaplane, Va., are taking steps to build a house of worship. There are about fifteen Presbyterians living in that immediate region.

It was Walnut Grove church building near Bristol, Tenn., which was destroyed by fire, as noted in our issue of last week. The fire resulted from a defective flue. The windows, doors, pulpit, stoves, &c., were saved, but the loss amounts to $2,000, and the congregation cannot rebuild without help.

A Sabbath-school mass meeting of the children of the Presbyterian churches in Louisville, Ky., was held on the afternoon of Sabbath, the 6th inst. Dr. Guerrant of the First Presbyterian church presided. Nearly one thousand children were present. Dr. Guerrant's, First church, reports having nearly doubled its Sabbath-school membership since January 1st. It has now an attendance of two hundred and twelve. The Second church, Dr. Robinson's, reports usual attendance of about one hundred and fifty, and the Third church averages eighty-five, but has at present one hundred and thirty-one. The Park Mission in charge of Dr. Robinson's church, numbers about one hundred and sixty, and the Broadway Mission one hundred and twelve.

Receipts from Columbia Seminary from March 11, 1878, to April 7, 1879, were $965.11.

Rev. Dr. James H. Nall, of Columbus, Ga., has received a unanimous call to Prytania Street church in New Orleans.

Rev. J. C. Buchanan, of Campbellsville, Ky., has received a call to Delhi, La.

The Presbyterians at Woodruff's, S. C., have let a contract for building a church, and the Associate Reformed expect to build in course of the summer—so says the Carolina Spartan.

The church of Dr. Van Dyke, Brooklyn, has sent Rev. R. M. Baker at LaFayette, Ga., a box of clothing.

Twenty-one persons have united with the church at Beloit, Kansas. Rev. W. H. Claggett has been preaching for them.

Rev. John S. Parks will accept a call as stated supply to Bolivar, Tenn., if his Presbytery consents. In the event of this relation being consummated, Park Avenue, Memphis, will be vacant.

The Staunton (Va.) Vindicator says: At the Second Presbyterian church, Friday night and Saturday morning Rev. Frank McCutchen preached two excellent sermons full of law and gospel. On Sunday Rev. J. E. Booker, the pastor, received six persons into the church, three on profession of their faith and three on certificate. Three children of a young couple who united with the church at the previous communion, were baptized. There have been ten addtions to this church since last fall when the ministrations of the present pastor commenced. This Sabbath was the occasion of the second quarterly, voluntary, offering towards the payment of the church debt. The sum contributed amounted to $175, of which $25 was from the Sunday-school, making a sum total of $1,350 contributed by this working little congregation for church purposes within the last nine months. A good record truly considering their numbers.

Rev. S. F. Tenny writes to the Texas Presbyterian: Rev. J. T. Paxton, recently from Missouri, is now supplying the churches of Augusta and Cochino, in Houston county, Texas, and the church of Moscow, in Polk county, besides preaching at one or two other points.

The church of San Augustine is made vacant by the death of Bro. Porter. The church of Orange, in the South-East, is also vacant. Who will come to stand in these breaches?

The Rev. J. H. Thornwell is again in the pastoral charge of Poplar Tent church, giving them the half of his ministerial labor.—Concord Register.

Rev. M. B. Shaw writes to the Southwestern Presbyterian: Last Sabbath I visited the Woodville church, which has been long vacant and, through death, without a session. Commenced services Friday morning, continuing twice a day until Sabbath morning. Had a most delightful communion; Brother Drake, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and his congregation uniting with us. After the communion a congregational meeting was held, at which two ruling elders were elected (Messrs. Hugh L. Davis and David E. Holt), and were ordained and installed. This little flock seems determined to rise up and build again the waste places. A subscription was raised sufficient to employ a minister at least the fourth of his time, and also a liberal contribution to Foreign Missions. A new spirit seems to have taken hold of the members, and I pray that soon they may have one to break unto them the Bread of Life regularly. Bro. McAllister was to have been with me, but was providentially hindered.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The verbatim report of the proceedings and debates of the next Assembly will be published by the Assembly's Reporter in a pamphlet to be issued after the final adjournment. The pamphlet will probably contain between two and three hundred pages, which will be about the size and style of the Missionary. Subscribers will also receive a briefer DAILY REPORT in the columns of the Louisville Courier-Journal, which will be sent during the sessions.

This method, besides its convenience to the reporter, will, it is believed, secure to the Church some advantages not heretofore enjoyed, among which may be noted:

(1) A TRULY VERBATIM REPORT OF THE WHOLE PROCEEDINGS. No debate, or part of a debate, no speech, will be left out. except as ordered by the Assembly, unimportant colloquys upon the order of business, and the like. The aim to make it as thoroughly verbatim as the Congressional Record, excepting useless and embarrassing minuteness in trifles. I hope to send out a finished work, such as I have never yet had the privilege to furnish.

(2) The pamphlet form will fit it for PRESERVATION AND REFERENCE; so that it will be a valuable contribution to the current history of the Church, telling to "the generation following" the various views expressed, the reasons moving our highest judicatory in its acts, and the arguments of the humblest as well as the most honored members without mutilation.

(3) Another advantage may be found in the ARRANGEMENT OF THE DISCUSSIONS. The chronological order will be abandoned—except in a brief preliminary diary—and all the proceedings upon any one topic will be given not by piece meal, but arranged under one head and on consecutive pages, with such reference to dates as may be needful.

(4) EARLY AND REGULAR INTELLIGENCE from the Assembly during its sessions, by means of the daily Courier-Journal—containing the report of its own corps of stenographers—which will be mailed from the office with the regular daily issue. That journal will doubtless receive a more careful transmission through the mails than has been given the Record. It also has the honor of having received by resolution "the cordial thanks" of the Assembly of 1870 for its accurate report.

Such is the proposal which I now have the honor to lay before the members of the Southern Presbyterian Church. Having been, without solicitation, and to my utter surprise, appointed official stenographer by the Assembly of 1876, I consider myself called by the Church to the work of providing the Church with a complete and trustworthy report of the manner in which her highest court exercises its jurisdiction. To fulfill this ministry is my ardent wish. But it must be perceived that the efficient aid of our ministers and members will be needed to give success to the attempt. I have ventured to trust to their appreciation of the undertaking, believing that they will take pleasure in furthering it, so that such a patronage may be secured this year as will warrant the continuance of the work hereafter.

In appealing for such co-operation, it here seems due to the Church as well as myself that I should plead a release from unjust blame with regard to the defects of the Record of last year. My connection with that Record was simply the duty of preparing the "copy"—no more. It has already been explained that, owing to the frequency and length of the sessions, that duty could not be performed till after the final adjournment. With the subsequent delay I had nothing to do; for I had completed my work and was at home more than a month before the last numbers appeared. And the report of some debates was omitted, not because I took that privilege, but because I was limited as to the quantity of "copy" that would be accepted, and that under such circumstances that I had little or no choice in selecting. This explanation, though necessarily brief, will be satisfactory. Such defects will not mar the next report; for having repressed the impulse to decline an arduous and unremunerative work followed by such mortifying results, I have obtained the right of using my own judgment in a duty for the proper discharge of which I am held responsible. Conscious of no voluntary dereliction, I feel that I have the right of appealing to the Church to sustain an attempt to finish the work which the Church itself has given me to do.

TERMS:

The verbatim report in pamphlet, with the daily Courier-Journal, will be sent postpaid for ONE DOLLAR—the same also without the C.-J. Any one who will send the money for five subscriptions, will be entitled, as compensation for the labor, to an extra copy, or may retain $1 50, and the same percentage on every additional copy. EVERY MINISTER IS REQUESTED TO ACT AS AGENT, OR PUT THE BUSINESS INTO SUITABLE HANDS. The same favor is requested of elders of vacant churches. The book will be mailed as soon after the adjournment as the additional time demanded by its form will permit—within three or four weeks—and earlier should the patronage warrant the employment of assistance. This pamphlet report will, of course, not appear in the religious weeklies. Subscriptions are to be sent to my present address, MIDWAY, KENTUCKY—in Registered Letters or Post Office Money Orders. P. O. orders must be PAYABLE at LOUISVILLE, KY.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT
OF THE NEXT
General Assembly.

At this time I desire to make known to our Church that the official report of the next Assembly will be published on a plan different from any heretofore adopted. Dissatisfied, as all must have been, with the published report of the last Assembly--the only one at which I have had the honor to act as official stenographer--and dishonored by the marring of work painfully and conscientiously performed, I have obtained from the other members of the Assembly's Committee appointed over the business, their hearty assent to publish the report of the next Assembly upon my own responsibility; and thus freed from many restrictions by parties exempt from liability to the Assembly, and from a method which prevented me from making my last report as complete as I desired, I hope by a plan of my own, not only to satisfy my own judgment and conscience, but to provide the Church with (what it has never enjoyed) prompt intelligence of the proceedings, and a complete verbatim report of the debates of our next Assembly. Details will be published in due time. G. L. WOLFE.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Comfort.

BY LYDIA M. MILLARD.

Say, Christian, art thou weary?
Why wilt thou yield to fear?
Though clouds are all around thee,
Thy God is always near.

What though to day is fearful?
To morrow may be glad.
Then why art thou so fearful?
O why art thou so sad?

There's always blue above thee,
Though heavy griefs may fall.
There's always One to love thee,
Thy Father smiles through all.

A Little Boy's Sermon.

"Eddie," said Harry, "I'll be a minister and preach you a sermon."

"Well," said Eddie, "and I'll be the peoples."

Harry began: "My text is a short and easy one—Be Kind.' There are some little texts in the Bible on purpose for little children, and this is one of them These are the heads of My sermon:

"First: Be kind to papa, and don't make a noise when he has a headache. I don't believe you know what a headache is; but I do. I had one once, and I didn't want to hear any one speak a word.

"Second: Be kind to mamma, and don't make her tell you to do a thing more than once. It is very tiresome to say, 'It is time for you to go to bed,' half a dozen times over.

"Third: Be kind to baby—"

"You have left out, Be kind to Harry," interrupted Eddie

"Yes," said Harry, "I didn't mean to mention my own name in the sermon. I was saying: Be kind to little Minnie, and let her have your 'red soldier' to play with when she wants it."

"Fourth: Be kind to Jane, and don't scream and kick when she washes and dresses you."

Here Eddie looked a little ashamed, and said, "But she pulled my hair with the comb."

"People mustn't talk in meeting," said Harry.

"Fifth: Be kind to Kitty. Do what will make her purr, and don't do what will make her cry."

"Isn't the sermon most done?" asked Eddie; "I want to sing." And without waiting for Harry to finish his discourse or give out a hymn, he began to sing, and so Harry had to stop.—Children's Record.

Jamie's Temptation.

It was a cold, blustering day Wind and snow were whirling round when little Jamie went forth to try and earn a few pennies for his poor sick mother and half starved brother In his hand he held some match boxes, and now and then, in a weak tremulous voice, he would cry, "Matches, please buy my matches" But people hurried by, handing their heads to escape the penetrating winds, and so took no notice of the poor, shivering boy.

"What am I to do?" said he, "here it is 'most noon, and I have not yet sold a single box. Mike will be crying for food, and mother not know what to get for him or herself either.'

Tears were ready to start to the poor boy's eyes, but he bravely crowded them back, while he watched each face of the passer-by in hopes of finding some lingering trace of pity. All, however, seemed careless and unconscious as they hastened on. So poor Jamie had but little spirit in lifting up his cry, "Matches, please buy my matches."

One street after another was threaded, but the crowded throng only rudely jostled him along. Once he ventured into a store in the hopes of catching a little warmth, and perhaps an opportunity of disposing of some matches. As he opened the door, oh, what a glow of heat met his shivering form! It seemed to at once impart new life to him. But alas! ere he could linger long enough to ask the clerks if they would buy any matches, a gruff voice called out:

"Youngster, what are you doing in here? Start off this minute. We don't want any ragamuffins or light fingers about us."

Jamie gave a startled look, and at once anger filled his heart. Words, too, were about to spring forth from his blue, pinched lips, but better thoughts restrained him; the angry feelings were checked, and he meekly turned and walked out of the store.

The rude, unfeeling man saw the restraint Jamie had put upon himself and felt somewhat abashed, but he merely muttered, "Well, anyhow, I can't have children and beggars coming in here all the time."

The clerks made no reply, while one with a kind, generous heart, wished he had bought a few matches from the poor, half-starved looking child.

More disheartened than ever, Jamie seated himself upon the curbstone. Cold, wearied and weak from the want of food, he felt as if he would like to fold his hands and close his eyes, never again to open them to all the trials, sufferings and sorrows of this world. Poor child! seated alone on the curbstone, you think not of the Friend from on high who is watching over you. But he sees you, though the pitiless crowd passes by all unconscious of your pinching want.

Of this true Friend Jamie had learned something at Sunday school. But now he felt forsaken of all, and bitter thoughts were stealing into his mind.

"Where is the use of my being honest, and trying to do right, I should like to know? Nobody will help a poor little chap like me. I'm only pushed about and called rough names."

And Jamie clenched his fist, and once more allowed angry feelings to get possession of him.

Just at that moment a richly dressed young lady, daintily tripping along, felt a blast of wind suddenly sweep around the corner. It almost blinded her, and as she raised her hand to draw down her veil she dropped her portemonnaie right near the curbstone where Jamie sat.

He held his breath, gave one look all around, then stretched forth his hand and quietly thrust it out of sight.

"That fine lady can do without her pocket-book," said he. "Besides, I was wishing so hard for some money, and how do I know but that it was intended expressly for me."

Ah, Jamie! some one is very near putting wicked thoughts into your head! Yes, indeed, the tempter came near, and seemed to urge Jamie to keep the purse, since no one saw it drop near him. But "a still small voice" makes his guilty heart beat, and puts better thoughts into his mind. Then he recalled the words he had learned at the Mission school only a few Sundays before, "Thou, God, seest me." They at once quelled the strife, and Jamie was free.

Not giving time for the tempter to again enter his heart the lad scrambled to his feet and darted quickly after the young lady. At one time he feared he would lose sight of her, the crowd was so great; but with watchful, eager eyes, he kept her in view, and finally reached, all out of breath, and too excited to utter a word. He could only clutch the lady's dress, and thus arrest her attention.

"What is the matter, boy? What do you want of me?"

"Please, marm, is this pocket-book yourn?"

"Why, yes, to be sure it is mine!" exclaimed the pleasant-looking lady, after searching for her portmonnaie. "How could I have been so careless as to drop it! What is that in your other hand?"

"Matches, miss; won't you please buy some?"

"Indeed I will, for you are an honest little fellow. As you seem to have but a few boxes I'll take them all,"

Opening the recovered portmonnaie the young lady took out a bill and handed it to Jamie.

"There; take that and run home and warm yourself; for, poor boy, you look half perished with cold."

The words were uttered in such a gentle, pitying tone that they cheered Jamie, and made him feel that after all the world was not altogether as cold and selfish as he had thought it.

No, indeed! The merciful Father had watched over the little wanderer, witnessed his struggles to do right, and made the generous hearted young lady his instrument in doing good. For behold, on opening the crisp bill Jamie found it to be five dollars. In all his life he had not handled so much money at one time. How his heart throbbed, and how his eyes glistened!

No longer feeling the cold, he ran home to tell his mother the glad, good news, then hastened off to obtain some food and fuel for them all. A portion of the money was reserved to set Jamie up as a newsboy, an occupation he had long wished to follow. He seemed to prosper in his new trade, and felt that it was all owing to his having gained a victory over himself in resisting angry passion and the temptations of the evil one.—Lutheran Observer.

A Prison Incident.

A very remarkable scene was presented in Auburn prison, a while ago, when Marie Roze-Mapleson, the well known prima donna, visited the institution and sang in the presence of nearly all of the inmates, embracing upwards of twelve hundred convicts. An incident of this character has occurred but once before, and that was on the occasion of the visit of Jenny Lind. A letter from one of the gentlemen present depicts the scene as extremely touching. On the arrival of Marie Roze, she desired to know if all the prisoners were present, and being answered in the negative by Keeper Wells, she requested that even those who might be in solitary confinement should, as a special privilege, be permitted to come into the chapel and join the other convicts in listening to the music which she proposed to sing. The request was accorded, and the poor fellows, some of them for the first time in many years, were permitted not only to look once more on the face of a beautiful woman, but hear again from an accomplished artiste the sweet notes that reminded them of the innocent days of youth. The chief selections of Mme. Roze were "Sweet Spirit, Hear my Prayer" and "The Sweet By and By," and the writer of the letter states that even the most hardened criminals were stirred to tears. After this the fair cantatrice made a tour of the institution, the prisoners meanwhile being retained in the chapel; and on her return she sang the old familiar air "Comin' Thro' the Rye." Meanwhile some of the most intelligent among the convicts had been permitted to prepare a testimonial of thanks, which was duly signed and presented to the lady. It closed with the following quotation:

"God sent his singers upon earth,
With songs of sadness and of mirth,
That they might touch the hearts of men
And bring them back to heaven again."

There can be little doubt that every one of these twelve hundred prisoners worked with chords in their hearts all that day and that the poor fellows in solitary confinement especially will for a long time recall and enjoy this fresh ray of sunlight.—Interior

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Fern Valley.

There is a wide field before the enthusiastic lover of nature for the indulgence of a passion for fern culture, if considerations of cost do not stand in the way. What, for instance, could be more delightful, where the necessary expenditure could be freely undertaken, than the creation under glass of a fern valley? Given a natural valley or gorge between parallel hills, and why might not the space from hill to hill be roofed with crystal, the roof supported at each end with pillars of stone, with glass between. Under such a covering, even if the natural features of the site were not of a nature to provide a home for ferns, masses of rock and a stream of water could be introduced, and, by a proper regulation of the temperature, the most delicate and beautiful as well as the most noble of the cryptogamic growths of the tropics would flourish, and a little fern world of wondrous beauty might be created. On the estates of the wealthy in numerous parts of these islands there is many a rocky glen or valley where the experiments could be tried If through the course of such a valley, to be thus domed with glass, a natural stream wound its way, on each side tree ferns could be planted On its margins the larger species of herbaceous ferns might be gathered, and so disposed as almost to hide the streamlet's course under a wealth of glorious fronds. Massed up rocks, too, on each side of a rude pathway, running parallel with the watercourse on each margin, might afford a congenial home for the rock-loving members of the flowerless family. On each hillside above the streamlet many a broad platform of earth or rock would afford space for creeping brake or clustering polypody, while on many a craggy point and in many a moist and sheltered nook, congenial habits might be found for the fern of the open cliff and the dripping cave. In such a glen or valley, with a climate of moisture and heat, the ferns of the tropics, forgetting that they were no longer in the humid depths of primeval forests, would unroll their great glossy fronds, and rise to a height unknown without the limits of their extemporized world. The maidenhair would no longer miss the air of the sea coast, and the glossy-fronded Asplenium marinum would develop as grandly as it could in its wild and dripping rocky cavern.—Fern World.

Before and After.

"The baby has got a new tooth, but the old lady is laid up with a cold in the head," remarked a gentleman to a defeated candidate. "What do I care?" was the reply. "Well," said the gentleman, slowly, "before the election you used to take me aside and ask me how my family was coming on, and I've been hunting you all over town to tell you, and that's the way you talk to me! But it don't make any difference. I voted for the other candidate anyhow."

Extent of London.

The great metropolis has no less than 7,000 miles of streets, while on an average twenty-eight miles of new streets are opened, and 9,000 new houses built every year; 1,000 vessels and 9,000 sailors are in port every day. Its crime is also in proportion to its extent, no less than 73,000 persons being annually taken into custody by the police, while more than one-third of all the crime in the country is committed within its borders; 38,000 persons are annually found guilty of drunkenness by its magistrates. The metropolis comprises upwards of 100,000 foreigners from every quarter of the globe.

Rose Culture.

The first requisite is the selection and preparation of a suitable place for planting. This is very important, as all that follows depends upon the care used in this first step.

To begin with, then, choose the best place you have in the garden, a place where you can offer sufficient protection by means of hedges or board fences from bleak, sweeping winds. When fences are used, their general ugliness can be most appropriately clothed by roses themselves. A warm, sunny position is also requisite; if so situated that there is an exposure to the morning sun and the hot rays during the afternoon are in part or wholly shaded, all the better, but a certain amount of sunlight is as essential to a rose's welfare as to our own, though many of us do not show our appreciation of the blessings of sunlight as gratefully as do our roses. Besides scattering them through our gardens, roses may be made very effective planted in borders about our lawns, either individually or in groups, and also planted in beds on the lawn When the latter is done, we may with advantage depart from the usual custom of growing the plants in bush-form and resort to what is termed the pegging-down system.

In this case the mode of procedure is quite simple. Having planted our roses—for this purpose those on their own roots are preferable—we allow them to grow the first season in the usual way; the following autumn or spring the short and weak shoots are entirely cut away, and the long ones carefully bent down and fastened to the ground by means of pegs, or where more convenient or preferred they may be tied to stakes. Occasionally it happens there is a hard, stiff root which will crack or break near the ground, but if the bark on the under side continues whole this is generally of no consequence, as flowers will be produced as well as though the shoot were uninjured.

Every year the pegging down must be repeated, the old shoots being cut away and the new ones which may have come up during the summer laid down in their place. The great advantage of this system over the ordinary practice of growing in bush-form is the immense quantity of flowers produced, thus giving a magnificent appearance on the lawn and affording all the cut flowers desired for household use.

SOIL.—Roses will do well in any ordinary garden soil that is free from standing water and well drained. Where there is too much clay, the soil can easily be made sufficiently friable by the application of wood and coal ashes, lime, stable manure, etc. Where, on the other hand, a soil is sandy or too light we need to bring clay, muck, leaf-mould, etc., to obtain sufficient body.

MANURES.—In regard to this important portion of cultural operations, we would say that there must be a generous application if we expect a generous yield of flowers. When roses are planted in the spring, if the soil is ordinarily rich, it will be better not to dig in much manure about the roots, but rather apply it as a surface dressing. This will at once be nourishing, keeping the roots cool, and prevent suffering from the droughts of summer. The following autumn, say in November, after the roses have been planted, there should again be applied as a mulching a free application of stable manure, which may be dug in the next March. We find cow manure the best fertilizer, on the whole, that we have tried, though all kinds of stable manure are excellent, as are also bonedust, soot, guano, etc For full directions regarding this and kindred objects we refer to the several excellent works on roses.—Floral Cabinet.

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint;

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

THE NEW EARTH.

I.

While the Premillenialists are agitating the church with their vagaries, and certain enthusiasts among them are denonncing after the style of the ancient seers, all who will not receive them as Bible truths, it may not be amiss to restate an old theory which, in the writer's opinion, may afford a solution of some of the difficulties connected with the general subject of prophecy and of the second Advent. This theory is that this earth where we now dwell, is destined to come forth from the fires of the final conflagration, renovated and purged, and fitted np as the everlasting home of God's redeemed people, and as the theatre for those displays of the Divine glory to which so many prophecies of both Testaments allude.

If this can be shown to be the doctrine of the Scriptures, we think it cannot bnt be grateful to the Christian head; for God has implanted in us a love of this earth which no calamities, nor pain, nor grief can overcome, and which, even in the case of those who are just assured of the heavenly inheritance, makes them loth to leave it. Its sights and sounds are endeared to us by a thonsand tender associations. We love it, all scarred and by violence and befouled with sin, as the cottager loves his thatched roof, because it is his home. Moreover there is something shocking to our sense of propriety in the thought that the scene of such a conflict as it has been between infernal and celestial powers should be annihilated, or as some have thought, be given up at last to Satan. Surely the conquered enemy will not retain possession of the battle-ground. But we will make our appeal to the Scriptures and not to considerations of sentiment. If we speak not according to this Word, it is because there is no light in us.

The first passage to which attention is called, is the third chapter of Second Peter. It is too long to qnote, and the reader is requested to turn to it and read it carefully. Our theory is not inconsistent with the Apostle's language in this passage and the strong expressions used, such as "the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." If the fires are literal fires and the burning a literal burning, the natural result would be, not an annihilation of substance, but only a change of form. Wood is consumed by fire, "burned up," as we say, bnt not an atom of its substance is destroyed. The indestructibility of matter by any natnral cause is one of the first principles of natnral philosophy taught to our children in the schools. "By the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water. He spake and it was done, he commanded and it stood fast. For their annihilation no universal conflagration would be needed, but only a withdrawal of the sustaining power that upholds them. To say that the earth shall be burned up, therefore, literally interpreted, means simply that it shall be changed as to its present form, and in that sense become a "new earth."

This agrees with what the Apostle says about the destruction of the earth by the flood. "The world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished." That is, Satan's empire in it perished. The judgment of God swept over it and drowned its wicked inhabitants with all the monuments of their civilization, art and crimes. The change was great enough to justify him in speaking of what resulted as though it were another world. He speaks of it before the deluge as "the world that then was," and after it as "the heavens and the earth that are now." The first overthrow of Satan's kingdom was partial, inasmnch as he still retained a lodgment in the hearts of the few who were saved. The second overthrow shall be thorough and complete. The purging and renovation of the earth and of the hearts of the saved will correspond to each other. Those who are the friends of Satan, will be hopelessly destroyed, and the whole framework of nature upon which his mark is set, will be dissolved; nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a now earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." This would seem to be plain, common sense interpretation.

Again the Apostle says his expectation of this new earth is grounded on the promise of God. We search the Scriptures in vain for any specific promise to which he can be supposed to allude. The one in Isaiah 65:17 cannot be meant, because it describes a state of things evidently belonging to the present economy, in which death and sin are fonnd. But there is an implied promise of "the restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy pprophets since the world began." It is implied in all the numerous passages which intimate that the redeeming work of Christ is co-extensive with the curse. It is the burden of many prophecies which relate immediately to the events of Jewish history, but which stop not in their fulfillments with those events. "Prophecy," says Bacon, "hath springing and germinant accompaniments." Its sense is one, bnt its applications are often manifold. The history of redemption is but the development in successive applications of one original prophecy. Sometimes one fulfillment, as in the case of the flood, the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the destruction of Jerusalem, only brings us to a point of view from which to comprehend a grander meaning; one fulfillment becomes the type of another on a grander scale; and so numberless events of history happening in fulfillment of prophecy contain the implied promise that the time will come when Satan's kingdom shall be utterly destroyed, and himself cast ont of the earth; when it shall no more be the prey of violence, but the meek shall inherit it, and the knowledge of the Lord shall cover it as the waters cover the sea. AN OPEN LETTER.

PENDLETON, 15th April, '79.

To the Rev. Dr. J. L. Wilson, Sec'y, &c.:

MY DEAR OLD FRIEND AND BROTHER—When I addressed you my privato note asking you to tell me what advantages you think there are in publishing missionary intelligence through the Missionary rather than through the church papers, I did not anticipate being honored with a public reply, and especially to be referred to in such complimentary terms as you employed. I confess, however, that I was not so well pleased with your coupling alongside with my inquiry touching a new question that proposition which was condemned by the last Assembly. This was to impart a bad odor to my suggestion. Nor do I think it was altogether fair to characterize my question, as you did, in the very caption of your reply; for I have not proposed either to kill or to extinguish the Missionary. My idea was to give it more vigorous life and to set its light up on a higher pillar that it might shine over our whole church. I would gladly have done without your compliments to myself to have had a juster delineation of my proposition in your pages. Suffer me to add that I fail to see the propriety of your using the pages of the Missionary, which, you rightly say, "is designed to report to the churches whatever is connected with the missionary work, and of course to present any other matter bearing upon it" to set forth one side of a question on which I do not think our church is altogether at one, and at the same time to refuse to let the other side be presented through that channel. You say that "the Missionary is not to be used for controversy" and that your article "is not of a controversial character, bnt was designed to set forth one of the great needs of the missionary work." Well, had you allowed me to reply through your organ I should have just been setting forth one of the great needs of the missionary work, according to my conception of it. Bnt, then, it seems that on this open question the Missionary may be used on the one side and refused to the other.

You say you will meet any one over your own signatnre in the weekly papers, but you appeal to me that it is "not necessary to agitate this matter" and you nrge that it "may injure a cause dear to us both." I should regret very much to injuro that cause, and I neither had nor wish any controversy with you, my long loved and much honored brother. Yet I did think it a serious question whether it is best to take $700 out of our missionary treasury, which is so low in funds to print what I believed the church papers would all gladly publish. And I am not convinced that it can do any harm, yon having set forth my proposition to the church in the unfavorable aspects it wears to your mind, for me briefly to declare what was the innocent idea that has very often, during several years past, been occurring to my mind and that of others. I wish to let the church see that I am not quite so much bent on taking the life or putting out the light of the Missionary as must be supposed by all from your representations of the matter.

I had observed that our church papers are all disposed to republish a good deal of what appears monthly in the Missionary. I was aware that the Missionary, after twelvo years' publication, still fails generally to reach our people. They all, I supposed, must take some one or other of our church papers. I reckoned that every one of these papers would willingly devote, say two or three columns of their fonrth page every week that missionary intelligence, and whatever else the committee might have to present, might be made accessible to our whole communion. I did not imagine that any editor or publisher would fail to see the advantage to his own paper of being thus made more than ever an organ of the church; nor that any one of them could hesitate to give your committee entire control of the two or three colnmns weekly which would thus constitute the "Missionary Department" of his paper. Now, it did appear to me that could such a plan be carried out through the good will of our editors and publishers, it would give the Missionary, in a form somewhat different from the present one, a wider circnlation, and save of our precious missionary funds a very considerable sum, and I did not expect you to call this an attempt at the slaughter or at the extinguishment of an orgán which I read and study with deep and careful interest every month. But when you give my simple, private inquiry such a bad name and that in public; when you also snggest to our editors that I am making unreasonable and unrighteous demands of them, and when you stir them up to look at my suggestion (which you say some of them already have expressed to you) as a glaring injustice to thom, you have probably put out the little life and the feeble light of my very modest and unpretending conception set before you in a more private communication.

I remain, as ever,
Very affectionately yours,
JOHN B. ADGER.

CHURCH CONTRIBUTIONS.

MR. EDITOR—Your correspondent "Home" makes out a pretty fair case for Orange Presbytery and the other Presbyteries of our Synod. I would rejoice in seeing our churches relieved in part, especially so large a part as his figures would indicate. With his light before me I cannot see the shortcoming near so small as he makes it, admitting his estimate of ministers in Orango Presbytery to be correct (and I have no reason to donbt it), twenty-two instead of thirty. He divides the $15,160 paid by that Presbytery by 22. Before doing so, however, he ought to dednct from tho amount paid the salary set down to the First church at Raleigh and the church at Graham, which are both set down in the minutes as without ministers. This redneces the sum divided between the twenty-two ministers to $12,781, quito a difference, and will give an average of $581, a very serions cutting down from friend Homo's $699.

Suppose we take off the salary paid by three large chnrches—First Raleigh, Greensboro and Newbern—$4,854 from the whole amount paid by the Presbytery ($15,160), leaves $10,306 to be divided with twenty ministers (for Raleigh 1st has no pastor connted). This will give an average paid to the twenty of $515, and the amonnt paid to many would be greatly redneed by throwing ont others of the better paying chnrches.

I have no donbt now that I overstated in my communication of the 12th of February the unmber of miniters receiving salaries in Orange Presbytery and the other Presbyteries of the Synod, and I thank friend Home for calling attention to it.

In the PRESBYTERIAN of December 4 was a statement snbstantially the same as my own and this stood uncorrected. Was it not fair to assume that it was correct?

It is not claimed by any one that we pay all we promise, and I think I have shown clearly that wo promise one dollar and pay sixty-eight cents. But whether we pay sixty-eight or eighty odd is of small import; we do not pay what we promise, and the principle remains the same. If I owo my neighbor and am able to pay, it would be a poor defence for myhonesty to insist that I had paid him three-fourths of tho amount due.

My object in the ontset was to call attention of our people to this all-important subject, and indnce others better qnalified than myself to discnss it in the PRESBYTERIAN, and bring to the attention of our congregations the great evils likely to grow ont of it.

There is danger, Mr. Editor; danger of destroying ministerial usefulness, danger of contracting loose and reckless habits. Suppose a minister on the promise, say of $850 salary, is sottled in a congregation. He finds that, by rigid economy, he can live on that snm; makes his calculations on that amount, as he has a right to; perhaps contracts dobts to be paid out of it at the end of the year, and then finds that only sixty-eight cents on the dollar, or $580, is to be paid; where is the remainder to some from? how is this $270 to be raised to meot his honest engagements? We expect, at least, our ministers to be honest and pay their debts, whether we do or not. If he does not can he do the work of the Master successfully? Is there any surer way to destroy a minister than to have his pecuniary obligations disregarded?

Your correspondent "Justice" asks some pertinont questions that I could wish he had answered directly. I, too, have my own opinion in regard to one of them at least. Modesty might prevent an expression of that opinion, but if there be a different view taken how are we going to bring it out? A church makes ont a call for a pastor, which is signed by the congregation, by the trustees, or by the officers of the church as the congregation direct; there is no difference. Any parties signing do so for the congregation, and bind them—not the party signing any more than any other member of that church. The whole congregation is bound for the payment of the sum set forth, and it is the duty, I conceive, of that church to enforce the payment, or for the paying part to pay the deficit. And here I would like to ask a few questions myself: Is a church-member in "good standing" who contributes nothing to the funds of the church (if able)? Should a member of the church who snbscribes and does not pay be subjected to discipline? Should a church-member who does not snbscribe and does not pay be alike snbject to discipline, always supposing that they are able to pay something?

Please give us your views, Mr. Editor.

I have written much more than I intended. C.

CONVERTS FROM JUDAISM.

The extraordinary spectacle was witnessed on the evening of Snnday, the 30th ult., of nine Jews presenting themselves at the font, in public testimony of their having left the faith of Judaism for Christianity. The chapel used by these converted children of Abraham is sitnated in Palestine-place, Cambridge-road, London, and last Snnday evening was crowded with not only a considerable number who already have accepted the Christian faith, bnt with large numbers of Jews who came to witness the initiatory ceremony of Christianity administered to these Jewish disciples of Jesus. Fow can estimate how strong must be their conviction of Christian truth ero these young men conld present themselves for Baptism. Filial piety and parental affection are strong among the Jews; yet these young men have sacrificed all parental love by following our Lord. The rite of Christian baptism severs for ever the cords binding them to their families and friends. Notwithstanding all this, everything to be borne is borne, and every sacrifice to be made is made, in obedience to their powerful conviction of the absolnte and unalterable truths of the Gospel.

Moreover, there is one feature in connection with these conversions of weight to Gentile believers; the converts from Judaism range themselves under the Evangelical banner. They have passed through two severe an ordeal to concern their soul with any of the fascinating modern isms by which so many are being beguiled from the glorious truths of Christ. It is often simply marvellous to listen to these Hebrew Cristians as they dwell npon the surpassing beanty, the personal Deity, and finished atonement of the Redeemer. The ceremony of baptism was, npon the present occasion, performed by the Rev. H. A. Stern, well-known for his ceaseless exertions to rescue the remnant of Israel from their ignorance of their Redeemer who came to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. —London Christian Signal.

BURY ME AT EVENING.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M. D.

"We buried him at evening. * * * As we turned away from the grave-yard, the sinking sun repeated the lesson of admonition. It seemed like the voice of Providence and the voice of nature speaking together."—Memoirs of W. B. Homer.

Oh! bury me at evening, when
The daily toil is ended, and
Is hushed the hum of busy men
In darkened silence through the land;
'Tis at that quiet hour of sweet repose
When all my labors shall be done—
The goal of life immortal won—
Thus with this lingering, parting sun
I would go down the vale of woes.

When low the latest sunbeams sink
On meadow, hill and mountain-grove,
As on a shining way, I love to think,
On burdened messages of love,
The angels oft descendent come,
To greet some spirit at life's goal—
A new and disembodied soul—
And while their anthems sweetly roll,
To waft it safely to its home.

Yes bury me at evening, when
The silent exhalations all
Are gathering home to earth again, –
That at the dawn's eternal call,
A thousand pearly dew-drops may,
As in a kingly diadem,
On every leaf and grassy stem
Hang glistening each a pendent gem,
To hail the smiles of new-born day.

Thus when my evanescent breath
Shall leave this cumbrous, lifeless clay,
That in the chill and damp of death,
It moulder back to its decay,
While death's habiliments assumed,
I would inhume this heaveless breast,
Within its parent earth to rest,
Till in the resurretcion blest
I rise a spirit disentombed.

Yes, bury me at evening still,
For Jesus was entombed alone,
Beneath Judea's templed hill,
When soft the lingering twilight shone;
No dirge was heard, no funeral trains
Bore on the noblest of earth's dead,
But lone and sad, when all had fled,
Two faithful ones embalmed that head,
And bore away those cold remains.

Oh! bury me at evening, too,
In twilight's mild and holy light,
Since He who bore our woes withdrew,
Entombed at early night;
Then when this mortal I dismiss,
And dust its native dust assume,
I'll hail that bourne, nor dread its gloom,
For lo! a star gilds all the tomb
And harbingers a dawn of bliss.

DEDICATION OF THE AUGUSTA PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

On Sabbath, April 6th, the Rev. Thomas R. Welch, D. D., preached the dedication sermon of the First Presbyterian Church of Augusta, Ark. His text was, Psalm 137: 5th and 6th verses—and the treatment of his text was an able and eloquent presentation of the distingnishing excellencies of the Presbyterian Church, as reasons for our loving the same.

The church was organized November 15, 1861, by Rev. S. W. Davies, Rev. J. A. Barr, and Dr. T. A. Krider, committee of Arkansas Presbytery. The original members were John Hicks, A. Louisa Hicks, Sarah H. Ragsdale, Manie N. Shuh, Virginia P. Shuh, Thomas E. Erwin, Eliza C. Davies, Louisa F. Davies, Virginia C. Davies, Martha A. Davies, Isabella C. Davies, Enoch Boyd (colored), Matilda Boyd, (colored).

T. E. Erwin and John Hicks were elected Ruling Elders. Six of the first members have died and five of them are still in the communion of this church. Rev. S. W. Davies supplied the church twice a month for twelve years, during which time fifty-three members were added to the roll. The present Pastorate began in October, 1877, since which time fifteen members have been added. From the organization to the present time, nineteen members have died and thirty-three have removed, leaving a present membership of thirty-four.

On the 27th day of November, 1872, the foundations of the new church edifice were laid on lots generously donated for this purpose by Mr. Thos. Hongh, who was also a liberal contributor to the erection of the church, under the shadow of which his mortal remains now repose, embalmed in grateful remembrance by the entire church. At the close of 1876 the building was ready for occupancy. The first religions service, being a prayer-meeting, was held in May, 1876, and the first sermon was preached in June, 1876, by Rev. A. R. Kennedy.

When the building was first begun a debt of fifteen hundred dollars was contracted in the hope of an early liquidation. The entire cost of the church, including this last payment, is between eight thousand and nine thonsand dollars. The crisis of 1873, with its abiding pressnre, caused a disappointment of this hope which was not realized until within the last month. Immediately upon the lifting of this debt, resolntions were passed, expressing gratitnde to the membership of the church and to all others who had assisted. It was further resolved that the church be dedicated to the service of God on April 6th, 1879, by Rev. T. R. Welch, D. D.

CHRISTIAN SYMPATHY.

To rejoice with the glad and monrn with the sorrowful, are Christian duties. Sympathy is a cordial to the dependent human soul, in whatever condition it may be. Like cold water to the thirsty, like wine to the fainting lips, comes the tenderness of a friend in the crisis of life. It is hard to be alone, in those full-freighted hours of existence, when great happiness flows in on the spirit, like a mighty flood-tide, or in those other hours, spent and weary, when the tide goes ont, and we sit down in the shadow of a heavy grief. Difficult in this latter case, as it sometimes is, to snit our sympathy to the special need of the crushed and wounded fellow-being who calls it forth, it is never right to refrain from giving it. There is strength in the warm clasp of a loving hand, and in the look of a loving eye, even if no words are spoken. Letters, breathing affection, and imparting hopes of consolation, are very precious to those who receive them, and we should not hesitate to write such, though we feel that they are most inadequate as expressions of what we would wish to say.

There is one form of comforting which does bnt little good. It is not best to tell the mourner of some one else whose affliction is greater. It is not worth while to refer, when the mother is weeping hot tears over her nursling snatched from her breast, to some mother whose boy, grown to manhood, has become a torment and disgrace. The ears are deaf to snch soothing. Love stnbbornly declines to believe that such blight would ever have reached its bnd of promise. In fact, in periods of bereavement, while the stroke is fresh, the feeling of the mourner is always intensely personal. Reason, for the present, refuses to sway the sceptre, which is assnmed by imagination. Is there any sorrow, like my sorrow? cries ont the stricken heart. Sometimes it is better not to try to administer comfort, even by telling of the dear ones left, and the good gifts of Providence still blessing the home.

"One writes that other friends remain,
That 'Loss is common to the race,'
And common is the commonplace,
And vacant chaff, well-meant for grain.

"That loss is common, would not make
My own less bitter, rather more.
Too common! Never morning wore
To evening, but some heart did break."

How, then, shall we go to our desolated friends, and by what magic, carry balm to ease their pains? There are just two ways, or rather there are two forms of one way, which never fail. Love and faith are strong wings which lift the drooping spirit and bear it up. It is much to any one in trouble, that a friend cares. In the silent manifestation of concern, shown by your simply going to the home obscured, and letting it be known that you are sorry and distressed, and would fain, if you could, bear a part of the burden, you carry a Christ-like atmosphere, and the gentleness of your Master. This is one form. The other is, if you can, to lead the lonely one to look beyond, to gaze up, even into the heavens, which must so often open to receive our treasures, and hide them, for a season, from our sight. How wide a field the Scriptures afford us for this sort of consolation. They are full of tenderness. "As one whom his mother comforteth, will I comfort you." "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you." "God is our refnge and strength, a very present help in trouble." "Out of the depths have I cried unto thee, O Lord." "He restoreth my soul." When we think them over, verse after verse flashes upon our thoughts, text after text rises, as stars rise in the evening sky. It is a good thing to have the memory stored with these precious words of the Lord. They help us, when we need help, as no human voice can, as no earthly wisdom does.

Then, too, we should cultivate, in ourselves, a habit of believing more than we do, in the nnseen world, to which we are hastening, approaching it by every throb of the pulse, by every hour of the day. We should have our conversation in heaven. Then when some dear one is carried there, we shall be able to think of him as having put on robes of immortality, and hope will reach forth, and grasp the reality of the invisible. And we shall be better able to talk to our grieving friends of heaven as home.—Margaret E. Sangster, in Christian Intelligencer.

THE PREACHER'S CHIEF WORK.

A clergyman has sent us fifteen sermons, with the request that we "critically examine them and point ont their merits and demerits." This we have not time to do, nor would we have time if the chirography were "plain as print," which it is not. Bnt if we mistake not the writer's description of the sermons, which is partly confirmed by our hasty glance over the manuscripts, we would apply to these sermons the following criticism: The highest style of a sermon is not necessarily the one which conveys the most instruction. Preaching and teaching are not by any means synonymous terms. The preacher is to teach, and much more. His chief work is to quicken consciences, to inspire his audience with noble resolves. The mission of the press is to inform, but that of the pulpit is to arouse conscience, faith, hope, charity. This latter is done somewhat by instruction, but far more by the presence of the living preacher in whose soul these spiritual powers are all aglow with life. There is any amount of latent or dead knowledge in the minds of the average audience; the tact of the preacher is manifested in converting into living forces this dead knowledge. Life comes from life. It is conscience that quickens conscience, faith that quickens faith. The preacher needed is he who has great faith, hope, conscience—the new creature well developed in him. The earnest living soul is a well-nigh irresistible power among men.—Preacher and Homiletic Monthly.

FASHIONABLE SKEPTICISM.

The English Court Journal, the organ of the fashionable world, says that it is considered to be a fashionable and correct thing to have lost faith in everything; and so girls who never owned any convictions at all pretend to regret their loss, and obtrude their unbelief with a jargon of words as meaningless to themselves as a passage of Hebrew would be. They mean no harm, but they compass an incalculable amount as wives, sisters, friends, and above all, as mothers. If the next generation be trained by such women as these, the prospect of the English nation is gloomy indeed. —Christian Herald.

A RECLAIMED SCOTCH SAILOR.

As an instance of how the temperance work proves a handmaid to the Gospel, Miss Weston related in a recent address at the Memorial Hall, London, a touching incident of a young Scotchman in the navy, whose snare was whiskey drinking. A companion brought him to the Sailors' Rest, Devonport, where he signed the pledge. I said to him, "You have done a very good thing; now let us ask God's blessing to enable you to keep your promise." "Yes, I should like that." We asked God to help him, and when we had done praying the young sailor was still kneeling, and sobbing like a child. We knelt down again, and prayed that he might not only be able to keep the pledge, bnt know and love the Saviour. He got up after awhile, his face a mixture of brightness and resolntion. He took my hand with a grip I shall never forget, and said, "I know I shall thank God I came here to-day; I have decided to trust in Jesus." Abont two weeks after he met with an accident on board ship which proved fatal, bnt his conduct during that fortnight showed that he was a true Christian.

MOTHER!

Aronnd the idea of one's mother the mind of man clings with fond affection. It is the first dear thonght stamped upon our infant hearts, when yet soft or capable of receiving the most profound impressions, and all the after feelings are more or less light in comparison. Our passions and our wilfulness may lead us from the object of our filial love; we may become wild, headstrong and angry at her counsels or opposition, but when death has stilled her monitory voice, and nothing bnt calm memory remains to recapitulate her virtues and good deeds, affection, like the rainbow, raises up her head and smiles amidst the tears.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From the London Weekly Review:

There is a shocking incongruity in the fact that the wages paid in London to women engaged in producing tenpenny Bibles are not enough to keep life together. Three recent strikes in the bookbinding trade have all arisen ont of Bible work.

The Jewish Chronicle says it has been determined to reorganize Jews' College. The council are in search of a site near University College, London, to establish the new institution for the training of ministers exclusively.

The Bishop of Columbia is anxions for the appointment of two bishops in his enormous diocese. Funds have been fonnd for one to be called the Bishoprio of Caledonia, and the first bishop will be the Rev. W. Riley, vicar of St. Paul's, Huddersfield.

Officiating on Sabbath at the Metropolitan tabernacle, Mr. C. Spurgeon, Jr., referred to the health of his father, which, he said, was physically and mentally much improved, though a weakness at the knee still existed. Notwithstanding this weakness, he has determined to appear once more before and address his flock on Sunday, April 13.

The Rev. Dr. Wylie, in his closing address to his students in Edinburgh on Saturday, uttered words full of warning regarding the insidious advances of Romanism. He had, he said, been compelled to abandon the hope he had long held, that Rome would come to an end without triumphing for a while in Great Britain. We would have to suffer for our unfaithfulness.

The Austrian propaganda in Macedonia, it is said, is now developing into one of a religious character as well as political. Agents of the Roman Catholic Church are actively propagating their ideas among the people, representing the advantages of Austrian protection, and of their forming part of the great Catholic community of Europe. This adds to the dissatisfaction of the Orthodox Bulgarians, who are as jealous of their religion as of their political unity.

The oldest clergyman in the Church of England is the Rev. Canon Beadon of Wells, who was born on the 6th of December, 1777, and is therefore in his 102d year. He is said to be still in good health, reads without spectacles, and never wore a great coat. He succeeded his father in the living of Stoneham, near Southampton, in 1810, and which he still holds, his son, now 75, or "his boy," as he calls him, having been for a long time his curate.

The Russian Synod has presented a petition to the Czar, calling his attention to the "alarming" increase of dissent in South Russia, and particularly of the Protestant Evangelical sects. One of the latter, the Stnndists, has recently asked permission to hold a congress at Mariopol this spring, 150 delegates from various districts expressing themselves in readiness to attend it. The decision of the government has not yet been announced, but it is expected the request will be refused.

A young Japanese, 15 years old, born a Buddhist, has been received as a convert to Roman Catholicism, with great pomp and ceremony, by Mgr. Caverot, Archbishop of Lyons, who in the cathedral baptized, confirmed, and gave him his first communion on the same day. The neophite was one of a batch of Japanese lads sent to Lyons for a European education, and they were confided to a former consul at Nagasski, who is a strict Roman Catholic. He placed them in the hands of the priests. The Lyon silk manufacturers, who have reaped great advantages from the increased interconrse with Japan, are afraid now that the friends of the yonng scholars, who did not bargain for conversion, will take them away.

From London Christian Signal:

THE ENGLISH PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.—The approaching meetings in connection with the above Synod are anticipated with feelings of considerable interest, as it is thought that the authorities of the samo will scarcely allow the Chalmers Centenary to pass without due recognition. In previous years the Synod has appropriately observed memorable events in ecclesiastical history. In the year 1843 a committee was appointed to attend a meeting to celebrate tho bicentenary of the Westminster Assembly. In 1860 the Synod also took part in the celebration of the tercentenary of the Scottish Reformation. In 1862, the bicentenary of the ejections of 1662, an overture was moved by the Synod expressive of admiration at "the conduct of our Presbyterian fathers, who were enabled to bear such a noble testimony to the power of Christian principles, and who chose rather to suffer affliction for their Nonconformity than to forfeit their inestimable privilege of having a conscience void of offence towards God and towards men." So also, in the year 1872, the Synod celebrated the tercentenary of the death of John Knox and the formation of the first presbytery at Wandsworth.

The Protestant movement in Franco is gaining gronnd rapidly. The population of the country is abont 36,000,000, of whom 1,000,000 are Protestants, and the remainder set down as Catholics. Within the past year a decided movement toward Protestantism has been reported from many parts of tho country. In three towns of the department of Allier, where ten years ago there were about sixty Protestants, there are now nearly 1,000, all of them being proselytes. At Montargis, the birthplace of Admiral Coligny, a year ago there were between forty and fifty, now thero are 150. At Chateauronx a Catholic officer was recently buried with great pomp, and in his will was found a clause leaving money to build a Protestant place of worship. Wherever there are 200 or more Protestants without a church they now receivo aid from the State. At Valenciennes, where twenty years ago there were only forty, there is now a church with a membership of 250. At Lyons, the second city in France, and a stronghold of Catholicism, three mission rooms are nightly crowded, while in Paris are conducted twenty-two mission stations, with an average weekly attendance of 8,000.

From our Exchanges:

There are now 350 churches in Burmah, and nine-tenths of the work is done by native teachers.

By the will of the late Thomas Garfield, shipowner, Dnndee, he has bequeathed to the Free Church £3,500, besides £200 for the support of the poor in St. Peter's church.

Dissenters in Russia now number over fifteen million. The Stnndists, who hold the same relation to the Greek Church that the Methodists do to the Church of England, are increasing very rapidly, and the Minister of Public Worship is becoming alarmed.

The churches of Scotland remember in a motherly kind of way their Presbyterian descendants in the New Dominion, and remit supplies every year with unfailing constancy. Thus during the year 1877–78 the Church of Scotland sent about $17,850 to various institntions and committees in Canada. The Colonial Committee of the Free Church of Scotland was not forgetful of their brethren, and the gifts for missions and evangelization amounted to more than $3,000.

MISCELLANY.

There are 7,000 English churchyards in which no dissenter can be buried.

The great Catholic paper to be printed in seven langnages will soon appear in Rome, the Lateran palace having been set apart by the Pope for its composing, editorial and translating rooms.

During the past year 471 persons were saved from wrecks or endangered vessels by the lifeboats ronnd the coast of Great Britain.

Mr. Spurgeon says that if Queen Elizabeth was a Protestant at all she was a very half-hearted specimen, and as much a persecutor as a reformer. He adds that many of her whims and fancies show a mean temper.

Diphtheria continues to increase in many provinces in Russia. In the district of Meergorod it has attacked twelve per centum of the population since 1875, with fatal results in five and a half per centum of the cases.

The London Tablet confesses, with regard to France, Austria, Spain, Italy, Bavaria, Belgium and Portngal, that whatever propriety there may be in designating them as "Catholic" in former times, "has almost entirely disappeared."

For some time apprehension has been felt as to the security of the Egremont Cemetery, owing to the iron ore operations beneath it; and last week a part of the ground, containing two graves, sunk to the depth of ten or twelve feet below the surrounding level. Fears are entertained as to the rest of the cemetery. Meantime the operations in the mine are suspended.

Machinery for shoemaking produces marvelous results. One class of machines sewed last year 45,000,000 pairs of shoes, while another pegged 55,000,000 in the same time. Ten men can make 500 pairs of shoes a day. In New England 460 bushels of shoe pegs are made in a day, and one cents worth of pegs will peg four pairs of shoes. There are 576 patents on shoe pegs and peggers, and 2,000 on shoe machinery. Machinery turned out over two million shoe lasts in the United States last year.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23, 1879.

QUESTIONS OF DISCIPLINE.

Our correspondent "C," in a very sensible and very timely article, on our first page, continues the discussion of remissness in the payment of the salaries of pastors.

Unquestionably a church is bound by the acts of any parties appointed by itself to act for it, and any pecuniary obligation, morally upon all, should be discharged, even though the burden, through remissness of some, falls upon a part only of the membership. This seems apparent, for in assuming the obligation the church acts as a unit, and if it does not discharge its debt who shall?

We now address ourselves more particularly to the questions propounded directly to us. While recognizing that the questions proposed have immediate reference to the pastor's salary, we design, regarding the same principle of duty as applying to all contributions for the cause of Christ, to embrace them all in this discussion.

The very proper object of the querist, is evidently to so prominently bring this exceedingly important subject before the Church, as to secure for it general attention and thoughtful consideration. Discipline is to be understood as referring to the enforcement of judicial penalties.

The subject of contributions to the cause of benevolence has frequently been, in one form or another, before our Church courts. As early as 1754 the inchoate General Assembly, then known as the Synod, found it necessary to enjoin that church sessions should interpose no check or prohibition to the proposal by the minister of collections. The language used is this: "They (sessions) indeed may give or withhold their charity, but may not prevent a minister to propose it publicly according to our appointment." Other phases of the subject, in regard to practice, were considered by General Assemblies previously to 1854. In that year a very able and elaborate report, from a select committee, on the general subject of contributions to objects of benevolence, was ordered to be published in the form of an Address to the Churches. It will be found in Baird's Digest, and is worthy of very careful study. In the address the following passages occur:

"The question whether covetousness, like any other sin, should not be disciplined, ought to engage in these days of Christ's coming the profound attention of every Presbytery and every session; and no person, in the opinion of the committee, should be admitted to sealing ordinances whose views on this subject are not clear and scriptural. Every member of the Church is under a solemn recorded obligation to do his part to sustain the cause of Christ. What his part is he is left to determine in prayer before God, and in the light of the divine word. He is a laborer in the vineyard, and must work. No excuse will justify but absolute inability. Whoever is able to earn his living is able to give something to Christ's cause.

"Every communicant who is above the necessity of receiving alms, who withholds his gift, however humble, is guilty of the sin of 'covetousness,' which is idolatry.

* * * * * * * * *

"To procure such contributions it is not so material that any particular plan be urged on the churches, in whose details all should agree, and according to whose provisions all should act. All that is properly demanded is, that the duty of securing the desired result should be urged, and its execution enforced. If an ecclesiastical court possesses the right to prescribe any particular duty it must also possess the right to inquire into the performance."

We have been thus particular in giving the history of our subject as expounded by the highest court of our Church that it may be in proper measure explanatory of the answers which we give to our correspondent.

His questions are:

1. "Is a church-member in 'good standing,' who contributes nothing to the funds of the church (if able)?

2. "Should a member of the church who subscribes and does not pay be subjected to discipline?

3. "Should a church-member who does not subscribe and does not pay be alike subject to discipline, always supposing that he is able to pay something?"

Every communicant against whom no charges have been preferred is technically in good standing; though clearly in the first case above stated such an one would be guilty of flagrant sin.

We next consider the third case, and reply, Yes, he who, being able, gives nothing, is, in our opinion, subject to discipline; yet if he give at all, though the amount be in the opinion of the session entirely disproportioned to ability, the session cannot proceed to penal discipline. To proceed would throw upon the court the requirement of determining the standard of ability, and thus be invading those rights of conscience which must be conceded.

The question is not without its difficulties, for an arraignment would be on the charge of covetousness, which may be as real, and indeed as apparent, in not giving adequately as in not giving at all; but, if our limitation is not allowed, sessions must take cognizance of and determine, not as to a single individual but as to every church member, the amount which will relieve him from prosecution. In the latter course the principle of voluntary giving would be abandoned.

To the second query we reply that, beyond what has just been said, the offending member is clearly chargeable with dishonesty. This, of course, presupposes ability on the part of the subscriber, and the performance of the counter obligation of service, where the agreement is between individuals. Our remarks must be regarded as stating the rules which, in our opinion, would apply in general. Discipline is all-important, but in its application every church court is bound to take into view all the circumstances attending each case, and to consider how these circumstances, by aggravating or mitigating the offence, may qualify the methods of procedure. Earnest piety and consummate prudence and discretion need to be possessed and exercised to insure that efforts to enforce discipline do not result in injury, to the church, greater than the original offence.

CENTRE AND SHOE HEEL.

A kind friend at Shoe Heel, N. C., writing on the 21st inst., informs us that the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered at Centre church on Sabbath last by Rev. H. McLean, assisted by Rev. Roger Martin of Lexington. One young man came forward and made a public profession of religion. Rev. Mr. Martin preached at Shoe Heel on the nights of Saturday and Sunday last, and at Centre church on Sabbath morning.

Our correspondent thinks that the churches of Shoe Heel and Centre will extend a call to Bro. Martin, which call, it is trusted, he will accept. The preaching was plain and practical Gospel doctrine, ably urged upon the hearers, and the people were much pleased.

CALL DECLINED.

Rev. Cyrus Harrington writes to us:

Rev. J. Y. Allison has declined the call to Centre and Shoe Heel churches. His people at Monroe and Trenton would not agree to give him up.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Trustees of the General Assembly will be held in the First Presbyterian church, Charlotte, N. C., on the first day of May, 1879, at 10 o'clock A. M. JAMES HEMPHILL, President.

April 19, 1879.

DRINKING WATERS.

We have only space for a very short extract from the article of Dr. A. R. Ledoux of Chapel Hill, on drinking waters, which article has been kindly furnished us in advance sheets from the North Carolina Medical Journal:

"Organic, poisonous matters, which ooze through the soil into wells and springs, may not show any bad effect for sometime, but sooner or later disease and death will surely visit the unsuspecting household and the physician's aid be sought in vain, for with every draught of water which passes the fevered lips the sufferer imbibes new poison and hastens the inevitable end. Moreover, the germs of many contagious diseases, which feed on filth and multiply in foul water, are nurtured and preserved in warm climates through winter weather by the equable temperature of wells and cisterns, and are ready to start anew on their errand of death, when a favorable moment arrives."

Again:

"A good drinking water is perfectly colorless and transparent, without smell or noticeable taste, and agreeable to the palate. It should not lose its clearness in boiling and should leave a very small residue on evaporation."

These are selected from the article to call attention merely to the importance of the subject. The entire article is full of information, which will both surprise and instruct the general reader.

It can be obtained, gratuitously, on application to Dr. T. F. Wood, editor N. C. Medical Journal, Wilmington, N. C.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

Rev. Geo. L. Wolfe proposes to report the next General Assembly in a way that will give, we feel assured, general satisfaction. By reference to his advertisement to be found on our third page it will be seen that he will issue a "truly verbatim report of the whole proceedings" in pamphlet form conveniently arranged, and that he will furnish early and regular intelligence from the Assembly during its sessions by means of the daily Courier-Journal. The advertisement explains all.

We sincerely trust that as requested, our ministers and elders will take the matter in hand, and that our entire Church will have these proceedings before it in a way that it has never heretofore done. The knowledge of what is said and done by the General Assembly ought to be possessed by every church member.

NOT POLITICAL.

The Tarboro Southerner addresses its leading editorial to the giving of the white and colored man some very plain and sensible advice. The article takes the ground, assuredly the true one so far as North Carolina is concerned, that the discontent arising among the negroes does not arise from intimidation, or any attempt thereto by the whites, but from improvidence, the natural result of their previous condition of dependence. "Thrift in the employer and employed are correlative." This is a maxim the non-recognition of which works the evil. Where farmers can they ought to remunerate liberally; when crops fail and utter impoverishment falls upon the farmer, or is seriously threatened to him, the laborer should not charge him with injustice in curtailing expense. Pains should be taken to satisfy the colored people of the truth and justice of the maxim above quoted.

Quite a compliment is that which the Philadelphia Presbyterian pays to the Revised Book of Church Order of the Southern Presbyterian Church:

"It is an excellent book, and we wish that our church had one as good. Judging from the votes already given the Book will be adopted by a vote of more than two-thirds of the Presbyteries. It is twenty-one years since the undivided church entered upon this work."

PRESBYTERIAL MEETINGS.

The Presbytery of Harmony met according to adjournment at Darlington, S. C., and was opened with a sermon by the retiring Moderator, Rev. W. J. McKay. Twenty-one ministers and twenty-two elders were present.

McMullen was placed in his hands and accepted by him, and Saturday before the fourth Sabbath in May was appointed for his installation. A call for pastoral services of licentiate J. G. Henderson, who obtained leave to hold said call in his hands till next regular meeting.

Rev. L. W. Curtis, one of our members, for several years resident in New York, sent excuse and his usual donation, both of which were very satisfactory.

Rev. J. Douglas of Mecklenburg Presbytery was invited to sit as a corresponding member.

A pastoral letter was read, ordered to be published in the religious papers, and ministers were directed to read the same to their congregations.

Ordination.—After satisfactory examination and trial sermon, licentiate J. C. McMullen was set apart to the full work of the ministry by prayer and laying on of the hands of the Presbytery.

A communication from Rev. J. G. Hall, missionary in Mexico, was read. It was ordered that the Committee on Foreign Missions answer said communication in behalf of the Presbytery that it be published in our religious papers, and that pastors and supplies read the same when they take up collections for foreign missions.

Rev. S. L. Watson, previously appointed, read an interesting historical sketch of Bethel church, which was ordered to be placed on file.

The Book of Church Order was adopted, 22 for and 5 against.

The Presbytery of Paducah has adopted the Revised Book of Church Order by a unanimous vote. It also by the same vote overtures General Assembly to incorporate the chapter or "preliminary principles" of the Old Book in a preface to the New Book, should it be adopted by the Presbyteries.

PERSONAL.

Col. Murdoch McKinnon was born in 1804 a few miles south-west of Laurinburgh in Richmond county. His parents were natives of the Highlands of Scotland and immigrating to this country in the prime of early life, brought with them those principles of scriptural faith and piety for which the Highland Scotch were so deservedly distinguished. The subject of this notice enjoyed the advantages of early religious training, which brought forth fruit abundantly even down to old age. In the year 1822 he made a profession of his faith in Christ and joined the church at Red Bluff, S. C., he being engaged in teaching a school within the bounds of that congregation. The Red Bluff church was united at that time with Ashpole, Centre and Laurel Hill under the pastoral charge of Rev. Malcom McNair, and it was not an unusual thing for a person living within the bounds of one church to unite with either of the other churches of the charge, especially on revival occasions. In most if not in all of such cases, this connection was of temporary duration; the membership being in due time transferred to the church to which the persons properly belonged. We are not able to determine at what date the membership of Col. McKinnon was transferred to Laurel Hill, within whose bounds he lived and of which his father was a ruling elder, there being no records of that church from August 1818 to September 1828. But the transfer must have been made prior to the latter date. He was ordained a ruling elder in Laurel Hill, July 3d, 1831, and continued to serve in that office until February 16th, 1860, when he was dismissed to Laurinburgh church, which he served as an elder until his death, January 28th, 1879.

He was twice married, first to Esther McMillan, who died September 5th, 1837, and a second time, November 8th, 1838, to Mary Blue, who survives him.

The death of this good man suggests some reflections. He was mighty in the Scriptures—a man of one book, and that Book the Bible. His natural endowments were of a high order, and he had well developed them by a diligent, life-long study of God's word. Without the aid of theological works, and with little or no assistance but that derived from the pulpit, he had drawn from the Scriptures a complete system of truth, and was able to find a reason for every article of his faith, and to maintain it with sound arguments and that too notwithstanding the fact that he was an industrious farmer, laboring daily with his own hands, through life and until his strength failed. But it was not in his case a mere intellectual apprehension of the truth: his very soul was baptized with the truth; was infused with the spirit of the Gospel, so that the reigning power of the Gospel was sweetly exemplified in his life. Firm and immovable as a rock in matters of principle, he was yielding and conciliatory as a child in matters of mere opinions. Holding the doctrines of his Church with an unwavering steadfastness, he was most charitable and generous towards all evangelical Christians who differed from him. He loved the Church, his heart was wrapped up in the Gospel cause, and his liberality in support of it, was what most men would regard as far beyond his means. He gave till he felt it and he gave joyfully. It may be truly said that he did all that he could. His end was just such as might be expected to close such a life. He seemed to be made full in Christ. Realizing that he was an unworthy and helpless sinner, Christ was all to him. All fear had vanished forever from his mind. The writer was with him in his dying hours, and received his last intelligible utterances. Remarking to him that to be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord, and to be present with him is to see Him, is to be like Him, the dying saint replied: "Yes the body is vanishing"—his utterance failed, but he was understood to say: "the spirit is being clothed with the house from heaven." Thus after a few months rapid decline, he calmly fell asleep in Jesus. The value of early training is incalculable. The seeds sown in childhood yield a rich harvest of matured fruit in old age.

The Bible does make the earnest, diligent student of it wise unto salvation. It is not possible to form a strong and stable Christian character apart from the faithful use of the Holy Scriptures. The soul of the genuine Bible Christian is anchored on the rock of eternal truth, and no "wind of doctrine" can move him from his moorings.

The full assurance of hope is attainable. It is the goal at which every Christian should aim. In spiritual as in temporal things, the hand of the diligent maketh rich. COM.

ANNUAL COLLECTION FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS.

It will be remembered that the first Sabbath in May, or as soon thereafter as may be found convenient, is the time appointed for taking up the Annual Collection for Foreign Missions. It is scarcely necessary to remind those who are in the habit of reading the Missionary, that the occasion is one of extraordinary importance to the best interest of this great cause. Our Christian friends are already aware that the missionary work has been in a painfully embarrassed condition for more than three years. Three of our missions have been abandoned, because we had not the means to reinforce them. Fifteen or twenty applications to engage in the work have been declined from the same cause. A number of our missionary brethren are nearly worn out by excessive labor, and we can neither afford them the means for recuperating their exhausted energies, nor send them help to bear their crushing burthens. The Macedonian cry for help comes along with almost every mail from the distant ends of the earth, and yet for the want of means, we are compelled to let it go by unheeded. Multitudes of men are perishing in sight of our missionary stations, because we have not the means to enlarge those missions so as to bring them within the range of the Gospel. But how long is this state of things to continue? Can our beloved Church, when these facts are distinctly brought before it, continue to hesitate or falter? We believe not. We would fain hope that the perusal of the foregoing statements, brief as they are, would stir up the hearts and minds of hundreds and thousands of the people of God to come up afresh to the work and do all they can to sustain it.

It will require $75,000 to put the missionary work in a good condition and sustain it for the coming year. This amount we confidently believe can be raised, notwithstanding the hardness of the times, if the following suggestions are carried into effect. 1st, That an effort be made to get as many of the eight hundred non-contributing churches to come into operation as soon as possible. 2d, That all of the contributing churches make the effort to increase their contributions over those of the last year as much as twenty-five per cent. 3d, That the Ladies' Missionary Associations already engaged in the work do the best they can, and that new organizations be formed wherever it is practicable. 4th, That all of our Sabbath Schools that are already engaged in the work be encouraged to make their best efforts, and that other schools be urged to engage in the work also.

In carrying these suggestions into effect the main responsibility necessarily devolves upon pastors, church sessions, and Sabbath School superintendents and teachers, and we earnestly entreat all such to come to the help of this great cause, in the present trying emergency. A hearty and united effort on the part of all those who ought to be interested in this most precious cause will, with the blessing of Almighty God, achieve wonders. —Missionary.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

From D. Appleton & Co., New York; "The Great Italian and French Composers." Handy volume series. Price 30 cents. A companion work to "The Great German composers" and adopted to the music-loving public, and not merely to the critic and scholar.

The Carolina Farmer published by W. H. Bernard, Wilmington, N. C., at $1 50 per annum, contains sixty two articles on a great variety of subjects, all however interesting to farmers and the wives and daughters of farmers. We again as frequently before, commend it to our people.

A new serial story by Jean Ingelow will begin in the number of Littell's Living Age for the week ending April 26th. It is published from the author's advance sheets, and opens in a very interesting way. The progress of a new story by this popular writer will be eagerly watched.

A new volume of The Living Age, by the way, began with the first number of April, affording a good time for the beginning of new subscriptions.

For fifty-two numbers of sixty-four large pages each (or more than 3,000 pages a year), the subscription price ($8) is low; while for $10 50 the publishers offer to send any one of the American $3 monthlies or weeklies with The Living Age for a year, both postpaid. Littell & Co., Boston, publishers.

1. The Children's Friend, 16 pp. small quarto.

2. Infant's Magazine, 16 pp. small quarto. Each one shilling stirling per annum.

3. Band of Hope Review. Temperance paper; 4 pp. Sixpence.

Lippincott's Magazine for May opens with a brilliantly written and finely illustrated paper, by Mrs. Sarah Butler Wister, which propounds and answers one question, "Why do we like Paris?" In another illustrated paper —"From Norway to York"—H. M. Robinson describes graphically canoe travel and transportation in the territory of the Hudson Bay Company. "The Tramp in Four Centuries" is a close but somewhat enigmatical study of a class which is commonly supposed to be a modern innovation, but which is here shown, on the evidence of curious unpublished letters, to have made its appearance on every occasion of social and financial revolutions. "My Hero" gives a very striking account of the career of General Paez, "the first lance in the world," Miss Annie Porter continues her graphic sketches of "Village Life in Louisiana;" Nathan Clifford Brown describes "Beach-Birds," and Mrs. Hooper has an interesting account of Cardinal Richelieu's first and only appearance as a dramatic author and stage-manager. Gossip is full of bright and amusing talk.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. M. Rose has organized a Presbyterian church at Hampton, Va., of fifteen members.—Richmond State.

The postoffice address of the Rev. J. A. Dickson has been changed from Millersburg to Paris, Ky.

At the communion of Third Presbyterian church, Richmond, Va., Rev. W. N. Scott, pastor, on 13th inst., four persons were received on profession of faith.—Central Presbyterian.

Nearly twenty persons united with the church at Frankford, Va. Protracted services have been conducted recently by Rev. Messrs. Leps and Wilhelm.

At the communion last Sabbath in Rev. M. L. Lacy's church, at Lewisburg, W. Va., five persons united on profession of faith, and two by certificate.—Central Presbyterian.

The Central Presbyterian says: Rev. Dr. D. B. Ewing, the present agent for Hampden Sidney College, has accepted the position of Principal of the Lewisburg, W. Va., Female College, session to commence next fall.

Rev. J. C. Brown received six persons on profession of faith at a meeting held at Kanawha Salines, W. Va., the first of the month, when he was assisted by Rev. J. C. Barr, of Charleston.

Rev. J. S. Arburthnot, D. D., Gallatin, Tenn., has received a call to the Presbyterian church at Murfreesboro, made vacant by the resignation of the Rev. H. S. Yerger.

In Nottoway county, Va., ten years ago there were only seventy Presbyterians, now there are four comfortable churches, and one hundred and seventy members.

The Holy Spirit has been poured out among us at Navidad during the month of March. We are now seven members stronger than we were, and feel greatly revived and encouraged. Our accessions were all on examination.—Texas Presbyterian.

At Bethel church on Sunday last communion was administered, Rev. F. H. Gaines of Hebron, assisting Rev. Jas. Murry the pastor. Nine persons, chiefly young, were received into the church.

GENERAL.

The recent additions made to the membership of the Grace street Baptist church make it one of the largest in the State. At the service yesterday morning the right hand of fellowship was extended to 62 new members.—Richmond State.

Rev. Dr. G. D. Bernheim of St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran church, Wilmington, N. C., will celebrate his silver wedding on the evening of Friday next.

Rev. Dr. George Patterson, rector of St. John's Protestant Episcopal church of Wilmington, tendered his resignation, but has been induced to withdraw it, much to the gratification of his charge.

The postoffice address of Rev. John E. Dubose is changed from Pulaski to Brownsville, Texas. At the latter place he has entered upon the duties pertaining to a call to the pastorate of the Presbyterian church.

A correspondent of the Christian Observer writes from Rough Creek, Va.: "The Rev. C. M. Howard (evangelist) came on March 24th, and commenced on Friday night to preach, when some interest was manifested, and he felt greatly encouraged. Since then, for three weeks, we have had full houses most of the time. There have been about forty converts. There were one hundred inquirers last night, more than twenty of whom were new ones. Mr. Howard preaches with great power and earnestness, with no attempt at display. His words come from the heart, and reach the heart. There is no confusion or disorder in his inquiry meetings, but a most awful stillness pervades the assembly, and solemnity on every face, which I attribute to his habit of asking Christians to engage in silent prayer before and after sermon."

NORTHERN.

METHODIST.

General William H. Gibson, who has been very popular as a stump-speaker in Ohio, is about to enter the Methodist ministry.

The Rev. Dr. Harrison, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was reappointed Chaplain of the United States House of Representatives.

The novelty now begins in Brooklyn of a Methodist church presided over by a lady minister. Miss Anna Oliver takes charge both as chief capitalist and pastor. Her success with the church which she managed at Passaic N. J., affords prospect of great success in the work now before her. As yet she is not ordained, but the party in the Methodist Church advocating the ordination of women is gradually gaining ground, and it is expected that some day ordaining hands will be laid upon her head. The greatest extent to which Methodist Conferences have as yet gone in this direction is the licensing of women to preach. The Tompkins Avenue Church was built at a time when it was expected that the part of Brooklyn in which it is located would soon be thickly built up. Its official Board incurred a heavier debt than could be carried. The recent sale under foreclosure puts it in Miss Oliver's possession, and although many of the members are surprised at the novelty of having a feminine pastor, most of them agree to retain their membership in the reconstructed organization, and see what comes of it.—New York Sun.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

By the will of Jane Carse, late of Philadelphia, after some private bequests, the residue of her estate is given to the Second United Presbyterian church in Philadelphia, of which Rev. Dr. Dales is pastor.

BAPTIST.

Two hundred and twenty nine persons were added to the Baptist Church of Baltimore, Md., during the month of Febuary.

When the Rev. Dr. Burlingham took charge of the Willoughby Avenue Baptist Church, Brooklyn, a floating debt was causing considerable embarrassment. One element of the success which has thus far attended the Doctor's ministry is the lifting of this troublesome incumbrance. The congregations are large, and the church prospers as it never did before.

The $25,000 needed to pay the Baptist Publication Society's debt has been obtained, the $5,000 subscription for that purpose, and the $5,000 additional pledged by one generous friend, having been paid in before the close of the Society's fiscal year.

LUTHERAN.

The deaconesses' Institution under the directorship of the Rev. Dr. Passavant, at Pittsburgh, Pa, has been made the recipient of one tenth of the estate of the late Emma Streacker, valued at about $100,000.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Asylum Hill Church, Hartford, Conn., Rev. J. H. Twichell, pastor, has just lifted $9,703 of its debt, and is working hard to free itself from the remaining $13,000.

There are 298 Congregational churches in the State of Connecticut and 374 ministers. From this it will be seen that, while in the country at large there are 124 more churches than ministers, in Connecticut there are 76 more ministers than churches.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL.

The congregation known as St. Mark,s, Detroit, Mich., and connected with the Protestant Episcopal church, had voted to join the Reformed Episcopal church. The evangelistic labors of the Rev. Mr. Morgan in that city have been the means of this result. It is claimed that the congregation had the right and privilege of still holding and using the church in which they have been worshipping.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

By the will of David Le Fevour, St Paul's Protestant Episcopal church in Pawtucket, R. I., comes into posession of a house and grounds and $2,500 in money, the whole valued at $12,000.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Mr. James Brown of New York, has given $300,000 for the endowment of all the professorships in Union Theological Seminary.

The cost of administration incurred by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, which disburses annually $450,000, is only 4½ per cent.

During the month of March Messrs. R. L. and A. Stuart made a donation of $5,000 to the Presbyterian Board of Relief for disabled ministers and the widows and orphans of deceased ministers. The whole of this has already been distributed among some fifty or sixty families of these ministers and widows for whom the benefit of the Relief Fund was intended.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

The Rev. John Miller, D. D., a son of the late Professor in the Theological Seminary, at Princeton, New Jersey, has been formally deposed from the ministry for heresy, by the Presbytery of New Brunswick.

Rev. R. M. Tuttle of Paducah Presbytery is laboring in Milam county, in the bounds of the Presbytery of Central Texas.

The Chesnut Street Presbyterian church in Wilmington N. C., (Africo-American) is now self sustaining. The Africo-American Presbyterian, speaking of a late work of grace among the congregation says, Communion services were held in this church on Sabbath, the 6th inst. The attendance was very large, the house being filled almost to its utmost capacity, and the meeting was one of unusual interest. There was perfect freedom from any boisterous demonstration and signs of a deep and all-pervading spiritual interest. Four infants were dedicated to the Lord in baptism, and six persons were publicly received to membership in the church, five on profession of faith and one by letter. At present this church is in a more prosperous condition than ever, and a bright future of usefulness seems to be opening before it. Since the communion there have been several conversions. Some are yet inquiring the way of salvation, and special meetings are being held, both in private families and in the church.

A Good Account.

"To sum it up six long years of bed-ridden sickness and suffering, costing $200 per year, total, $1,200—all of which was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters, taken by my wife, who has done her own housework for a year since without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it for their benefit."
JOHN WEEKS, Butler, N. Y."

The Late Rev. John Monroe Anderson,

PASTOR OF MEBANEVILLE AND BETHLEHEM CHURCHES, IN ORANGE PRESBYTERY

The late Rev. John Monroe Anderson was a native of York county, South Carolina. He was born September 26, 1821, graduated at the South Carolina College in 1841, and, choosing the law as his profession, he practiced for several years. But determining to go into the ministry, he studied divinity with Dr. Thornwell, and was elected pastor of Ebenezer and Unity churches, in York county, where his labors were greatly blessed. But his zeal was too great for a constitution never very strong, and his health giving way, he resigned his pastoral charge, after a service of about eight years.

About a year afterwards he was assigned by Bethel Presbytery to the presidency of Yorkville Female College, in 1854, which position he filled till the breaking out of the war, with great credit to himself and satisfaction to his employers and patrons. Early in the war the College suspended and he entered at once into the Confederate service as chaplain, serving most acceptably with Gregg's brigade on the coast, and afterwards as chaplain of the 13th South Carolina regiment till the close of the war.

In 1866 he was elected Professor of Logic and Belles Lettres in Davidson College, filling the position faithfully and acceptably, and acting at the same time as pastor of the College church, in which capacity, here as everywhere else, he endeared himself greatly to his congregation; and here, as elsewhere, his zeal was too great for his strength.

The writer's first personal acquaintance with Mr. Anderson was at Davidson College in 1872, not long before his resignation, which occurred in 1873. His health was quite feeble when I first saw him, and it continued to decline until, feeling unable to perform the duties of his professorship, he resigned, and shortly afterwards he removed with his family to Wilkesboro, where the invigorating mountain air, and the rest which he so much needed, improved his health very much, and he began to preach again at Wilkesboro as an evangelist of Concord Presbytery, and at Mt. Airy as an evangelist of Orange Presbytery, in both of which fields his ministrations were most acceptable to the people, and were blessed by the Master.

About this time the pastorate of Mebaneville church became vacant by the removal of Rev. P. T. Penick to his present charge in Concord Presbytery; and the recollection of the very strong hold which Mr. Anderson had on his students and on the people of Davidson as a preacher, as a pastor and as a Christian gentleman, induced the Mebaneville and Bethlehem churches to correspond with him, and soon after he was called and entered upon this, his last field of labor. It is safe to say that no pastor was ever more acceptable to any people than was Mr. Anderson to both his churches. As a preacher he had few equals. His sermons were prepared with great care, and were delivered with zeal and unction, and always without notes. It was preaching in the very best sense. He was a fine "belles lettre" scholar; he had an unusual command of the best and purest English; his treatment of his subject was always clear and logical, and when he got done, which it rarely took him more than thirty-five minutes to do, he stopped with his audience willing, and generally anxious, to hear more. He rarely preached a doctrinal sermon in the common acceptation of the term, and when he did, although his views were as pronounced as any man's I ever heard, yet what he said was said in such a catholic spirit, with so much gentleness and regard for the opinions and feelings of those who differed with him, that he gave no offence, and all denominations came to hear him, and all regarded him as one of the best preachers and one of the best men in the world. His Wednesday night lectures could hardly be excelled, and the attendance at his prayer meetings was unusually large. His preaching suited young and old alike. No preacher ever more completely won the hearts of a student body, a proverbially hard audience to preach to, than he did the hearts of the Bingham cadets. His Bethlehem people, a plain and quiet country congregation, but as intelligent and capable judges of preaching as can be found in the State, considered him a first class preacher in all respects, as did his Mebaneville people and his audiences and the membership increased steadily in both congregations. He preached, too, by example as well as by precept, being, as much as human nature can be, like the Master, harmless, undefiled and separate from, and yet seeking to save, sinners. As much as any more man ever did he obeyed the command to be in the world and yet not of the world. His example in one special respect should not pass unnoticed. He contributed regularly to the church's schemes of benevolence, and yet it is only as the financial officer of the church that know that his contributions were more liberal, according to his income, than any others in the church, a fact which not even his wife knew till I told her. Do all ministers set such an example?

But successful as he was as a preacher, it was as a pastor that he most excelled. He was, without exception, the best pastor I ever knew, and I have heard many others make the same remark. He went about, like the Master, "doing good." His gentle and kindly manner, his blameless and devoted life, his large knowledge of human nature, his tender and loving way in a sick room, his wonderful gift in prayer, his deep sympathy with the sorrowing, his wisdom as a friend and counsellor, his prudence and reticence in all private matters confided to him, in short his devotion to God, to man and to duty, endeared him alike to young and old and middle-aged. His interest in children and their love for him were remarkable. He seemed always to remember who it was that said, "Feed my lambs," and who it was that "took the little ones into His arms and blessed them" and said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," and one of the most touching incidents connected with his death was the visit of the children to his corpse, and their covering his grave with flowers when he was buried. A little incident just here will illustrate "his way" with children and through them with their parents. Soon after he came here he visited a family in which there was a large number of children. He got the name of every one and called them all by name when he told them good bye. Visiting the house some time afterward he remembered every child by name, and when he started away he called them up to tell him good bye, and noticing that one was missing he waited till the little one could be called in. The father said that he did not believe there was another man in North Carolina who could have found out the names of all his children in one visit, or another in the United States who could have remembered all their names from one visit to another, or another in the world who would have missed one of them.

He visited the death-bed of an aged minister of the Gospel talked and prayed with him, and he remarked to the writer, "Your pastor is the kindest, most comforting man I ever saw." He met an old colored woman and stopped to inquire after her health, to talk to her about her soul, and she said, with tears in her eyes, "Mr. Anderson is the best man I ever saw; no other white gentleman ever said to me, 'Aunt Charlotte, you look feeble, I fear you do not enjoy good health.'" And, what is a very rare thing these days, the colored people turned out in large and increasing numbers to hear him preach, where accommodations could be provided for them. And so he worked, loving God, loving man, and was all things to all men, like the apostle, and for the same reason.

But his last pastorate was a short one. He continued to preach after almost any other man would have given up. Preaching, which he loved with his whole heart, though it wearied him, stimulated him at the same time, and he worked on, often in very great feebleness, but with unabated zeal and success, till the first Sunday of January, when he preached his last sermon, and perhaps the best one of his life, in the pulpit, and, strange enough, from the text, "I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is day; for the night cometh when no man can work." Failing health confined him, first to the yard, then to the house and about a month before his death to his bed. But his preaching continued and was effective as any he had ever done in the pulpit, if not more so. The patience and Christian resignation with which he bore his prolonged and unusually severe sufferings, and the calmness and assurance of faith with which he met death, was a most effective sermon. His mental faculties were unimpaired to the very last. All the members of his immediate family were with him. Almost every member of both his congregations visited him. By his admonitions the godly were confirmed in godliness backsliders were reclaimed, the thoughtless were deeply impressed; strong men wept like children at his bedside, and in such a house of God, at such a gate of heaven, the hearts of many were comforted and their faith strengthened. Among many others who paid him kindly attention in his last days, the kindness of his clerical brethren should not pass unmentioned. Rev. A. Currie visited him frequently and preached for him regularly at Bethlehem and frequently at Mebaneville. Rev. Mr. Mebane of Graham, an old and deeply attached pupil, visited and preached for him. Rev Mr. Morrow, pastor of Hawfields and Cross Roads, visited him frequently. His son-in-law, Rev. Mr. Winn of Concord Presbytery, was with him till the end, preached for him frequently and nursed him with the utmost kindness and attention. Rev. Mr. Anderson of Morganton came all the way from home to see him. Rev. Mr. Staley of the Christian Church visited and preached for him. Rev. Mr. Brown of the Methodist Church visited and preached for him, and Rev. Mr. Bruton of the Methodist Church, an old acquaintance and friend, visited him.

And so, after he had thus been able to see his friends, express his wishes on various points, and set his house in order, the end came. He had expressed a wish to die on the Sabbath, and just as the night of the Sabbath of March 30th was passing into the morning his soul passed quietly and peacefully from the night of earth to the endless rest, the eternal Sabbath day, and though the godly man ceaseth, though the faithful fail from among the children of men, such a man, being dead yet speaketh, and the memory of such a man is blessed. In Lumberton, on the 27th ult., Dr. WM. A. DICK, in his 48th year.

For 25 years a member of the Presbyterian church; a devoted student of the Bible; no mean theologian; he had an unshaken conviction of the truth as taught by our standards. He loved to talk about Jesus—He spoke of death without fear, and expected pleasure in it. His friends hope when death came that he found pleasure and eternal rest. T. J. A.

In Steele Creek, Mecklenburg county, on the 11th instant, MARY ELIZABETH, eldest daughter of Joseph B. and Drusilla Boyles, in the 22d year of her age.

Her sickness, protracted for months, was borne with great patience and submission Scarce a murmur ever escaped her lips. Though only in the morning of life, and had previously enjoyed almost uninterrupted good health, she early fell a victim to unsparing consumption. Naturally of a "meek and quiet spirit"—a dutiful daughter—affectionate sister, and with all—for the last three years, she had been an humble, consistent member of the Presbyterian church at Steele Creek.

"Her sun is gone down while it was yet day." Her life was short. Her death a sleep. Her end, peace. PASTOR.

At her residence near Laurinburg, Richmond county N. C, February 27th 1879, Mrs. JENNET, relict of the late Arch'd C. McCormick, aged 83 years and 7 months.

In early life she connected herself with the Presbyterian Church, of which she was a consistent and exemplary member for more than half a century.—Her last illness was lingering, but she endured with patience, her inward man being renewed day by day. Her Saviour was her all, and being steadfast in him she feared no evil, but sweetly fell asleep, in the assured hope of a happy resurrection and a blissful immortality. COM.

The pamphlet will probably contain between two and three hundred pages, which will be about the size and style of the Missionary. Subscribers will also receive a briefer DAILY REPORT in the columns of the Louisville Courier-Journal, which will be sent during the sessions.

This method, besides its convenience to the reporter, will, it is believed, secure to the Church some advantages not heretofore enjoyed, among which may be noted:

(1) A TRULY VERBATIM REPORT OF THE WHOLE PROCEEDINGS. No debate, or part of a debate, no speech, will be left out, except as ordered by the Assembly, unimportant colloquys upon the order of business, and the like. The aim is to make it as thoroughly verbatim as the Congressional Record excepting useless and embarrassing minuteness in trifles. I hope to send out a finished work, such as I have never yet had the privilege to furnish.

(2) The pamphlet form will fit it for PRESERVATION AND REFERENCE; so that it will be a valuable contribution to the current history of the Church, telling to "the generation following" the various views expressed, the reasons moving our highest judicatory in its acts, and the arguments of the humblest as well as the most honored members without mutilation.

(3) Another advantage may be found in the ARRANGEMENT OF THE DISCUSSIONS. The chronological order will be abandoned—except in a brief preliminary diary—and all the proceedings upon any one topic will be given not by piece-meal, but arranged under one head and on consecutive pages, with such reference to dates as may be needful.

(4) EARLY AND REGULAR INTELLIGENCE from the Assembly during its sessions, by means of the daily Courier-Journal—containing the report of its own corps of stenographers—which will be mailed from the office with the regular daily issue. That journal will doubtless receive a more careful transmission through the mails than has been given the Record. It also has the honor of having received by resolution "the cordial thanks" of the Assembly of 1870 for its accurate report.

Such is the proposal which I now have the honor to lay before the members of the Southern Presbyterian Church. Having been, without solicitation, and to my utter surprise, appointed official stenographer by the Assembly of 1876, I consider myself called by the Church to the work of providing the Church with a complete and trustworthy report of the manner in which her highest court exercises its jurisdiction. To fulfill this ministry is my ardent wish. But it must be perceived that the efficient aid of our ministers and members will be needed to give success to the attempt. I have ventured to trust to their appreciation of the undertaking, believing that they will take pleasure in furthering it, so that such a patronage may be secured this year as will warrant the continuance of the work hereafter.

TERMS:

The verbatim report in pamphlet, with the daily Courier-Journal, will be sent postpaid for ONE DOLLAR—the same also without the C.-J. Any one who will send the money for five subscriptions, will be entitled, as compensation for the labor, to an extra copy, or may retain $1 50, and the same percentage on every additional copy. EVERY MINISTER IS REQUESTED TO ACT AS AGENT, OR PUT THE BUSINESS INTO SUITABLE HANDS The same favor is requested of elders of vacant churches. The book will be mailed as soon after the adjournment as the additional time demanded by its form will permit—within three or four weeks—and earlier should the patronage warrant the employment of assistance. This pamphlet report will, of course, not appear in the religious weeklies. Subscriptions are to be sent to my present address, MIDWAY, KENTUCKY—in Registered Letters or Post Office Money Orders. P. O. orders must be PAYABLE at LOUISVILLE, KY. G. L. WOLFE.

SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA

Its great value illustrated in a brief statement from a highly respectable and estimable lady of Philadelphia.

Mrs. Dugan, residing at No. 909 Dauphin Street, Philadelphia, will confirm the statement here given with pleasure. She was attacked some ten years ago, only three months after her marriage, with an insidious disease, observing at that time a small ulcer on the thigh. From this apparently insignificant commencement the disease gradually spread throughout her entire system, producing sad havock in the skin, mucous membranes, and the bones, destroying the uvula and palatine arches in the throat; and her body, which before was entirely free from disease, soon was covered with ulcers. The disease now attacked the cervical glands, and gradually going deeper to the periosteum causing exfoliations of the clavicle, scapula, and humerus, then attacked the os frontis, the vomer, nasal bones, and submaxillary, passing down the arms in its destructive course. At one time there were thirty ulcers on the left arm, and fifteen on the right arm. Pieces of the ulna and radius were thrown off, and the LEFT HAND WAS AMOST ENTIRELY destroyed, leaving nothing but two metacarpal and one phalanx. Next a large piece came from the patella of the right knee. Upon the left leg abscesses had begun to form, and it was swollen to three times its natural size; but just at this juncture (when she had the attendance of some fifteen physicians, among others some prominent specialists and leading professors), the disease meantime not yielding to any treatment, herself a pitiable object, her parents nigh distracted by seeing a dear daughter being destroyed by disease, a martyr to suffering with apparently no remedy, a medical gentleman said to her: "There is one reliable remedy which you had better try; I have witnessed its effect on some patients," and he named SWAIM'S PANACEA to her. She immediately laid her case before Dr. Franklin Stewart, who has during the past thirty years prepared the Panacea, and who at once assured her that he had every reason to believe, if she would take it faithfully, she yet would be cured. She immediately began its use—soon the abscesses then being formed were checked and absorbed and did not discharge externally. In three days there was an increase of appetite, and when she had taken one bottle there appeared on the surface of the ulcers healthy granulations, the terrible pain began to subside, and on the completion of the third bottle the ulcers had nearly all cicatrized, and from this time, the disease being arrested, the curative process was continuous, and she has now some forty pieces of bone to exhibit to the incredulous. Mrs. Dugan weighed less than 100 lbs. when she commenced to take the Panacea in April last, since which time she has gained 54 lbs. of health, flesh and blood. She desires that we should give her case publicity, in hopes that thereby some other sufferer may thus be directed to the use of a remedy which has been productive of such grand results in her case. SWAIM'S PANACEA is a most reliable remedy in all cases of disease caused by impurities in the blood, and persons so afflicted should observe this fact. It is prepared only at Swaim's Laboratory, 113 South Seventh Street, below Chestnut, Philadelphia. Persons wanting it must be careful and not get an imitation article, put up by a party whose name is similarly spelled, or they will be swindled. Pamphlets furnished gratis.

FOR THE FAMILY.

A Temperance Pledge for Little Boys.

A pledge I make
No wine to take;
Nor brandy red
That turns the head;
Nor whiskey hot
That makes the sot;
Nor fiery rum
That ruins home.
Nor will I sin
By drinking gin;
Hard cider, too,
Will never do;
Nor brewers' beer
My heart to cheer;
Nor sparkling ale
My face to pale;
To quench my thirst I'll always bring
Cold water from the well or spring,
So here I pledge perpetual hate
To all that can intoxicate.

—Christian Intelligencer.

The Two Friends.

A certain school in the vicinity of a large English city was visited by a gentleman, who, on looking around at the many faces, inquired of the master:

"Are there any boys about leaving you!"

"Yes, I have two who will leave at the holidays."

"Are they old enough to enter an office!"

"Yes."

"And bright enough?"

"Quite."

"Which two are they?"

The master, pointing to Alan Burne and Austin Compton, heartily hoped that his visitor's choice would rest upon the former, as he felt sure from the boy's previous conduct that he would prove of value to his employer, and he added a few words to that effect

But the gentleman only looked "on the outward appearance," and after glancing from one to the other, he decided on the taller of the two boys and the one with the brighter face.

So, greatly to Austin's delight, he was called up to the master's desk, and the gentleman then and there made him the offer of a situation in his office, an offer which Austin joyfully accepted, provided his mother was agreeable to his doing so.

Though the schoolmaster knew that Austin was far from being a steady boy, yet he thought this piece of good fortune might be the means of making him so; and, not wishing to stand in the boy's light, he said nothing about his idleness and inattention, but he wished the choice had fallen upon Alan.

Mrs. Compton was but too pleased to give her consent, and, with great pleasure, she talked to Mrs. Burne of Austin's future prospects.

"If a youth will attend to these three things," said Mrs Compton, placing her hand caressingly on her son's shoulders, "steadiness honesty and perseverance, he will, by God's help, do well when he has the chances my boy has."

And a happy smile played over her face as she listened, in all faith, to his well-sounding intentions of doing great wonders.

Alan Burne, while rejoicing at his friend's success, wished heartily that a similar piece of good fortune might befall him.

But the days passed, and no one solicited his services, and he saw but little chance of realizing his wish.

He could hear of nothing in his native village and the few advertisements that he had answered had brought him no nearer to the fulfilment of his desires.

But Alan was a boy of resolution, and to will was to do with him; so one morning he set out with the determination of obtaining, if possible, a situation that day.

Alan was a boy of religious feelings, and before starting on his journey he sent forth a petition that a blessing would rest on his day's work.

Strengthened and cheered he wended his steps toward the city, but on arriving there he wandered on, not knowing which way to turn or whither to go, and the bustle and noise somewhat confused him.

At length, turning into Princess street, he came to a large, business-looking place; he had passed many such, but their imposing appearance had deterred him from entering them.

Halting at the door, his courage began to ebb, but doing battle with his feelings, and telling himself not to be foolish, he entered.

Walking up to a small counting-house, which he saw to his right, he inquired:

"Please, sir, do you want a boy? Do you want to employ any one?"

"No, we don't want any one."

A feeling of disappointment smote Alan's heart, but something prompted him to say:

"Couldn't you find me anything to do, sir?"

The boy's earnestness made the gentleman look more particularly at him, and, struck with his manner, he inquired:

"What can you do?"

"I'll do 'anything,' sir! Only try me! Give me something to do!"

Alan was not a strong lad; on the contrary, he was small and weakly looking, but his earnestness carried weight with it, and more out of kindness than that he required or believed in the boy's services, the gentleman made some work for him, for looking round he said:

"Go and cord those packages."

There were a great number of them, and Alan applied himself assiduously to his task.

He worked in such business-like style that the gentleman told him to come again the next day to see if some more work could be found for him, and, punctual to the minute Alan was at his post the next morning, and at the end of the week he was engaged as a regular hand in the large establishment of Messrs. Freeman & Fawsit, tea brokers.

Alan murmured at nothing; nothing was too much for him, and no one ever heard him say he could not do what was required of him.

Trustworthy and attentive in business, he soon found favor with his employers, and they were but too glad to promote him as the chance came in their way.

The two friends were now fairly started in life, with every prospect of doing well; and had they both attended to the good advice that was given them on entering their new vocations, it would have been well for them. But bad habits cling to us as ivy to a wall, and the idle, inattentive boy found a difficulty in settling down into the diligent business youth.

The novelty of his new life soon wore off, and, as of yore, he began to feel everything a trouble.

The getting up in the morning was his chief difficulty—to lie in bed to the last most moment was Austin's plan; then all his duties were performed hurriedly, and it was nothing but a scramble and commotion till he had rushed to his train, which, however, he generally managed to lose.

Thus matters went on till his employers would put up with his unpunctuality no longer; so, at the time Alan Burne was promoted to his first rise, Austin Comptin received his dismissal.

As his mother was not very well off he had to bear all the inconvenience of straitened circumstances; and the various straits which the youth was put to, brought him to realize the advantages of the situation which he had allowed to slip away from him.

Now that he had become practically acquainted with the many hardships that idleness brings, he resolved that if ever a good situation come in his way again he would discard his old habits and do his best to keep it.

But it was a long time before Austin obtained employment again—good situations are not to be found at every street corner, and so he found. But at last another office opened its doors to him, and once more he had the means of earning a livelihood.

The years have rolled on, and the two friends are now middle-aged men, but their regard for one another is still as strong as when they were lads at school. Then they were both poor, with the world before them to make their way in, but now their circumstances are different.

Alan Burne, through his untiring perseverance, rose step by step till at last he became managing man in the establishment where he first begged that a trial might be given him.

He has proved "worthy of his hire," and in the receipt of a handsome income is now reaping the fruits of his industry.

Austin Compton, on the contrary, though hard working and persevering enough now, is still a poor man; he just manages to make both ends meet, but the ball that he cast from him in his thoughtless youth has never come in his path again; and though thankful that well is well so far, yet a sadness comes over his spirit when he thinks of the opportunity that he let slip.

But it is no good repining over what cannot be mended; and, as Austin Compton tells his young friends, if they will only persevere and grasp their opportunities of success, and climb the ladder step by step, they may some day place their feet upon the top, and he names his friend, Alan Burne, as an example.—British Juvenile.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Ring Finger.

Much ingenuity has been expended in the endeavor to discover on which hand and on which finger the wedding-ring was placed. The Jews have a tradition that Mary, when she espoused Joseph, received the ring on her middle finger; hence no Jewish woman receives her wedding ring there, but always on the forefinger.

St. Ambrose, in one of his sermons, calls the third finger the finger of the ring. Macrobius gives the nursery names of the fingers in the time of the Romans; the third finger is called unularis; the low Norman name for the same finger is "John of the Seals."

In the ancient ritual of marriage among the English Baptists, the ring was placed on the end of the left thumb, with the words, "In the name of the Father;" then on the forefinger, with the words, "and the Son;" then on the middle finger, "and the Holy Ghost;" finally, on the third, the ring finger, with the closing word, "Amen." The ancient Greeks used this finger also, because they believed a nerve to run directly from this finger to the heart. Lemsine says it is not an artery, but a vein, and modern science shows that there is nothing of the kind in existence.

The right hand is the hand of power, hence the wife wears the ring on the left hand. The third finger is the only recognized ring finger; all who wear rings officially wear them on that finger, though it is true that the statutes of the gods had their signets on the forefinger, both in Greece and Italy. This was on the right hand; but, from convenience, and long established custom, the left hand is now generally considered the proper hand, and the least-used finger of that hand holds the ring

Lemnius says that the same finger is called Medicus, for, "on account of the virtue it derives from the heart, the old physicians would mingle their medicines and potions with this finger, because no venom can stick upon the utmost part of it but it will offend a man, and communicate itself to his heart.'

Some married women are so rigid in their notion respecting the wedding ring, that they will never, even for a moment, take it off their finger, extending, it would seem, the expression, "till death do us part," even to this pledge of matrimony.

The White Water-Lily.

If lovers of flowers only knew how easily the fragrant white water-lily, Nymphæ odorata, could be cultivated, we are quite sure these lilies would be grown far more than other less fragrant and beautiful flowers that take more time and trouble to cultivate. These lilies once planted in a pond or small stream (they will bloom more profusely in shallow water) that does not entirely dry up in summer, will need no further care, and will increase from year to year. People who have not the facilities for growing them in ponds and streams can have their lily gardens in tubs and aquariums, where they can admire and gather the most fragrant and beautiful flower that grows on land or water.

In Tubs.—For a tub take a strong barrel, free from tar, oil, or salt; saw it in two; fill this one-third full with fine black garden soil, or meadow mud if handy; plant the roots in this mixture, covering them two inches deep; and water gently so as not to disturb the roots, until the tub is full. This is the only care needed—always keep the tub full of water. Set this on a brick or board platform in any place you desire. The tubs with their contents should be placed in a cellar during the winter, kept from frost, and not allowed to entirely dry up.

For Ponds and Streams.—Tie a stone close to the roots, large enough to sink it; drop this into the pond or stream where you wish them to grow.

Woman the Primitive Pottery-Maker and Decorator.

In an interesting article by the late Professor Hartt, reprinted in the American Naturalist, the author, after copious extracts from the writings of those who have travelled among the various savage tribes of the globe, shows that among such peoples generally the art of pottery making is, at first, exclusively practiced by women, the reason being that the fabrication of earthenware is primarily and essentially a branch of culinary work—the latter everywhere failing to the lot of the gentler sex. Among savages, man is the hunter, fisher, and warrior; while the woman takes care of the house and the culture of the field. When, however, in the progress of the tribe in culture, the practice of the art of pottery comes to be a trade or profession, and to interfere with the household work, it passes naturally into the hands of man, and it will be found that in every case where men make earthenware the tribe has advanced considerably beyond the savage state.

But savage woman not only makes the vessels of clay, she also ornaments them, and if the fictile art has originated with her, and has grown up under her hands, it seems no less probable that the ornaments she uses should have originated with her; and the probability is increased by the fact that to her falls the work of spinning and weaving, and of making and decorating personal ornaments and clothes, and of making baskets, mats etc. She is everywhere the primitive decorative artist, and today it is the exception that man occupies himself with ornamental art, even in civilized countries. Woman covers with ornament everything her hand touches, and the lady in her boudoir industriously embroiders, on some article of mere luxury, the same series of frets and scroll borders that, among the Amazons, the savage unclothed squaw as diligently and with as firm a hand traces with a spine on the damp surface of the clay vessel she is fashioning. It is as if they both sang the same simple song. The ornaments are in both cases identical, and not only of wholly independent origin, but it may be of very different age. Those of the savage are the mere embryonic beginnings of art life, while those of the boudoir are archaic forms, persisting through the ages, still flourishing unchanged among the varied wealth of derivatives by evolution from the ancient primary forms.—Scientific American.

Japanese Bronzes.

Mr. Consul Flowers, in a report on the commerce of Hiogo and Osaka, Japan, lately issued by the Foreign Office, thus speaks of the manufacture of Japanese bronzes: "The moulds, which of course vary according to the shape of the vase or bowl it is desired to make, are made of wood, sometimes covered with straw. On this a coating of clay is placed; over this comes a layer of wax, which is moulded into the design required. Another thick coating of clay is then added, and the inner wooden mould being taken out, the orifice at each end is closed. Two holes are then made at one end connecting with the layer of wax, so as to enable the wax, when melted, to run out, and through these the molten bronze enters, filling the interstices occupied by the wax. The subsequent process of casting is of the rudest kind. The earthen mould is placed in a small clay oven hollowed out in the floor of the workshop, the size of which depends upon that of the casting. The oven is then filled with charcoal and closed, with the exception of a circular opening at the top, on which a chimney, a foot or so high, is built of wet clay. The oven is connected underground with a wooden bellows, protected from the sparks and heat from the furnace by a small earthen or stone wall a foot high, and which is worked by hands and feet. The first operation is to melt the wax, which runs out, leaving the impression of the design stamped firmly in the surrounding layer of clay. This done, the mould is taken out and allowed to cool. It is then put a second time into the furnace as before, and the molten bronze is then poured in the mould through the holes by which the wax escaped. After the bronze has filled the mould the chimney is knocked off, the oven supplied with fresh charcoal laid evenly around the mould, and a lid being put on the oven, furnished with small perforated holes, the bellows are set to work again for an hour or more, according to the size of the casting taken. This operation generally occupies a day. When the casting is taken out of the oven, the earth outside and inside is scraped off, and reveals the vase or bowl in a rough state. It is then put into the hands of rude workmen, boys being mostly employed in this part of the work by whom it is polished and scraped with a knife until it presents a smooth surface. It then passes on to the carver, who fills in the details of the designs. When his work is done the vase or bowl is dipped into a boiling solution of vinegar, sedge, and sulphate of copper, in order to give it up the proper color. A few finishing touches in the way of polish are added, and the article is finished and ready for sale."

To Make Boys Good Farmers.

To parents who have boys growing up on the farm, nothing should be neglected pertaining to farm life to make them good farmers. A half-way farmer, like an ill-instructed mechanic or an indolent shop keeper, never does much good.

From the first, boys on the farm should be induced to take an interest in the farm, in the stock, in the implements, and in all that pertains to the business. Tell them all your plans, your successes and failures; give them a history of your life and what you did, and how you lived when a boy; but do not harp too much on the degenerate character of young men of the present age. Praise them when you can and encourage them to do better. Let them dress up in the evening, instead of sitting down in their dirty clothes, as is too often the case. Provide warm and nicely furnished sitting rooms, with brilliant lights. Thanks to kerosene, our country homes can be as brilliantly lighted as the gas-lit residences in the city. Encourage the neighbors to drop in frequently for a social chat. Talk of agriculture rather than politics; speak of the importance of large crops, of good stock, of liberal feeding, and of the advantages of making animals comfortable, rather than of the hard times, low prices and high wages. Above all, encourage the boys to read good agricultural papers and books. Provide these without stint; read with them, and give them the benefit of your experience and criticism.

Finally, cause them, by pleasant surroundings, to grow day by day more in love with home and the duties belonging to their glorious occupation, and there is no doubt but what they will stick to the farm and make farming a great success.

Remedy for Hard Times.

Stop spending so much on fine cloths, rich food and style. Buy good, healthy food cheaper and better clothing; get more real and substantial things of life every way, and especially stop the foolish habit of running after expensive and quack doctors or using so much of the vile humbug medicine that does you only harm and makes the proprietors rich, put your trust in the greatest of all simple, pure remedies. Hop Bitters, that cures always at a trifling cost, and you will see better times and good health. Try it once. Read of it in another column.

THE PENTECOSTAL BAPTISM.

In favor of the views which I hold relative to the baptism administered on the Day of Pentecost, I do not know that I have many arguments additional to those advanced by Dr. Dale. But since what he has written on the subject would take up too much space in a newspaper, I will have to present a condensed statement of his arguments after my own style, although their force must necessarily be thereby greatly weakened.

If it has been proved that the baptism which Paul received was not ritual baptism that fact must go far towards creating the suspicion that the view which has been generally held, that ritual baptism was administered to the three thousand on the Day of Pentecost, is a mistaken one.

1. Let it be noted that in the record of the scenes which transpired on that day water is not once named, and that not a single word is said that would make it necessary to conclude that the rite of baptism was administered on that occasion. If it was let it be proved and not taken for granted.

2. When the Day of Pentecost arrived the apostles were in expectation of receiving a baptism which our Saviour expressly called baptism with the Holy Ghost. They assembled from day to day in obedience to the command of their Lord, "that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith He, ye have heard of me; for John truly baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." (Acts i: 4, 5.) But not only is the descent of the Spirit upon the apostles called baptism, but the effect of their words upon those who were converted on the Day of Pentecost, as the result of the Spirit's descent upon them likewise, is evidently allnded to by Christ as included in the promise of His Father, and must, therefore, be considered as their baptism also with the Holy Ghost. John, after giving our Saviour's words concerning the source, necessity and effects of saving faith, gives an explanation of them, "This spake He of the Spirit which they that believe on Him should receive, for the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified." And that the promise of the Father had allusion to the conversion of the three thousand is also proved by the allusion which Peter, in his sermon on the Day of Pentecost, made to the prophecy of Joel, "It shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh," &c.

Here, then, is a baptism which we know was alluded to, and which we know was administered on that day, both to the apostles and to the three thousand, namely, the baptism of the Holy Spirit, a baptism exhibiting no "diversities" in the endowing the apostles with the gift of tongues, and in the conversion of the three thousand. And it should not be forgotten that the statement of John the Baptist, that Christ would baptize with the Holy Ghost is universally believed to have allusion not merely to His endowing His apostles with the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, but to His bestowing His converting influences upon sinners. We shall see presently whether for the right understanding of Acts ii. we have need to suppose that a baptism not in the remotest degree allnded to in the record was administered in addition to this baptism of the Holy Spirit.

3. The instruction given by Peter to the sinners convicted under his sermon would naturally be supposed to be instruction necessary to be obeyed in order to salvation. They had asked him what they must do. It is evident that they desired to know what was necessary to be done in order to obtain salvation from the great sin of having crucified the Lord of Glory. "Then Peter said nnto them, Repent and be baptized every one of you, in (believing epi, upon) the name of Jesus Christ, for (eis, into) the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." The phrase "into the remission of sins" is evidently connected with the word "baptized." Peter commanded them to repent and be baptized into the remission of sins. It would be contrary to all the rnles of philology to suppose that the phrase "for (eis, into) the remission of sins" passes entirely over "baptized" and reaches to the word "repent," so as to make the sentence mean repent for the remission of sins and receive the rite of baptism as a sign and seal of yonr having believed epi (upon) "the name of Jesus Christ." Such reading would be evidently altering the words of Scripture to snit a theory—not translating the language of the Holy Ghost. When Elisha said to Naaman, "Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee and thou shalt be clean," who could think that Elisha meant to tell Naaman that his going bnt not his washing in Jordan was absolutely essential to his cleansing? When Paul says that the mystery of the Gospel "is made manifest, and....made known to all nations for the obedience of faith," who could think that he meant to say that it was necessary for the obedience of faith that the mystery should be made manifest, bnt not necessary that it should be made known? When Paul said, "Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savonr," did he mean to say that Christ loved us for a sweet-smelling savonr, bnt did not give Himself for us for a sweet-smelling savonr? When he said to the Philippians, "I know that I shall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy of faith," did he mean to tell them that for their furtherance and joy of faith it was necessary for him to abide, bnt not necessary that he should continue with them? Equally absnrd is it to snppose that when Peter told those who asked him what they must do to be saved, to repent and be baptized for the remission of sins, he meant to tell them that their repentance, but not their baptism, was necessary to the remission of their sins. Whether eis be translated "into," or "for," in the sense of "in order to," the baptism alluded to by Peter was necessary to the remission of sin; if not a cause, certainly as an antecedent, without which the remission of sin would not be obtained. But into is always the proper translation of "eis," when preceded by baptize, both in classic and New Testament Greek. The phrases baptism (eis) into repentance, baptism (eis) into the remission of sin, baptism (eis) into Christ, are Scripture phrases indicating the condition into which the person baptized is pnt by the baptizing agent, jnst as baptized into drunkenness, baptized into sleep are classic phrases indicating the condition into which the person baptized is put by the baptizing agent. The Holy Spirit, in bestowing repentance and faith, epi (npon) the Lord Jesus Christ, does not thereby baptize the sonl into the remission of sins.

The phrase "in (epi, npon) the name of Jesus Christ" finds its parallel in Jndith 12: 7: "Baptized herself upon the fountain," where the preposition points ont that upon which Jndith rested when she baptized herself. In the langnage of Dr. Dale, "It was faith in the fountain's edge, as able physically to sustain her, that led Jndith to rest confidently npon it:....and the sonl believing that Jesus is able, morally, to sustain all who rest upon Him, does confidently accept the preaching of Peter, declaring that every penitent sinner resting upon Jesus Christ as an atoning Redeemer, shall thereby be baptized into the remission of sins."

Now, if we discard the natural construction of the passage under consideration, and try to accommodate it to certain human theories, we will be involved in inextricable confnsion.

Shall we read the passage thus, Repent and be dipped into the remission of sins? Sinners need not a simple pntting in and taking out, bnt to be thoroughly imbued with the remission of sins. Shall we say, Repent and be dipped into water, or be sprinkled with water for the remission of sins? But no evangelical sect of Christians believe that the rite of baptism, by whatever mode administered, is essential to the remission of sins. Shall we say, Repent and be baptized into water for the remission of sins? That would make murder and snicide by drowning essential to the remission of sins. At any rate if a person is baptized into water he would have to be quickly unbaptized to escape death. Shall we say, Repent for the remission of sins and receive the rite of baptism as a sign and seal of regeneration? That, as I have said, would not be a translation, but an alteration of the words of the Spirit. Verse 41: "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand sonls." Is not the baptism here alluded to ritual baptism? I answer,

1. It is impossible to learn from the verse itself into what condition these three thousand were pnt by the baptism there spoken of, because there are in the verse no adjuncts of the word that would indicate its nature. If the simple statement were fonnd in classic literatnre that a certain person was baptized, and no allnsion was made in the passage or context to the baptizing agent or element, it would be impossible to ascertain whether the person had been drowned, or drunk, or asleep, or in some other condition of mind or body. If such a statement were fonnd in the Old Testament scriptnres, it might be plausibly inferred, but not certainly known, that he was ceremonially purified. If such a statement were fonnd in the New Testament scriptnres, since baptisms in which God is the agent, and a baptism in which man is the agent are both spoken of in many places, and men are required in all cases to seek the former baptism, and in all cases to receive the latter, it would be impossible to know which was designed to be designated. And since it is not to be supposed that God would pnt on the inspired page a statement, the meaning of which could not be possibly ascertained, we must conclude that the context does throw sufficient light upon the nature of the baptism spoken of in the 41st verse.

2. The context not only makes no allnsion to water baptism, bnt does not allnde, as I have shown, to the baptism of the Holy Ghost. The promise of the Father concerning this baptism had just been fulfilled; the convicted hearers of Peter's sermon had just been directed to be baptized into the remission of sins. Their glad reception of the word indicated their obedience of the direction, and hence it is said that they were baptized—that is, into the remission of sins.

3. If the baptism here spoken of was administered by man instead of the langnage, "they that gladly received his word," we would expect to find to the words, they that professed to receive his word. We know that even the apostles were not infallible in their jndgment of the proper candidates for admission into the visible Chnrch, since they were deceived in the cases of Ananias and Sapphira and Simon Magus.

4. If this was ritnal baptism then we would snppose that the statement following—that three thonsand sonls were added—tanght that this addition was to the visible Chnrch. Bnt the statement made in verse 47, that the Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved" being so similar to this, wonld indicate that it was the Lord who added the three thousand. If so, then the baptism was administered by Him, and mnst have been the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Whosoever baptized the three thonsand added them to the Chnrch.

If the above arguments are sound it is easy to see that the officers of the Church had ample time after the day of Pentecost to examine the candidates for membership and baptize them with water. P. T. P.

SATAN.

We as a Christian people have become so much accnstomed to hear Satan and his unhallowed devices denonnced that we are disposed to look npon him as an insignificant personage. How great is our error. It is an error which leads to spiritnal and eternal death. On the contrary he is one amongst the highest intelligences in the universe of God. Why he is permitted to exist and counteract the benevolent schemes of Almighty God we are unable in our present state of existence to know. The very name itself in Hebrew means the adversary. Yes, the adversary of God and man.

As regards his powers and capacities we are informed that, nnder the name of Lncifer "the bright and morning star," he, in the early ages, rebelled against God Almighty, and was cast ont of heaven; that he came to earth, seduced onr first parents, and even tempted our Lord and Master, and no donbt prompted the Jews to his crucifixion, and still goes abont as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devonr. He is described as the prince of the power of the air, and the king of hell, and now perhaps controls one thonsand millions of the inhabitants of the earth. Is he not therefore greatly to be feared? Should we not tremble for our own safety? His rnle is and will be eternal rnin to our souls.

Should we not, therefore, as individnals and as a whole, pray to God for the overthrow of his kingdom? This, beyond donbt, will in the end be accomplished, bnt we have to await God's own time, for which we are directed to pray, "Thy kingdom come." For we know that notwithstanding Satan's retrospective and present magnificence (which we believe only to be permitted) he is bound to yield to God's omnipotent flat, and will ultimately be dethroned and doomed to hell with all his followers, both fallen angels and men. Let us, therefore, no longer look npon Satan as an insignificant personage, but learn to fear him and so tremble for our own safety and seek the favor of an omnipotent and benevolent God. X.

THE NEW EARTH.

In onr article of last week we discussed the passage of scripture in the 3d chapter of 2d Peter, as bearing on the doctrine of the renovation of the earth. It is now proposed to consider the passage in the 8th of Romans, begining, "For the earnest expectation of the creatnre waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." On this passage Dr. Hodge remarks "That the creature (ktisis) here means the whole creation with which we are immediately connected—the earth, and all its tribes of beings, man excepted—is the opinion of a great majority of commentators of all ages." This "creatnre," (more properly "creation") the Apostle says, "was made snbject to vanity." This is a figurative expression, explained by the phrase "bondage of corrnption" used in the next verse as its eqnivalent. The curse has brought all natnre into a frail and dying state. Except a few, as it were prophetic evergreens, the leaves of summer are withered by the early frost and perish. The trees which strike their roots deep down into the earth and toss their branches to the sky for centuries in mockery of storms, have yet within themselves the seeds of slow decay. All natnre is made subject to vanity, and like to man, its fallen king, is hastening to darkness, corruption and the worm.

"Not willingly," however, says the Apostle. It has been brought into this condition, not by any original tendency of its own, bnt by the positive ordination of God. The seeds of destrnction that are in it are a foreign element, brought in to make it accord with the new character of man and do its part in his punishment. The thorns and thistles which the ground brings forth, the dried wastes, the poisonous vapors with which the atmosphere is charged, and all the groaning and travailing in pain, which the Apostle attributes to inanimate nature, are the result of Adam's fall. "Cnrsed is the ground for thy sake." This fact, that for man's sake the creatnre was made subject to vanity, is the reason of its hope to share in his restoration, and be introduced into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

It is worthy of special note that in this passage the restoration of the earth is brought into immediate connection with the resurrection of the body (v. 23.) This indentifies the restoration here spoken of with the new earth, of the passage from Peter, in point of time. The resurrection takes place at the time of the second advent. It is this same "day of the Lord" which Peter says shall come as a thief in the night, in which the present economy shall pass away to give place to the new heavens and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. These shall appear at the precise moment they are needed to furnish a dwelling place for the risen bodies of the righteous. This and none other will be their everlasting home.

The doctrine, I am aware, will conflict with the ideas which most Christians have been accnstomed to entertain of heaven. Some have fonnd only trouble and sorrow in the world, and they are looking forward to heaven as a place of rest, situated somewhere in the far off regions of space, where the din and turmoil and envy and strife and bitterness of earth are felt and feared no more. They love to ponder that sweet message of the angel to John—"Write blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the spirit, that they shall rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." But just here we think is where Christians of the present day are failing to comprehend the full measure of the hope set before them. The heaven for which many pious people are looking is not the finished salvation of the gospel, bnt only the partial salvation of the intermediate state. There is a sense in which we all believe in an intermediate state—the state of the disembodied spirit between death and the resurrection. Concerning this state it is remarkable that comparatively little is said in the Bible. We know that the disembodied spirits of the righteous dead are "blessed"—consciously happy—and that they are "present with the Lord." Further than this we know nothing, either as to how they exist or how they are employed. The reason for this silence would seem to be that God would thereby teach us to look beyond this imperfect state to the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour as the time of our complete redemption. This is the time for which the "earnest expectation (erecto capite prospicere) of the creature" waits and the groaning creation longs; when not only the soul has been made perfect in holiness and passed into glory, but reunited also to the risen body. With all deference for holy Baxter, and all admiration for his immortal work, our idea of heaven is not that of "Everlasting Rest." Neither is it that which some good people seem to entertain—to flit about forever as a disembodied spirit through the realms of space in search of enrosities! Our idea of heaven is that of everlasting activity; of a kind united to and worthy of the nature which God has given us. For this a body will be needed. Our souls were made to inherit bodies, and our nature demands "not to be unclothed, bnt clothed npon." True it is said the resurrection body is a spiritual body. But by this is not meant a body refined away to an intangible ghost. It is not a body turned into a spirit, but a spiritnal body—one united to the behests of the spiritnal part of our nature rather than to its animal propensities. "All the dead," says our confession, "shall be raised up with the self-same bodies and none other, although with different qnalities." And the bodies, because they are bodies, will need a place to dwell in—a place which they can call their home. Therefore it is, we think, that the Apostle brings these two redemptions together—the restoration of the earth and the resurrection of the body. In the beginning the earth was not created to be empty and desolate. "He created it not in vain; he formed it to be inhabited." And so of the new earth which shall come forth ont of the dissolving elements of the heavens and the earth that are now; it shall not be renewed in vain, but to be the everlasting home of the redeemed. An highway shall be there, and it shall be called the way of holiness. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast, but the redeemed shall walk there; and the ransomed shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy npon their heads. They shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." S. H. C.

THE MODERN PULPIT AND SCEPTICAL CULTURE.

It becomes no doubt a perplexing question in many cases, How onght the gospel preacher to deal with snch a state of facts? He cannot bnt be aware that a large nnmber of those to whom he preaches are more or less brought under the influence of this sceptical culture. And besides, he is aware that he and all who stand fast "to the faith once delivered to the saints" are continually held up before the people as ignorant, dogmatic bigots, whose religions creeds of necessity pnt them into a possession of antagonism towards scientific knowledge and the progress of the age. What, then, is the dnty of the preacher in reference to this noisy, rampant and aggressive scepticism? Can he afford utterly to ignore it? Evidently not. Shall he then arm himself with sling and stone, and go forth to meet these Lilliputian Goliaths who defy the armies of the living God? Must he shame the smatterers by going back to the foundation of their infidel systems, and instructing the people in the categories of Kant and the philosophy of Hegel, with their outflowering, in the destructive criticism of the Tubingen school? Must he expound and expose the Positive Philosophy, and point ont the mistake of Sir William Hamilton in regard to the unconditioned and unthinkable? Must he discuss with Mr. Herbert Spencer his system of the universe developed from the unknowable, and his new theory of creation under Darwin's law of development? Must he mark ont for the people the mistakes of the philosophers concerning that mysterious line which separates between the knowable and thinkable and the unconditioned and unknowable? Must he follow Tyndall and Huxley and Darwin into the penetralia of nature and expose the missing links in their theories of the origin of man and of the universe? Must he trudge with Sir John Lubbock over his immeasnreable mnd bank of facts often falsely so-called, or grope his way with Baron Gould through his immeasnrable fog-banks of specnlaton touching the genesis of man and his religions?

Manifestly not. This would be a practical laying aside the dnties of his office. And moreover, such is not the true method of meeting error in the popular mind, even philosophically considered. Every minister of intelligence and experience has discovered that the most effective method of destroying the influence of error over the minds of men is not to give chase after it into the wilderness of controversy, bnt to instill into the minds of the people clear and distinct ideas of the contrary truth. The surest antidote to falsehood is clear-cut simple statement of the positive truth which falsehood assails. There is a profound philosophy underlying the instruction given by an inspired apostle to a young friend in the ministry, and one specially appropriate to the young ministry of this day: "Keep thou that which is committed to thy trust; avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so-called." And elsewhere the same apostle declares his own method of dealing with the special cultnre of this day: "The Greeks seek after wisdom; but we preach Christ crucified, to the Greeks' foolishness."—Dr. Stuart Robinson in Princeton Review.

DEATH.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M. D.

Thou named, yet nameless minion,
Thou sovereign, whose dominion
None living yet may know;
O, tell me whence thou comest,
And wherefore thou assumest
To be the King of woe!

Unfold, resistless foller,
Who art become the spoiler
Of every human thing,
Why dost thou, all potential,
With terror as credential,
Thus bid us own thee King?

Thine was but one commission,
Regardless of petition,
To open up the tomb;
To prince and son of labor,
To foeman and to neighbor,
Uncovering its gloom.

But see! thou claimest sorrow,
And darkly on each morrow,
Thou hangest out a pall!
Whence, every eye beholding,
A doom thou art unfolding
Compassionless to all.

Not warrior crowned with glory,
Nor victim pale and gory,
Can meet thee but in dread;
None shudderless are standing,
When, at thy stern commanding,
They go among the dead.

Ah! thou insatiate tyrant,
Thou art alone aspirant
To sport with mortal woe;
Thine only joy is anguish,
To see the mourner languish,
And tears forever flow.

Come at the festal moment,
Come in the first bestowment
Or ultimate of fame;
Come when the infant sleepeth,
Come when the mother weepeth,
And thou art e'er the same.

But lo! thy sway is ending,
For Jesus, when ascending
To majesty on high,
A doom on thee hath branded,
Which yet shall be demanded,
And thou thyself shalt die!

See! there hath been predicted,
For whom thou hast afflicted,
A boon thou knowest not—
A boon that all assuages,
When numbering of ages
Shall long have been forgot.

Soon, soon the ransomed myriads
Shall, ages without periods,
Triumphant o'er thee sing—
"Where now is thy dominion,
Thou once relentless minion,
Oh! Death, where is thy sting?"

CHRIST CAN SAVE.

"At the close of one of my services," says a missionary at Hankow, "a man followed me into the vestry, and addressed me thus: 'I have just heard you say that Christ can save a man from his sins. Can He save me?' 'What sins have you?' I asked. 'Every sin you can think of,' was the reply. Then, reckoning on his fingers, he said, 'I am an opium smoker, gambler, fornicator, and everything that is bad. Can Christ save me?' I said, 'Yes, Christ can save you.' 'When?' he asked again. 'Now,' was the emphatic reply, 'if you will but trust Him for this salvation.' We both prayed, I leading and he following. He was converted then and there, I believe, and at once became one of the most earnest Christians I have ever known."—Exchange.

BROTHER HURRYUP.

We held a five days' meeting at Ginger Creek church. Our beloved brother Hurryup came and did all the preaching; and no such preaching was ever heard in our day. He uses no machinery, but calls the people to come directly to our Savior. He is a remarkable man. The church was revived, backsliders reclaimed and precious souls "converted." We had one hundred and eighty-three converts, forty-seven baptisms and nine restored. Others will follow soon.

Brother Hurryup is a made man now—has reputation, his services are in demand; wherever he goes he is sure to have a wonderful work. He goes to do that thing, and if not a soul is convicted of sin and taught out of the book about Jesus and eternal life, he will get them to the counting point, and then he leaves, and the pastor and church may whistle to manage the "new converts." Brother Hurryup has his compensation, his reputation is sustained, and he is gone to other fields to "hold revivals." And thus our church is being crushed to death with unconverted members.

I wish to give a little history. Brother Hurryup went to Lotsville church a few years since and "held a revival." He had a little book and pencil. Whenever he could find any one that he could persnade to say that he believed that Jesus was the Christ, and that he was willing to serve him, he would pnt his name in his book. By great efforts he got down fifty-three and smiled in triumph as he reported the number. The old and wise brethren shook their heads in doubt, said it was an easy way to heaven. The young people liked the plan, and regarded it "as a near cut to the kingdom;" and thus they could escape deep contrition, weeping, a sense of depravity, self-denial, cross-bearing and deadness to the world. They felt that they could be in the world and in the kingdom also. The pastor trembled with fear for further results. He also took the names of the fifty-three, or he had to remain and see the end of it. Brother Hurryup received $118.47 for his week's work, besides a fine compliment in the town paper, and went his way rejoicing.

The meeting closed and the trouble began. Disorder among the "new converts" became the order of the day. At the end of three years the pastor looked over the list of fifty-three again, and he found five moderately good members, eight drunkards, twenty expelled for "disorderly and unchristian conduct," twelve "dropped" at their own request, and the other eight either under discipline, or worthless. Such was that meeting.

If the name of brother Hurryup is mentioned in Lotsville you can hear the remark: "He is a good hand to count." But some say that neither he or any one else shall ever count them again. And yet, brother Hurryup speaks now of the glorious meeting at Lotsville. The church was paralyzed by it, the cause damaged for a generation, and only brother Hurryup was benefited. Some will say that the church got five members; and that is better than nothing—worth it all. They are merely negative members—no zeal, no enthusiasm, and not at all aggressive. They may be converted, but they certainly do not feel it. The meeting made forty-one real skeptics, who are zealous against the gospel. Is that a system of God that makes eight infidels to one Christian?

(1.) The Holy Spirit does not report results in exact numbers.

(2.) Our zeal for numbers will be our ruin as a denomination, unless it be cured. Let us work, and let God count if he sees proper.

(3.) Real, humble, true laborers can afford to fail, as men call failure. They are dependent on God, and he is all and above all.

(4.) Much of our protracted meeting preaching is merely intended and calculated to arouse men's fears, and contains very little gospel.

(5.) Let is bring out more fully man's depravity, absolute helplessness, God's sovereignty, and the merits of Christ. Keep these and kindred doctrines before the people, and let us wait on God, and we may not report such numbers, but our converts will be genuine and hold on till death. We need now some of the hold on kind. We have enough of the eelish, that slip in and out at every meeting.—Religious Herald.

TEACH US HOW TO PRAY.

How shall I learn to pray? I have bnt recently been converted, and my thonghts and feelings constantly ascend to God and I had no donbt but that one who loved God as I do could pray in prayer meetings, bnt I tried it the other night and am conscious that I made a miserable failure. Please answer me in the next paper, for I feel that I have no time to lose.

Your miserable failure was probably the best part of your prayer. These smooth prayers that roll so glibly off the lips and go rattling up to heaven get blown away before they get half way there. It was not the sorrowing Pharisee who rolled ont his declaration before God who was approved, bnt the wretched Publican, who did not dare to say much, bnt lifted his eyes heavenward, smote on his breast, and cried, "God be merciful to me, a sinner." Bnt if you want rnles:

Be sure you make short prayers.

Be sure that you do not pray your knowledge, bnt your wants.

Be sure that they are your wants and not those of your deacon or your minister.

Make a personal supplication, simple and short, and time will do the rest.

Whether every Christian is bonnd to pray in meeting is quite another question. There are men who have not the gift of prayer, because they have not the gift of utterance; but no man who is able to converse fluently with his fellow men, and transact business intelligibly, ought to be unable to lead profitably in prayer. The mere fact that he feels humble about it is generally an evidence that he feels proud. He is not willing to fail. Men say, "I have no gifts; I can never pray to advantage," and so they will not pray. The secret is this: If they were certain they could pray smoothly they would be willing to, bnt they do not want to take shame and submit to criticism. They make it a matter, therefore, of personal credit. Bnt prayer is not a thing to be offered in the market to be bought and sold at what it will fetch. It is the utterance of the human sonl before God, and the best utterance is often childlike, broken and poor in expression,—and probably on that very account all the better for the hearers. It would be a great advantage for our prayer meetings if instead of so many "nice" prayers we were to have men stumble along, unable to say anything more than the prayer of the Publican who went down to his house justified.—Christian Union.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From London Weekly Review:

A painting of the figure of Christ of very great value has been stolen from the Church of Campo de Criptano in Andalusia.

The Countess Chambord has sent ten thousand francs in gold to the Pope. An equal sum was sent by the Count a few days before.

The Episcopal press informs us that in London, ont of a total of 333 churches, only 168 belong to the evangelical school.

The Pope has nominated two Cardinals in place of the Nuncios at Lisbon and Paris—Monsignor Alimonda, Bishop of Albenga, distingnished by his literary and scientific attainments, and Father Zigliara, Dominican professor of philosophy at the Convent della Minerva in Rome.

The Pope has summoned to Rome several German ecclesiatical dignitaries who have been subject to penalties for infractions of the May laws. The Pope desires to examine minntely into the special causes of the condemnation in each case, with the view of finding, if possible, some line of conduct calculated to avoid falling under the ban of the said laws in future.

On Sabbath there died at Row, Dumbartonshire, Agnes Maxwell, the aged widow of the late Rev. Dr. Norman Macleod of St. Columbia Gaelic Church, Glasgow, and the mother of the late Rev. Dr. Norman Macleod of the Barony, the Rev. Dr. Donald Macleod of Park Church, and Professor G. H. B. Macleod of Glasgow University. Mrs. Macleod had reached the venerable age of ninety-four.

The "Salvation Army," which has been creating such a sensation in South Wales, has extended its sphere of operations to Glasgow. Huge posters have been posted about the city announcing the advent of the "Hallelujah Lasses." These "lasses," it appears, are the Uhlans or "Scouts of the Salvation Army," under "General the Rev. Wm. Booth." The "Salvationists," as they style themselves, are of the most pronounced "revival" stamp. The two "Hallelujah Lasses" at present engaged in Glasgow with the object of establishing a "Salvation Mission" (Sisters Prentice and Milner) are described as two rather good-looking young women, soberly dressed, and wearing a white lappet under their bonnets, either to be in keeping with the prevailing fashion, or to show that they are widowed from the world. They are more fervid than learned, and their singing, although not of the highest order, is certainly much more attractive than their preaching. A very orthodox feature of the service is the collection, which is taken on the old "ladle" principle.

From Exchanges:

Bishop Russell reports that he confirmed last year ninety-eight Chinese in the Chekiang province.

The children of the English Presbyterian Church, during the twelve months ending February 28th, raised no less a sum than $6,900 for the China mission.

Over 60,000 Bibles have been sent from Philadelphia to Australia and the antipodes since January.

The amount of boxwood, the French substitute for the traditional palm, sold in Paris last Sabbath (Palm Sunday) was enormous, a fact which tends to show that the capital has not been entirely converted to Atheism. At the principal churches, where the faithful get the "palms" blessed by the priests, the vendors realized as much as from ten to twenty pounds, quite a harvest to the poor people.

Two bombs were thrown into the Church of San Antonio at Seville on the 14th inst., with the object, it is supposed, of creating a panic and stealing the valuable sacramental plate belonging to the church. Several persons were injured by the explosion.

The society for the prevention of vice in Germany found several wagon loads of indecent books and pictures in the hands of a publisher in Berlin. He was sentenced to eighteen months imprisonment and his clerks to shorter terms. There are several such publishers in Berlin.

Baboo P. Ghash, for many years a member of the Scottish Free Church mission in Calcutta, and teacher in the Free Church Mission College, has become a Roman Catholic.

MISCELLANY.

The highest signal station in the United States, Pike's Peak, is also the highest point on the globe inhabited by man.

Commandant Deberly, said to be the last survivor of Austerlitz, has just died, near Bordeaux, in his 95th year. He entered the French army in 1802 and was pensioned off in 1833.

Within the last year Queen Victoria has given $25,000 to the temperance cause. Four members of the Royal household are total abstainers.

Signor Armellini, a young archæologist of Rome, has rediscovered the famous Jewish cemetery which Antonio Bosio discovered about 1600, and which soon after was forgotten again.

A great dispute is raging in Madras over the right to the possession of a hair which is said to have been plucked from the beard of Mohammed. The case in which this precious relic is kept is guarded by an officer who receives for his services a pension from the government. There are six claimants for the hair. The High Court of Madras has been appealed to and will have to do some hair splitting in order to accomplish the ends of justice. So great is the competition among the six Mussulmans who claim the hair that there is a possibility of their splitting each other's skulls, contrary to the law and custom long prevalent among them.

A number of well known capitalists in New York have at length determined to put in operation one of the many pending schemes for building tenement houses for the poor. They have subscribed $50,000 already towards the construction of a model dwelling.

The Mansion House Fund for the relief of the widows and orphans of the men who fell at Isandula and Rorke's Drift, now amounts to £7,500, including £100 from the Queen, and 100 guineas from the Prince of Wales. The Hungarian Floods Fund has increased to £11,000.

A statement just published by the Ancient Order of Foresters, one of the principal friendly societies of the country, shows a membership roll of 531,176, an increase on the year of nearly 10,000. The court funds are stated at £2,349,848, and the district fund at nearly £300,000.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 1879.

GIVING.

Right and proper it is to use the powers of mind and of body with which God has endowed us, in contriving and in executing plans for the promotion of His glory. So we commend every effort to thoroughly instruct our people and to bring them in direct contact with the benevolent causes of our Church. We would not have this branch of duty neglected, but on the contrary pushed with increased vigor.

It becomes us to ask, now, if there is not something radically wrong both in our theory and our practice of giving. Our theory is utterly faulty in ignoring the spiritual view of the matter, and adopting what many would, most erroneously, style common sense ideas; and the practice conforms. We proceed on the notion that the proximate object to be attained is the raising of as much money as possible, and our worldly wisdom does not fail us in the prosecution of the undertaking. Church members do not seem to forget that the difference between a very low price paid and a very high one obtained by sale, is considerable profit; nor do they fail to recognize that people will part with money when they can be convinced they are getting its equivalent, or more, in return. Thus pride, or love of social pleasure and various other human traits or frailties, are confidently appealed to. The result of this "leaning to our own understandings" seems to accomplish its purpose and its impropriety is thus overlooked when times are brisk and money is plenty; but in times of financial depression, such as the present, these operations are not so effectual.

The inherent defects in our practice are: That it is not in accord with God's plan; nothing from first to last in the Scriptures warrants it; it leaves entirely out of the account, or effectually hides from view, the necessity of securing God's blessing upon means employed for the prosperity of His Church, or the advancement of His Kingdom; it in fact dishonors God before the world in placing Him in the attitude of a needy suppliant, looking in dire extremity, to man for aid.

Giving is a form of worship, plainly so distinguished in Scripture, and is a means of grace when properly performed. Its primary object is not obtaining means for prosecution of the Church's work, but the soul enriching of the giver, by producing and calling into exercise, through the operation of the Holy Spirit, the spiritual affections. God chooses that His work shall be accomplished by the gifts of His people, but these means will come freely and liberally when the soul is all-pervaded with love and gratitude to God, in view of His infinite mercies. Giving then, as true spiritual worship, banishes covetousness and makes sacrifice for Christ a delight. It promotes itself by realizing the promises: "The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself," and in thus securing at once the desire to give and the means for its gratification. Surely it should be enough, and will, to any one whose soul is filled with love to Christ, to have the message come, "The Lord hath need of this." Let us then urge this duty and privilege of giving, for assuredly it is not inculcated as it should be. Under constant and thorough instruction in this duty the Church can be brought much nearer the measure of its duty than ever in the past, in yielding back to God of His bounty, for the furtherance of His glory.

ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

Orange Presbytery met at Eno Church, Orange county, on April 23d. There was an unusually large attendance, viz., twenty-three ministers and twenty-six ruling elders. We must say that the hearty hospitality of Orange county was most magnificently illustrated in the entertainment of the Presbytery. We left reluctantly on Saturday morning. The principal items of business were as follows:

Rev. J. W. Primrose, Moderator, preached the opening sermon.

Rev. A. Currie was chosen Moderator, and Rev. S. M. Smith and Elder John A. Womack were chosen temporary clerks.

Rev. D. C. Rankin was received from the Presbytery of Savannah.

Calls were presented for the pastoral services of Mr. Rankin, at Tarboro, for one-half of his time; of Rev. D. I. Craig, at Reidsville, for one-half of his time, and of Rev. Jno. W. Primrose, at Littleton, for one Sabbath.

New Churches were reported as organized at Rocky Mount, Union and Oak Forest, and a colored Church in Newbern. A committee was appointed to visit Company Shops with a view to the organization of a Church at that place.

The pastoral relation between Rev. E. Hines and Shiloh Church, which has existed for forty years, was, by the request of Mr. Hines, dissolved.

The New Book was adopted by a vote of 37 in favor, viz: 19 ministers and 18 ruling elders; to 7 opposed, viz: 4 ministers and 3 ruling elders, and 4 others were excused from voting.

Commissioners to the General Assembly: Principals, Rev. F. H. Johnston and Rev. J. C. Alexander, with Ruling Elders Thos. Sparrow and A. M. McPheeters. Alternates, Rev. J. H. Fitzgerald and Rev. T. U. Faucette, and Elders C. G. Yates and T. M. Holt.

Alamance Church, in Guilford county, was chosen as the place for the regular fall meeting.

Rev. Jno. W. Primrose was re-elected Evangelist for the Eastern field, with some changes in his work.

CHURCH AT CONCORD, N. C.

The progress of the revival at this church has been heretofore noted. The meeting was a precious season of refreshing to the church. Seventeen members were added, and the faith and spiritual zeal of the former members quickened. Rev. L. McKinnon is pastor of this church.

COLLECTORS FOR MISSIONS.

In the Missionary for May, we find, a statement, that shews how very little most of churches are contributing to foreign missions. We find these words, which commend themselves to us as expressing a sensible opinion:

"We confidently believe that the deficiencies of the past may be retrived and the work go bravely on, if only ministers and church sessions will hearken to advice and will take hold of the matter with vigor and earnestness.

Following this is a suggestion for such churches as have no systematic plan of their own or have plans which prove inoperative or unsuccessful. It is not proposed to interfere with such modes as are already working well. The plan is, in brief, for churches to appoint collectors, as many as may be necessary, who will, the week before the collection is taken, see every attendant upon church and present the opportunity of giving. We think it would be well for these personal visitations to follow a sermon from the pastor on the subject of giving to this cause, though this is no part of the original suggestion. There can be no doubt that one great inadequacy of funds for our benevolent enterprises is the lack of direct personal application in a judicious manner, accompanied with or preceeded by proper information. We regard information as to any cause and its workings, in field and office, as vastly important, as essential indeed, and so would have the Missionary in every family of our Church. The plan of collectors is a good one and we hope will be fully and fairly tried.

CHANGE OF EDITORS.

A kind friend has placed in our hands the Richmond Dispatch, which, after copying the announcement that Rev. W. T. Richardson, of Stanton, Va., and Dr. J. C. Southall, of Richmond, have purchased the Central Presbyterian, adds:

We had seen the statement alluded to, but as we had heard nothing of it here in Richmond, we thought that it might be untrue. We do not know Mr. Richardson, but we do know Mr. Southall; and we can safely predict that if he takes the Central Presbyterian under his control, he will give it a wide fame.

We suppose the statement is true, as we see the same elsewhere stated in the above journal, by a Staunton correspondent, who further states that Rev. Mr. Richardson will remove to Richmond in June. We will have more to say when the change is announced in the Central Presbyterian. At present anything further might be premature.

YOUR AID IS NEEDED.

We cheerfully give place to the following affecting appeal for the Thornwell Orphanage. If there is anything that can go deeper down into the human heart, or more effectually stir the human sympathies than the wail of the orphan, what is it? Hear and help the orphans:

At the last meeting of the Board of Visitors of the Thornwell Orphanage, a large number of applications for the admission or orphan children were read. In one case, the appeal was made to prevent several little orphans from falling into the hands of the Roman Catholics, by opening our doors to them. Willing? We are eager to do it. But how can we care for more, when already we have an over-crowded house.

At length a resolution was introduced for the appointment of a committee to suggest plans, and to devise ways for the erection of a new dwelling to accommodate a family of boys. It was agreed to! The Committee are at work. But after all, there is one obstacle in the way, and that is the lack of means. Of silver, gold or greenbacks for this object, we have none—literally and absolutely none—and yet before our eyes, always, are these little white hands held out toward us, saying, "Save us!" Oh! God, in tender mercy, listen to the prayers of the fatherless, and open the way for their aid.

DEAR BRO.—Please say to the Presbyterian girls of North Carolina, there can be no need for them to go to the ball at Chapel Hill; for the elegant halls and libraries of the literary societies are always illuminated during Commencement. Intellectual and social pleasure can certainly be had there.

Yours, &c., A. D. BETTS.

PRESBYTERIAL MEETINGS.

The Presbytery of Concord met on the 23d at Bethel church. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. T. G. Thurston.

Rev. J. H. Thornwell was elected Moderator. The Rev. J. A. Ramsey and Elder A. C. McIntosh were elected Temporary Clerks.

The attendance of both ministers and elders was unusually large.

The Presbytery adopted the New Book of Church Order by an almost unanimous vote.

An overture was sent up to the General Assembly asking that the two interests of Education and Publication be consolidated under one management. Also that the relief scheme be abolished in an orderly manner; and still further that the law of the Church be so amended that the meetings of the General Assembly and of the several Synods be held biennially, and on alternate years.

Rev. A. L. Crawford and Elder D. F. Cannon were elected commissioners to the General Assembly; Rev. P. T. Penick and Elder H. C. Hamilton alternates.

In addition to the above items there was a good deal of important routine business transacted.

The next session of Presbytery will be held in September at Bethesda church, Iredell county. L.

DEAR BROTHER—In order to complete your lists on commissioners and New Book, I write you,

Brazos Presbytery sends as commissioners Rev. R. F. Bunting, D. D., with Rev. O. B. Caldwell alternate; and Ruling Elder James A. Hill, with L. D. Stockton alternate. New Book adopted.

The Presbytery of Central Texas met at the Oak Island church April 3d. There were present ten ministers and eleven ruling elders. The Book of Church Order was adopted by one majority, the Presbytery having heretofore voted against it.

Rev. H. Moseley and Ruling Elder J. W. Storey were elected commissioners to the General Assembly.

The Presbytery having been divided last fall to form the new Presbytery of Dallas, now numbers sixteen ministers (besides two in transitu) and thirty churches.

The reports from the churches were in some respects less favorable than usual. The number of additions on profession of faith was less, proportionally, than for some years past.

The Presbytery has had an active evangelist in the field since last August, and his labors are expected to be continued, one half in this Presbytery and one half in that of Dallas.

The Depository, also carried on for the two Presbyteries for the present, has done very well. The collections have approached nearer to the usual average, perhaps, than was to be expected, considering the "hard times."

The next meeting is to be at the Robinsonville church, October 23d.

L. TENNEY, S. C.

Presbytery of Florida.—Ruling Elder Wm. Bryant was, after due examination, licensed to preach the Gospel. Davidson College was cordially and earnestly commended.

All of the reports of Chesapeake Presbytery are hopeful. With one exception all the churches have been supplied with stated and faithful preaching. Several new elders and deacons elected. Attention given to Bible classes, Sabbath schools and systematic beneficence. Frequent and special mention of the effective labors of the godly women. One new church, Farmwell, organized. Three new church edifices built, no special revival in any church; increased attention to and interest in the Word and ordinances in all the congregations; ministerial support small and inadequate.

Cherokee Presbytery.—Rev. J. D. Burkhead was dismissed to North Alabama Presbytery. A call was extended to Rev. G. T. Storey (of Central Mississippi Presbytery) to become evangelist. Mr. Edward Bailey was received as a candidate for the ministry.

Presbytery of Dallas.—Licentiate E. F. Hope was dismissed to Louisville Presbytery. The narrative of religion shows that 67 members have been received on profession and 146 on certificate. Five churches have preaching every Sabbath; five twice a month; four are supplied once a month. The seven vacant churches are to have temporary supplies this summer. Licentiate R. S. Burwell was ordained.

St. Louis Presbytery.—Rev. W. B. Y. Wilkie retains the call from Troy church until the next meeting of Presbytery. Tuskaloosa Institute commended.

Presbytery of West Hanover.—Rev. E. D. Washburn was elected Moderator. A committee was appointed to tabulate the reports of professors of Union Theological Seminary upon the standing of students under the care of Presbytery. Licentiate Benj. Good was dismissed to Savannah Presbytery, and licentiate A. B. Coit to Tombeckbee Presbytery. The churches of Orange and Gordonsville were authorized to employ Rev. Wm. E. Cave as stated supply. The Revised Book was adopted: ayes 16, noes 9. Commissioners to the General Assembly: Rev. B. M. Wailes and Elder L. L. Holladay; alternates, Rev. L. B. Johnson and Elder P. B. Barbour. The Presbytery voted 4 to 19 against division of Synod. Robert Walton was taken under care of Presbytery as a candidate for the ministry. A petition from thirty-seven members of Lebanon church asking to be organized into a church to be called Tabor was referred to next meeting of Presbytery, which will be held at Lebanon church.

In behalf of the Committee,

PATRICK JOYES, Ch'n.

A. DAVIDSON, Sec'y,

N. B.—The Committee hope to announce next week the arrangements made with the various railroads over which commissioners will pass. They also hope to secure favorable terms from railroads, hotels and boarding houses for visitors who desire to attend the sessions of the General Assembly.

PHILADELPHIA IN MECKLENBURG.

April 24, 1879.

MR. EDITOR—Another of those communion seasons so delightful and comforting to all Christians has been enjoyed by the people of Philadelphia church. Our pastor, Rev. Wm. McDonald, was assisted by the Rev. Wm. W. Pharr, who ably and earnestly dispensed the Word to us on Friday, Saturday and Sabbath. We have reason to believe that the seed fell upon good ground, and in due season will bring forth much fruit. Some professed their faith in Christ. Our Sabbath school has not been resumed yet. May the sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit revive us to a full performance of our whole duty toward God and man. J. N. R.

COMMUNION AT CHAPEL HILL.

It was our pleasure and privilege to attend communion services at Chapel Hill last Sunday, when nine were added to the church on profession of their faith in Christ. Six of these were students of the University. It is much to be regretted that this very important field is so much neglected by the Presbytery. Bro. Dalton preaches only once a month at the University, while the other denominations have preaching every Sunday. The Presbyterian church is prospering under all the difficulties which environ it, but needs the help and symathy of the Presbytery. Our Church betrays a blindness to its interests in neglecting a field where two hundred young men are gathered from all parts of the State. The other denominations saw that it was a strategical point, and have greatly advanced their cause by promptly taking advantage of the opportunity. J. S. W.

CHAPEL HILL CHURCH.

CHAPEL HILL, April 24th, 1879.

The Presbyterian Church in this place has had a good time. Last Saturday Messrs. Dalton and Watkins (of Raleigh) arrived, and our Church was opened that night for service preparatory to the communion next day. Mr. Watkins preached on Esau's late and vain repentance, a clear-cut and most impressive discourse. One of the sermons, as a hearer said, that you carry home and remember. A large audience was assembled. Next morning the sun shone its brighest, and our church was filled. All those kind Normal school ladies, and other good Christians who helped us poor Chapel Hill Presbyterians get a new carpet and fix up our dear Church generally, had better believe we remembered them gratefully, and were proud that morning to see ourselves look so genteel.

Nine persons united with the Church. Six were students of the University. One was baptized. One of them was from Wilmington, one from Raleigh, one from Davidson College, and one was a grandson of our honored Governor Morehead. His mother has long been in heaven, but she had laid up prayers for her children which are even now being answered. Governor Morehead's daughters were all firm and intelligent Presbyterians. It is a great pleasure to see the line continued.

Two of the new members were little girls. God bless them! One stood up with her father to take the vows of a new life with him.

Our Methodist brethren omitted their service and joined with us, which was a great pleasure. Mr. Watkins preached of the secret things that belong to God; a discourse of depth and power, and full of strong meat for the believer.

Mr. Dalton received the candidates and administered the right of baptism to young Mr. Alderman, of Wilmington.

At Dr. Ledoux's Bible class in the afternoon there were forty of the University students, all serious, attentive and interested. At night Mr. Watkins preached (by request) on baptism and the proper mode of administering it. The topic having been previously announced, and the subject being much discussed of late by those who favor the immersion theory, a great crowd was present, Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists and all. No Baptists were converted, of course, but every one present, not a Baptist, professed to have been instructed, confirmed and delighted beyond measure. We have had so much immersion flung upon us for two or three years past, such an incessant and exultant repetition of the doctrine, that some of the younger ones of the various Pædo-Baptist flocks had begun to wonder how such and such claims could be answered or questioned.

We are all satisfied now; no more doubts nor "blank questionings." Mr. Watkins' points were impregnable, unanswerable and convincing. Our young folks were delighted. Our old folks quietly satisfied that the truth had been once more displayed and vindicated.

Presbyterians, as a rule, are not proud of preaching that turns so exclusively upon ritual. But now and then it is necessary that our congregations should be warned and instructed, and when we do summon a standard-bearer to the front, how good a thing it is to find him well equipped and ready to declare the truth and nothing but the truth.

Mr. Watkins preached for us again on Monday night. Subject—The New Birth. No diminution in his audience and no flagging in the preacher. So serious is the mind of this community that it is probable that daily services would be fully attended if we could but have the church opened. For six years the Rev. Mr. Dalton has been coming to minister to us; a labor of love on his part, poorly requited pecuniarily, but fully appreciated by us, and repaid to him in some degree at least in our warm affection and gratitude, and in the joy with which he sees the church growing and prospering in his hands.

We wish other ministers of Orange Presbytery could see as he does, that this is an important point and worthy of the best attention and cultivation of our best men.

MONTHLY REVIEW OF MISSIONS.

Intelligence has been received from Soochow of the 2nd of February, and from Hangchow to the 4th of the same. Miss Safford had got back to Soochow and reports herself as "greatly invigorated and recruited in health by her visit to Japan." She expresses herself as under great obligation for the kindness shown her by the missionaries in Japan.

At the communion service at Hangchow six persons were admitted to membership in the church. Of these one was a pupil of the boys' boarding school, and two were members of the school for girls. Several other pupils were desirous of connecting themselves with the church, but their applications, from considerations of prudence, were deferred. Mention is also made of four women who seemed to be serious inquirers after the truth.

We have a letter from Rev. J. Rockwell Smith, of the Pernambuco Mission of the 14th of February, in which he mentions that two more persons had been added to the church, making its membership nineteen in all, twelve of whom were males and seven females. He feels more and more sensible of his need of a reinforcement, and hopes the time will not be long before he will be permitted to welcome a fellow-laborer.

A letter has been received from Campinas as late as the 1st of March, in which mention is made of the good health of the missionaries. Intelligence has been received from Mr. Dabney, at Rio de Janeiro, of the 6th of March, announcing the safe arrival of himself and wife at that place.

We have letters from Matameras to the 15th of March. Mrs. Hall had opened a school for Mexican girls in Brownsville. The number of pupils was twenty-three at the opening of the school, and the number might be almost indefinitely increased if there were sufficient teaching force. An additional lady teacher is greatly needed.

We have letters from Spencer Academy to the 18th of March, and one from Mr. Lloyd of the 19th. There had been a good deal of sickness at Spencer, but all were better at the date of our letter.

A letter has been received from Mr. A. H. Erwin, of the 14th of February, at Baranquilla, United States of Colombia, showing that his labors there are not without important results, and at the earnest request of Mr. Pratt, who labored there for a number of years, the Committee, at their last meeting, determined to continue Mr. Erwin as a missionary laborer in Baranquilla for the time being.—Missionary.

FINANCE.

The accounts of the treasurer of Foreign Missions were closed on the 1st of April. The receipts for the whole year from all sources amount to $46,234 74. Of this sum $31,928 82 are from churches and individuals; $8,815 51 are from ladies' missionary associations, and $5,490 41 from Sunday schools. According to this showing the churches are in advance of what they gave last year by $803 59; ladies' missionary associations have fallen behind as much as $1,292 03, and Sabbath schools are behind by $501 87. The aggregate receipts are behind those of the previous year by $990 41. The general debt has been increased by $273 26, being now $9,524 96. The sum of $1,756 68 (principal and interest) has been paid upon the Campinas debt, so that the aggregate indebtedness has been reduced as much as $926 74.—Missionary.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Scribner & Co assure us that the sales of their monthly magazine, so well known as Scribner's, have increased 20,000 copies during the hard times just past. This is extraordinary. In England the edition has doubled during the same period, and this is almost marvelous. Scribner's is always abreast of the times in its articles, and its choice of them shows that it understands the beating of the popular literary pulse. We have before us Volume XVII, bound in new and elegant olive green—embossed covers. This, with Scribner's Monthly for six months, (from May '79 to October '79, inclusive) they will forward to new subscribers for $4.00. This will give the subscribers the opening chapters of Mrs. Burnett's new novel "Haworths." Excellent as is the volume before us, Messrs. Scribner hope to surpass it in that upon which they have just entered.

D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich., favor us with their catalogue of vegetables and flowers, gotten up in most attractive style and heaped with pictures.

J. S. Tomlinson, engrossing clerk of the late Legislature of North Carolina, and editor of the Peidmont Press, lays us under obligations for a copy of the Assembly Sketch Book. It bears the impress of faithful labor, and appears to be an accurate, though necessarily brief sketch of every member and officer of the last North Carolina Legislature, as also of the various executive officers of the State.

Scripture Baptism—The Modes and Subjects, is a sermon preached by Rev. A. Shotwell at the request of Methodist, Cumberberland and Old School Presbyterians in reply to an exceedingly bitter tirade delivered against all who did not recognize immersion as the only scriptual mode of Baptism. It appears in convenient form, bound in cloth at twenty-five cents, or in paper for ten cents. The author is charitable and kind in his reply, but clear and forcible, and the appreciation of the public is manifested in a call for this, the third edition. Address Presbyterian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo., or Richmond, Va.

The Eclectic Magazine is a great favorite with us. The May number has an excellent steel engraving of M. Grevy, President of the French Republic, and a sketch of his career. Other contents are: First impression of the New Republic; Psychometric Facts; Godwin and Shelly; a Cremation in China; On the Migration of Birds; Love's Promise, a poem; Chapters on Socialism; Charles Lamb—Five New Anecdotes; Mademoiselle de Mersac; Why do we Eat Our Dinner; Cruel Fate; Ancient Egypt, III; A Romance of Royalty—Lady Arabella Stuart; The new Religious Movement in France; The Two Lights, a poem; Literary notices; Foreign Literary Notes; Notes on Science and Art; Varieties. Published by E. R. Pelton, 25 Bond street, New York. Terms, $5 per year; single numbers 45 cents.

The Primary Teachers' Monthly.—Evangelical and undenominational. Mrs. W. F. Crafts, editor. The Western Sunday School Publishing Co., John Fairbanks, Manager. Chicago, May, 1879. Per annum, 60 cents.

First Twenty Years of the History of St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church, Wilmington, N. C.—Price 50 cents. Rev. Dr. G. D. Bernheim has again done great service to his denomination by a publication that should be in every family of that denomination and be treasured by them as an important history of their Church. The Doctor in this pamphlet most courteously recognizes other evangelical Churches, and gives, in opening, a brief sketch of the foundation of other churches in Wilmington. This greatly widens the scope of interest which will by felt in the publication. For the very kind manner in which the Presbyterians of this city are referred to we return our acknowledgements.

Wide Awake for May has, as usual, a numerous and choice list of articles for the little ones. These are some of them: The Language of Birds, poem; Boston Whittling School; The Dogberry Bunch, chapters IX. and X; The Dumb Spinner, poem; The Lazy Pink Hen; My Little Love, poem; The First Fly of the Season; Roy Lowries Last Year at St. Olaev's; The Dancing Cow; A Boston Rosebud Boy; Picture; Revenge; Posie; The Wishing Cap; Talking by Signals, for boys; Don Quixote, Jr.; and many others. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, Mass. $2.00 per annum.

Nursery.—A capital book for very little folks. John L. Shorey, publisher, Boston, Mass. $1.50 a year.

The North American Review for May is before us. Contents—Our Election Laws, by Secretary George W. McCrary; Campaign Notes in Turkey, 1877 and 1878, by Lieutenant F. V. Greene; German Socialism in America, part II.; Absent Friends, by Rev. O. B. Frothingham; A Plea for Sport, by Lloyd S. Bryce; Notes on Recent Progress in Applied Science, by President Morton; Law and Design in Nature. This last is a joint discussion in which one article is furnished by each of the following writers: Professor Simon Newcomb, President Noah Porter, Rev. Joseph Cook, James Freeman Clark, D. D., and President McCosh. A rejoinder by Professor Newcomb is promised in the next number. After this comes the usual list of publications received.

American Agriculturist for May at hand. Unexcelled and unexcellable. $1.50 per year. We offer this valuable magazine and the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN one year to any new subscriber for $3.00.

Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine.—This standard magazine represents the substantial element of the literary cuisine. It is well-flavored and digestible, therefore nourishing withal. The contents of April number are: Reata; or, What's in a name?; My latest experience; John Caldigate, part XIII; Hamlet; Contemporary Literature; Biography; France and Sport; The Country in 1849 and 1879.

We have received from Messrs T. B. Peterson & Bros., Philadelphia, Sybil Brotherton, a novel, by Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth. 50 cents. 1879.

Jarl's Daughter and Other Stories, by Mrs. F. H. Burnett. 25 cents. 1879.

Both of the above writers have wide celebrity, and their peculiar merits are well-known. The stories are highly wrought and picture some of the sad evils in our world. Lovers of fiction will be satisfied with the exciting developments. We cannot endorse Mrs. Southworth as an interpreter of Scripture.

Southern Selections for Reading and Oratory, by John G. James, Superintendent Texas Military Institute, Austin. $1.25, post paid. 1879. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and New Orleans. This boook is a new departure in the right direction. Mr. James has made this extensive collection of prose and poetry entirely for Southern authors, statesmen and divines, mainly our cotemporaries. North Carolina is represented by Z. B. Vance, M. W. Ransom, K. P. Battle, Mrs. M. B. Clarke, Miss Fisher and others. There are eloquent extracts from addresses by Rev. Drs. Palmer, Hodge and Girardean, Curry and others. And the author has not been afraid to give admirable specimens of the style of Robert E. Lee and Jefferson Davis, loved and honored by the South. Such a book, representing one hundred and forty-four Southern writers, was needed, and will be a valuable acquisition in our educational institutions. The numerous biographical sketches appended to the selections are valuable additions. We hope Mr. James will feel encouraged to prepare another volume of selections from the writings of distinguished Southerners of elden times—Washington, Henry, Lee, Gaston, Badger, Randolph, Duffie, Loundes, Calhoun, Clay, J. H. Rice, and hosts of others who wrote and spoke with beauty of rhetoric, and with logic and power seldom equalled and never surpassed.

The Managers of the American Bible Society have adopted a change of policy, and instead of depending upon auxiliary societies alone, to effect sales of their publications, will allow a percentage from catalogue prices to dealers in books generally. This will certainly prove greatly to the advantage of the public in placing Bibles well-printed and bound and of guaranteed accuracy of text, within convenient reach of all. The cheapness of the Society's publications ought to satisfy any one that it does not seek profit in the sale of the books. We have now before us a copy of the 25 cent Bible, quite elegantly bound in red cloth, on fair paper and in very clear, distinct type. The same get up on other books of same size would cost probably one dollar. The copy of the New Testament for 5 cents is marvellously cheap.

Music—Somebody's Coming When the Dew Drops Fall. S. Brainard's Sons, Cincinnati, Ohio.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Postoffice of Rev. J. H. Zinsley is changed from Austin to Elgin, Bastrop county, Texas.

Licentiate R. S. Burwell was ordained to the full work of the Gospel ministry, by Dallas Presbytery, on 12th inst.

Rev. J. E. Triplett of Pearisburg, Va., will supply Cynthiana and Mt. Pleasant churches in Presbytery of West Lexington.

Caney Branch, Green county, Tenn, is the present postoffice of Rev. R. F. King, who has taken charge of the Meadow Creek church.

Rev. A. C. Snoddy of Cynthiana, Jefferson county, Tenn., is at present residing at Riverdell, Knox county, in the same State.

Rev. Joseph Brown, who has been supplying Andrews' Memorial church, has been compelled, on account of infirmities, to leave his charge. His postoffice is Bryan, Texas.

Seven persons were received into the communion of the Third Presbyterian church of Knoxville, Tenn., six of them heads of families. Rev. W. A. Harrison is pastor.

Rev. Dr. Markham's church, the Lafayette Presbyterian, on Sunday, April 13th received fifteen additions to its communion. Two elders and one deacon were ordained and installed.

The Richmond Herald says that Rev. J. Garniss Hunter of Georgetown "is assisting Rev. Harvey Glass, of the Presbyterian church of Richmond, in the conduct of a religious revival, which began on last Sunday, and will continue a week or two longer. Mr. Hunter is a man of considerable power in the pulpit, His sermons are original in style, not too lengthy, clear, forcible and impressive in character, while his voice, manner and delivery are not only pleasing but captivating. He is a well read theologian, a polished orator, and zealous in his Christian labors."

The church of Beverly, W. Va., has been enjoying the ministration of Rev. R. Scott, evangelist of Lexington Presbytery, and of Rev. R. C. Walker of the same Presbytery. Rev. George M. Fleming of Buckhannon, now a pastor in the Northern Church, has also been preaching for them. At a communion season April 13th thirty-five persons were received into the church. This number includes old and young, the baptized children of the church and those whose early surroundings had been anything but religious. There were men given up by the world and Christians of little faith thought to be beyond redemption. Indeed, the especial significance of the work is derived from the number of wild and reckless young men who were brought in.—Cor. Christian Observer.

The following resolutions were adopted by Mississippi Presbytery, after a statement by Rev. J. B. Stratton, D. D., a member of the Board of Trustees of the Publication Fund:

We have heard with much pleasure of the judicious rearrangement of the Depository and South-Western Presbyterian; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That we heartily commend the Depository to the people within our bounds, who desire to procure books for family and Sabbath-school reading.

Resolved, 2. That we cordially commend the South-Western Presbyterian to the prayers and patronage of the people within our bounds.

GENERAL.

The Southern Methodist asks: "Where are the fifty thousand new members added to the Church last year? How many of them were genuine converts? What promise do they now give of fidelity to their vows and of service to the cause of Christ? How many of them will be found in the statistics of the coming year? These are solemn questions, not only for each one of the fifty thousand, but for every pastor. The wisdom that wins souls not only gets them into the Church but holds them."

A Congregational church of forty-eight members was organized at Cypress Slash, Ga., April 15, Revs. F Snelson, R. F. Markham, L. E. Roy and J. R. McLean participating. This work is among the freedmen under the American Missionary Association.

At the home of Bishop Pierce of the Southern Methodist Church, who resides in Sparta, Ga., his father, the Rev. Dr. Lovick Pierce, recently celebrated the 94th anniversary of his birth-day. Twenty-seven grandchildren and one great-grandchild were present on the occasion.

Bishop Ames of the Methodist Church died in Baltimore on the 25th inst. He was 74 years of age, and leaves an estate supposed to be worth near a quarter of a million dollars.

Rev. Francis M. Baker of the Protestant Episcopal Church died in Richmond on the 25th inst. He was in his 57th year and died suddenly of paralysis.

The silver wedding of Rev. Dr. G. D. Bernheim and Mrs. E. C. Bernheim was duly celebrated on 25th inst. Rev. Dr. J. R. Wilson of the Presbyterian church, as introductory, delivered a very appropriate congratulatory address. Presents were numerous and valuable, the most noticeable being an elegant silver service of fourteen pieces. The waiter was beautifully inscribed: "Presented by the members of St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church, at Wilmington, N. C., to Rev. G. D. Bernheim and Mrs. E. C. Bernheim, on the anniversary of their silver wedding, April 25, 1879."

NORTHERN.

Gleanings:

PRESBYTERIAN.

An overture goes up to the next General Assembly, on the subject of "the demission of the ministry." The actual demission has become a very serious matter in the Northern Church and the theory does not correspond.

Rev. Dr. Henry Neill, of the Presbytery of Philadelphia, died on the 21st inst.

More than $51,000 have been contributed by the churches of the Presbytery of New York to the work of foreign missions during the past year—about $12,000 less than the amount given last year.

Rev. H. S. Little has accepted the position of Synodical Missionary for Texas in the interest of the Northern Presbyterian Church.

BAPTIST.

The Baptist church at Carthage, Jefferson county, after struggling ten years with a debt of $3,000 has succeeded in wiping it out.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society shows for a year receipts of $123,800. This is $6,900 less than last year The debt has been reduced from $45,000 to $31,000.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

During the week ending Easter Sunday Bishop Stevens of Pennsylvania administered the rite of confirmation to 320 candidates.

The statement is contradicted that the standing committee of the Michigan Diocese propose to resist by legal means the taking of its chapel site by St. Mark's church, in its joining with the Reformed Episcopal body. They have determined to make no effort in this direction.

REFORMED DUTCH.

The church at Hastings, Neb., dedicated its new and beautiful edifice March 30th. It cost about $3000 with tower and a 500 pound Meneely bell. Of the 209 churches in the State only five have bells.

LUTHERAN.

The Lutheran Synod is appointed to meet at Wooster, O., June 11. It is the oldest general Lutheran organization in the country.

The Freedmen's Committee have been fortunate in obtaining the services of Dr. John W. Scott to take the professorship in Biddle University Charlotte, N. C., made vacant by the recent death of the Rev. S. M. Henderson. President Scott's abilities, so well known to those who received their college training at his hands, are a guarantee that Biddle will not suffer under his teaching. He is already at work.

About 700 persons have been admitted to the communion of the Lutheran church in Philadelphia during the recent services of Lent.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Congregational Society in Abingdon has raised its debt $600 the past year.

The fine stone edifice of the First church in Meriden, Conn., was dedicated April 2d. Sermon by Rev. L. T. Chamberlain, and dedicatory prayer by Rev. L. Bacon, D. D. In the evening addresses were made by Drs Bacon, Walker and Burton. The church cost $170,000, and was dedicated free from debt.

GENERAL.

A party of 150 Dunkards have left Marietta, Lancaster county, Pa., for Kansas, where they have purchased large quantities of land. They took with them a bishop and a full church organization, and were joined in Harrisburg by others of their faith from Cumberland county.

In New York city are 118 Protestant missions, which sustain either Sunday schools or preaching services, or both. Over $1,500,000 is invested in mission buildings of various denominations. There are 266 city missionaries. It is estimated that they make about 800 000 visits in the course of a year. In addition to these there are many tract visitors and Bible distributors, either working independently or as members of churches.

At Hammondsville, N. Y., on Easter Sunday, Rev. A. T. Clark, pastor, organized a Union Church of ten members representing six different denominations. The number would have been larger but for the bad state of the roads. This is the first regular church organization in the place, and is a valuable example of non-sectarianism. They adopt the "Apostles' creed."

Every reader of this paper can have free one month's subscription to our Illustrated Magazine of choice literature, LEISURE HOURS, by sending eleven cents to pay for mailing the premium that goes with the magazine viz: a pair of Easter Cross chromos. These crosses are entwined with calla lilies, ferns, grasses, &c. We shall feel fully repaid for this gift if the articles are shown to your friends. Catalogues of 1,000 desirable and curious articles sent to all; 1c and 2c stamps taken. Address J. L. PATTEN & CO. 47 Barclay street, New York.

DOCTORS GAVE HIM UP.

"Is it possible that Mr. Godfrey is up and at work, and cured by so simple a remedy?"

"I assure you it is true that he is entirely cured, and with nothing but Hop Bitters, and only ten days ago his doctors gave him up and said he must die."

"Well-a-day! If that is so, I will go this minute and get some for my poor George. I know hops are good."

Gigantic Offers.

Your attention is called to the advertisement of Mr. Daniel F. Beatty, of Washington, New Jersey, in this week's paper. Mr. Beatty's celebrated Pianos and Organs are so well known throughout the civilized world that they require no word of commendation from us. Lowest prices, superior workmanship and complete satisfaction have brought this house prominently forward, until to-day he stands the only one in his trade who dares to ship his instruments on test trial, and if unsatisfactory refunds not only the price but all freight paid. No fairer offer can ever be made or even suggested. His sales now amount annually to several millions of dollars, and when it is taken into consideration that a few years ago he was only a poor plough-boy, it must be evident to every reader that Mr. Beatty is the possessor of rare talent in his vocation. A. C. Review.

SECULAR NEWS.

Arrests have been made recently in Charlotte of persons on charges of vagrancy. This we suppose is under the tramp law, and is the first application of it coming under our notice.

A Raleigh News' correspondent says of the whale recently caught: It was the largest ever caught on the North Carolina coast, sixty feet long, and the bone was eight feet three inches long. The blubber was from eighteen to twenty-three inches thick. They saved three thousand six hundred and seventy-eight and a half gallons of oil, and one thousand two hundred and fifty-five pounds of the whale bone, which were sold to-day to Mr. Thomas Daniels, of Newbern, at thirty cents per gallon for the oil and one dollar and ten cents per pound for the bone, making a total of $2,481.05. Three have been caught this year.

An election has been called for the 15th of May for the citizens of Mt. Airy township, in Surry county, to decide whether they will subscribe $20,000 to the Mt. Airy and Ore Knob Railroad.—Winston Sentinel.

We have started to say heretofore, but have been pressed back, that the Farmer and Mechanic, under Capt. Shotwell, is looking up, and is really a live newspaper, crammed with good reading. By-the-bye Captain Shotwell's articles on his penitentiary experience posess the merit of being graphic and truthful; moreover, they carry with them the hearty sympathy of the reader for their writer.

The number of persons enrolled for the spring session of the State Colored Normal School at Fayetville is seventy-eight; forty-one are males and thirty-seven females. The counties represented are: Cumberland, Sampson, Harnett, Rowan, Mecklenburg, Edgecombe, Craven, Brunswick, Onslow, Wayne and Perquimans.—Gazette.

The North Carolina University Normal School will open on Tuesday, June 17, 1879, and continue six weeks.

The State Board of Agriculture was in session recently. The Raleigh Observer says: Three hundred dollars was voted to enable the commissioner to make a good display of the products in his department at the next State fair. The salary of the State geologist was fixed at $2,000 per annum, and he was instructed to throw into shape the rough notes made by him during the past few years, and to do no field work until he receives further directions from the board. The chemist was instructed to employ an assistant to aid him in performing the new duties imposed upon him by the act creating the State Board of Health. The matters pertaining to fish culture and emigration were referred directly to the commissioner, and he was authorized to engage the services of Mr. S. G. Worth to superintend the fish interests, at a salary not to exceed $1,000 per annum.

England and France, according to latest advices, have agreed in their demands on the Khedive of Egypt, and the Sultan advises the Khedive to retract his course.

The Government of France is resolved to prevent opposition by the priesthood to its educational bill. The Bishop of Nix attacks the bill in his pastoral.

POOLE & HUNT.—The attention of our readers is called to the card of Messrs. Poole & Hunt, the well known builders of the justly celebrated Leffel Turbine Water Wheel.

These gentlemen, from their long and varied experience in the manufacture of water wheels and mill machinery of all kinds, never fail in applying their wheel so as to develop the highest possible percentage of the power. During the past month they have made a large deduction in the price of their wheels, and claim, all things considered, to have the lowest priced wheel in the market at this day. Send for their new price-list, &c.

A DESIRABLE ARTICLE.

We verily believe that it would be rendering any family a very great service to introduce into it Kitto's Cyclopedia. This Cyclopœdia is the work of John Kitto, D D., F. S. A., author of the "Pictorial Bible," the History and Physical Geography of Palestine, and editor of the Journal of Sacred Literature, etc., etc. It is arranged expressly for Sunday School Superintendents, Teachers and Bible Students, and embraces a complete and authentic description of all the characters, customs, countries and events mentioned in the Bible, and those connected with them in Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, Grecian and Roman History. Including the period of over four hundred years between the Old and New Testaments, to which are added many valuable tables, and the products of the latest researches in Biblical literature, together with the knowledge gained by the explorations and discoveries of eminent travellers. The whole illustrated with numerous cuts, maps and full page engravings from the best authenticated models and designs that antiquarian research and ancient monuments can produce.

By special arrangement we can furnish this work well printed and bound in cloth, with the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN one year for $4 50—or to any new subscriber, or any one sending us a new subscriber, at $4 00 for paper and cyclopœdia. Publishers price is $4 50.

NOTICE.

Romulus M. Johnston, Esq., agent of the Goldsboro Messenger, is authorized to receive and receipt for any money due us for old or new subscriptions. Our friends will oblige us by paying promptly. We will welcome any new subscribers.

TO AGENTS.

It will not be practicable to write to each one of the Agents of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and ask them to continue their exertions. We now make the general request, and take occasion to thank them and all other friends for the disinterested kindness so fully and so constantly manifested in the past.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The verbatim report of the proceedings and debates of the next Assembly will be published by the Assembly's Reporter in a pamphlet to be issued after the final adjournment. The pamphlet will probably contain between two and three hundred pages, which will be about the size and style of the Missionary. Subscribers will also receive a briefer DAILY REPORT in the columns of the Louisville Courier-Journal, which will be sent during the sessions.

This method, besides its convenience to the reporter, will, it is believed, secure to the Church some advantages not heretofore enjoyed, among which may be noted:

(1) A TRULY VERBATIM REPORT OF THE WHOLE PROCEEDINGS. No debate, or part of a debate, no speech, will be left out, except as ordered by the Assembly, unimportant colloquys upon the order of business, and the like. The aim is to make it as thoroughly verbatim as the Congressional Record, excepting useless and embarrassing minuteness in trifles. I hope to send out a finished work, such as I have never yet had the privilege to furnish.

(2) The pamphlet form will fit it for PRESERVATION AND REFERENCE; so that it will be a valuable contribution to the current history of the Church, telling to "the generation following" the various views expressed, the reasons moving our highest judicatory in its acts, and the arguments of the humblest as well as the most honored members without mutilation.

(3) Another advantage may be found in the ARRANGEMENT OF THE DISCUSSIONS. The chronological order will be abandoned—except in a brief preliminary diary—and all the proceedings upon any one topic will be given not by piece meal, but arranged under one head and on consecutive pages, with such reference to dates as may be needful.

(4) EARLY AND REGULAR INTELLIGENCE from the Assembly during its sessions, by means of the daily Courier-Journal—containing the report of its own corps of stenographers—which will be mailed from the office with the regular daily issue. That journal will doubtless receive a more careful transmission through the mails than has been given the Record. It also has the honor of having received by resolution "the cordial thanks" of the Assembly of 1870 for its accurate report.

Such is the proposal which I now have the honor to lay before the members of the Southern Presbyterian Church. Having been, without solicitation, and to my utter surprise, appointed official stenographer by the Assembly of 1876, I consider myself called by the Church to the work of providing the Church with a complete and trustworthy report of the manner in which her highest court exercises its jurisdiction. To fulfill this ministry is my ardent wish. But it must be perceived that the efficient aid of our ministers and members will be needed to give success to the attempt. I have ventured to trust to their appreciation of the undertaking, believing that they will take pleasure in furthering it, so that such a patronage may be secured this year as will warrant the continuance of the work hereafter.

TERMS:

The verbatim report in pamphlet, with the daily Courier-Journal, will be sent postpaid for ONE DOLLAR—the same also without the C.-J. Any one who will send the money for five subscriptions, will be entitled, as compensation for the labor, to an extra copy, or may retain $1 50, and the same percentage on every additional copy. EVERY MINISTER IS REQUESTED TO ACT AS AGENT, OR PUT THE BUSINESS INTO SUITABLE HANDS. The same favor is requested of elders of vacant churches. The book will be mailed as soon after the adjournment as the additional time demanded by its form will permit—within three or four weeks—and earlier should the patronage warrant the employment of assistance. This pamphlet report will, of course, not appear in the religious weeklies. Subscriptions are to be sent to my present address, MIDWAY, KENTUCKY—in Registered Letters or Post Office Money Orders. P. O. orders must be PAYABLE AT LOUISVILLE, KY. G. L. WOLFE.

MIDWAY, KY., April.

P. S. All orders not mailed so as to reach me before May 10, are to be addressed to the care of Thos. Royall, 130 Jefferson Street, Louisville. Orders for the pamphlet alone may be sent at any time before June 1st.

SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA

This ALTERATIVE was first introduced to the profession and the public in the year 1820. It has the recommendations of the most eminent professors of Physic in the Universities of New York and Philadelphia; the late Dr. Valentine Mott, Professor Gibson, Chapman, Dewees and others, and has been used by thousands of families.

In Scrofula, whatever may have been its origin, and in diseases known as "Secondary Symptoms," in that distressing malady call Coxalgia and White Swelling; in Mercurial Rheumatism, Scrofulous Ophthalmia, old Chronic Ulcers, &c., it displays its controlling influence, and in the great majority of cases ARRESTS the PROGRESS of the disease and restores the patient to health. It has been the means of saving thousands from beds of suffering and lingering deaths.

Druggists unacquainted with the properties of this remedy are assured it DOES NOT CONTAIN ANY MERCURIAL INGREDIENT WHATEVER.

Bear in mind this is not a new ephemeral remedy gotten up for speculative purposes, but has an unblemished record of more than half a century of testing, and stands to-day alone and unrivalled. Hundreds of Physicians, thousands of families have used it advantageously. To these we confidently appeal for recommendations of its value, and a fair trial will soon verify our statement. Address orders to DR. FRANKLIN STEWART, Manager (under whose supervision it has been manufactured the past thirty years).

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS,
For Malarial Poisoning, Especially Hepatic Diseases and Malarial Fevers.
Testimony of Distinguished Medical Men:
MALARIOUS FEVERS.

Extract from Letter of Dr. Wm. T. Howard, of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, of August 1st, 1873.

Dr. Howard compares these waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

The Greenbrier White Sulphur Waters will be recognized by all informed upon such subjects as one of the most noted Mineral Fountains of the World.

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases: and more especially to the cachexia and sequels incident to MALARIOUS FEVERS IN ALL THEIR GRADES AND VARIETIES."

* * * * * * * In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the BUFFALO SPRINGS, in Mecklenburg county, Virginia."

—o—

Extract from Letter of the late Dr. Thos P. Atkinson, of Danville, Va., Ex-President State Medical Society, dated August 15th, 1874.

"The Buffalo Lithia Waters have unquestionably displayed great power in the peculiar diseases of the warm, miasmatic regions of the South, which may be grouped together under the general head of Malarial Cachexia, covering Hepatic Engorgements, Enlargements of the Spleen, Jaundice, &c."

"It is not pretended that these Waters possess any anti-periodic properties, such as belong to Quinine—At the same time, however, it is unquestionably true, that in the intermittent and remittent fevers in a chronic form, they have in numerous instances, given relief in cases which had obstinately resisted all the anti-period drugs of the shops. From my experience with them, I feel freely warranted in saying that, with rare exceptions, whenever disease is found originating under malarial influence, a potent remedy may be found in this water."

Extract from a Letter of Dr. John C. Coleman, of Halifax county, Va., (prior to the War a surgeon of the U. S. Navy, now retired) dated near Scottsburg, Va., January 1st, 1879.

"Perhaps no claim made for the Buffalo Lithia Waters is more thoroughly established than that they are a powerful antidote to malarial poison in its forms and varieties. In that large class of disorders, included in term Malarial Cachexia, embracing Engorgement of the Liver and Spleen, Jaundice, Indigestion, Dropsies and Neuralgias, of which the warm malarious districts of the South are so prolific, the action of these waters as a general rule is most decided and happy, and oftentimes astonishing. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, they are especially efficacious. I presume there is no season at these Springs in which some cases of this character do not find relief from these Waters, which have before baffled the human art."

Extract from Letter of Dr. Alfred Plumber, of Manson, N. C., dated March 16, 1874.

"I have known the Buffalo Springs of Mecklenburg county, Va., for twenty-five years, and have sent my patients to them. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fever, and in all diseases originating in malarial poison, I have found their action almost that of a charm. I have sent young ladies to these Springs so enfeebled from this influence as to be scarcely able to walk across a floor, and in a few weeks they would become so invigorated as to be able to dance half of every night."

—o—

These springs open for guests the 1st day of June. The water in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00 per case at the springs. Springs pamphlets sent to any address.

A Dinner And a Kiss.

"I have brought your dinner, father,"
The blacksmith's daughter said,
As she took from her arms a kettle
And lifted its shining lid.
"There's not any pie or pudding,
So I will give you this,"
And upon his toil-worn forehead
She left the childish kiss.

The blacksmith took off his apron
And dined in happy mood,
Wondering much at the savor
Hid in his humble food;
While all about him were visions
Full of prophetic bliss;
But he never thought of magic
In his little daughter's kiss.

—Exchange.

In God's Care.

One night, when Mr. Hansen, a rich Swedish merchant, was visiting Pomerania with his son, he took lodgings at a neat looking inn, where many years before he had passed three days. It had been pleasant weather then, but now the wind raged fiercely, and the sea lashed itself into fury. The hardiest of men had abandoned the coast, and, shivering with the cold, had returned to their homes. Edmund, the son of the merchant Hausen, went out to look about him, wrapped in a great woolen cloak, but soon came in, and said to the white-haired landlady.

"That is true enough, young man; no good would come of it," replied the old woman.

"You could very easily weather such a storm," said Edmund, smiling. "Such a voyage as you once made is not taken very often. My father has told me about it. You are shielded from wind and wave."

"Hush!" said the old woman, "we are everywhere under the eye of God. Those whom He keeps are well kept."

"That is true, Mother Martens," observed the merchant. "You have had proof of the divine power and goodness. The storm is still raging; let us close the shutters, and hear the story from beginning to end. Edmund will be pleased to know all about it."

"I do not like to speak of myself," said the woman; "one should leave that to others. However, you are right, sir; this narration may be useful to the young gentleman, and, as there is nothing more to be done outside, I will tell you how God gave me proof of his watchful care."

At these words the good old woman closed the shutters, put the kettle on the fire, and when the water was hot and the tea served, she began:

"You see, sir, I am an old woman. I have lived many long years in this strange country; but the day I left my own land is as distinct in my memory as if it were yesterday. The cabin of my parents was situated on the seacoast in the southern part of Sweden. I have never possessed riches. Our greatest treasure was a cow, spotted black and white. We had raised her and she was precious to us. It was my business to lead her every day to pasture. In summer it was very pleasant, but not so in winter. My father was a fisherman, and when the snow covered the country, and the sea was frozen over, we suffered much. Once we might have died of hunger if it had not been for the cow. The poor creature was the object of all our care.

"One time the winter was more severe than usual, the snow was piled up in heaps all around our cottage, and I, scarce sixteen years old, longed for the spring as a bird for the sun. At last, one cold, soggy, misty day, the sun drew me to the door, and I led our cow along the shore, where, here and there, at the foot of the 'dunes' (banks of sand), were some tufts of grass. The cow bounded with joy, and I was truly happy. Suddenly she ran toward the sea, which was covered with thick ice that cracked and broke as she moved over it. She reached a large cake of ice, and, standing on it, attempted to drink. I had gone with her. I kept close to her side, and saw in the distance great blocks of ice carried away by the tide. Immediately I felt the ice under us move. I called to the cow and tried to drive her to the shore, but she had not drank enough and would not stir; I cried aloud, I seized the cow and drew her with all my strength, and, I shudder to think of it, the ice on which we were separated from the shore and began to drift out toward the open sea!

"To right and left, before and behind, the ice was carried away. I looked around. I was going farther and farther from the land. I was numb with fear. The ice collected in heads as it moved slowly or heavily along; and that on which we were floated as a small boat. The cow shook with cold. The swift tide pressed on us and drove us ahead; darkness came on; the sun had set long ago, and now it was black night. The waves broke on our ice-cake—I fell on my knees—I prayed. The cow had lain down. I stretched myself close to her; this warmed me. Then I thought of my father, my mother, who would look for me so anxiously. I was filled with grief, and I slept exhausted from fatigue.

"In the middle of the night I awoke, shivering and my teeth chattering. Oh, what a spectacle was before me! On all sides where my eyes rested nothing but the water, nothing but the dreadful sea. The stories about water elves or fairies that I had heard told by sailors came to my mind; I seemed to see monsters and phantoms come from the bottom of the abyss. I fancied I saw strange figures floating like clouds towards me. Then I shut my eyes and prayed again. When I opened them I saw a bright star ahead. I looked again. It was a light, and it surely moved. A boat with men is coming towards us. 'Oh, Nannette!' I cried 'stand up.' It seemed to me she ought to shout for joy; but the poor shivering creature did not move.

"My fingers were numb and stiff, but I tore off my apron and waved it in the air, then—then—"

"Then," interrupted Edmund, with glowing eagerness, "they reached you and took you home—you and Nannette?"

"I do not know how it was," said the old woman, whose eyes were filled with tears. "I remember only voices, and then finding myself on a big ship, and then being home again in the dear old cottage, and father thanking the blessed God and rubbing Nannette; and then the happiest moment when father said, 'Oh! my daughter, I felt sure you would pray, and God would hear you.' My young friend, with God to help me, I was as safe on that open sea as I am now by this bright, warm fire."

"Ay, ay!" said the merchant, quietly; and the son, looking intensely at the dancing blaze, said: "I thank you, Madame Martens. You have taught me a lesson that I shall remember for many a day."—Early Days.

Good Advice.

Mr. Spurgeon says: "Make the bridge from cradle to manhood just as long as you can. Let your child be a child and not a little ape of a man running about town." Good advice. A book could be written of people who never had a childhood, from Milton to Ruskin. Indeed, we but recently had Ruskin's confession that he really ever enjoyed childhood, and Milton has put it in the mouth of his divine speaker in Paradise Regained to say

When I was yet a child no childish play
To me was pleasing; my mind was set
Serious to learn and know, and thence to do
What might be public good.

Boswell reports of Johnson that he never joined with the other boys at Lichfield school in their ordinary diversions. Perhaps had he done so he would not have been the choleric, irascible old man he was. The sickly boy of Scott's Rokeby was one of whom it was said:

No touch of childhood's frolic mood
Showed the elastic spring of blood.

And Southey stigmatizes a demi-millionaire in his "Alderman's Funeral" as one who

When he was a boy and should have breathed
The open air and sunshine of the fields,
To give his blood the natural spring and play,
He in a close and dusky countinghouse
Smoke-dried and seared and shrivelled up.

Heaven lies about the infancy of those who have a childhood. Alas for these prematurely old men and women—children of later years indeed—who never know the spontaneity, the playfulness, the freshness, the beautiful ideality, and the ideal beauty of the world in childhood! Thank God for children if you have them, and see to it that they have at least a childhood.—Christian at Work.

The Argan Tree.

Consul Drummond Hay, in his report upon Mogadore, the principal port of Morocco, mentions the existence of forests of the argan tree, which furnish nourishment both for the natives and their flocks in the times of drought and scarcity. This remarkable tree grows only in certain provinces of the country, and is utilized in the following ways: In the first place, the peasants extract the oil from the nut, which is used both for burning and cooking purposes. When the nuts ripen and fall off the trees they are gathered by the natives, who are aided in the harvest by their goats. Those animals swallow the fruit for the rind, but, being unable to digest the nut, they throw it up again, and it is then added by their owners to the store for making the oil. For their private consumption the peasant rarely makes a large quantity of the oil at a time, but crack open a few handfuls of nuts with a stone, and after toasting the kernels in an earthenware dish, grind them to flour. The oil is extracted by adding water in small quantities to the flour, which is stirred in a bowl. As the oil is being formed by this process, the flour hardens into a cake, which is finally squeezed, leaving the oil perfectly clear and fit for use. This kind of oil cake then serves as an excellent food for cattle, as does also the dry rind of the nut, which is generally given to them with the cake, forming together their principal and most nutritious food during the year. It is invaluable to the natives in times of drought, for the argan tree is very hardy, and a dry year has little if any effect upon it. Even the empty husk of the nut, when broken, is not thrown away by the peasants, but used as fuel. The best charcoal is made from the argan tree, and the dry timber is excellent firewood. The goats feed also upon the leaves of the tree, and when browsing in the argan forest may be seen climbing among the trees, plucking and nibbling the nuts and leaves.—Scientific American.

A Printer's Blunder.

Napoleon II. is one of the finest figures in French history. In point of fact he never reigned, and was never recognized by that title save once—by the Executive Committee of the Chambers before the accession of Louis XVIII. He was known as the king of Rome, and latterly as the duke of Reichstadt. His life, after the six years of royal babyhood in the Tuilleries, was spent in Austria with his mother's family. In 1832, at the age of twenty-one, he died at Schronbrun—many said of poison. A weak and effeminate creature, it was absurd to give him a place among the reigning monarchs of France. When the second empire was established, many wondered at the title assumed by the Emperor "Napoleon III." It was explained then that he desired to be considered a sovereign by legitimate hereditancy, and had thus recognized the claim of his cousin, as that of the poor Prince of the Temple was recognized by the Bourbons after the restoration. But it appears now that, upon the authority of the historian Kinglake, the intention of Louis Napoleon was to call himself simply Napoleon, and that a printer's blunder was responsible for the change. Just before the coup d'etat, a minister of the Home Office, busy preparing provincial sentiment, wrote Que le mot, d'ordre soit Vive Napoleon!!! The printer took the three exclamations for "III," and so the proclamation went out, and was copied by the press, and incorporated in public speech. It was no time for explanations, and so the nephew of his uncle adopted the title.

Professor Blackie.

The visitor to Edinburgh who happens to be strolling in the afternoon under the shadow of the Castle Rock may very possibly chance to find his attention attracted, on a sudden turn in his walk, by a strange and picturesque figure, of which it is difficult to say whether it has more in common with that of a Castilian troubadour or of the Ettrick Shepherd. It is the figure of a man of middle stature, lithely-built, of finely-chiselled features, cleanly shaven; a wealth of silken, silver locks trembling on his slender shoulders; a dark frock-coat, a Shakespeare collar, a cavalier hat, a grey Scottish plaid intricately wrapped round his chest. If the wayfarer swerves from his straight and independent path so as to pass close to this mysterious personage, ten to one that he will overhear him humming a Burschenlied, or a chorus of Æschylus. Probably since the limping form of Sir Walter, or the leonine face of Christopher North, used to be recognized by everybody in Princess street, there has been no more familiar or striking presence in Edinburgh than that of Professor Blackie. His house in Hill street is only a few doors removed from the former dwelling of the Great Unknown. The trusty old domestic who opens the door to you, who has been in the Professor's family all her life, and who speaks Scotch with an accent strongly suggesting Gaelic gutturals, ushers you into the library on the ground-floor front. The room is not very big, for the house itself is small, and is crammed from floor to ceiling with books on all subjects and in all languages. A large, substantial table for spreading out and comparing authorities monopolises all the walking space, and makes you feel you are in a genuine workshop. There are few or no ornaments visible, except busts of Scott and Niebuhr; vignettes of the Chevalier Bunsen and Edward Gerhard, "the friends of his youth and the directors of his early studies;" a statuette of Goethe on the mantelpiece, a memento of his metrical translation of "Faust," which the late Mr. G. H. Lewes pronounced to be the best extant. But before you have had time to notice even as much as this, the Professor himself, in velvet shooting jacket, has left his wife and pounded down stairs—a septuagenarian who preserves the fire and agility of a youth of twenty. What can he do for you? You must stay and dine, and join "the Hellenic" afterwards, for this is the meeting night.—Scottish-American Journal.

The Pansy.

The pansy, now so well known, and so popular over the civilized world, and called by a dozen different names, is the child of the simple little annual, heart's ease, or violet, of Europe, and perhaps of America, though it is thought to be only a naturalized citizen of this country. This flower has many names; indeed, every country gives it a pet name. Fringed violet, trinity flower, butterfly flower, love in idleness, stepmother, johnny-jump-up, are among the most common, while the French call it pansee, from which the English name pansy is no doubt derived.

When observing how these flowers flourished in the moist climate of England and Scotland, and how they seemed to revel in the fogs and mists so common in these countries, we feared that America could never produce good pansies, at least only well north. Experience, however has proved that our fears were unfounded. By growing seeds from plants of the most compact habit, and that bear the sun best, we have pansies that rival those of any part of the world, and, strange to say, the finest and largest we have ever seen were from the far South, in the vicinity of Charleston, S. C. The Southern winters are wonderfully adapted to the growth of the pansy.

We are not aware when the viola was first introduced into gardens, but in a floral work published in 1732 it is described and illustrated with a colored plate, and the flower is very little removed from the wild type. It was about seventy years ago that it first received the attention of professional florists and the honor of first calling attention to the pansy belongs to a lady, who, when quite young, was so pleased with the little flowers that grew scattered about her father's garden that she transplanted the best into a small heart-shaped bed, and enlisted the interest of the gardener in their behalf. He soon succeeded in making such improvement in the flowers that nurserymen and florists saw the advantages that might be derived from their culture, and soon there became a pansy fever all over the country, and this flower became one of the choicest gems of the garden, as it now is.—Vick's Magazine.

A Shiftless Farmer.

So long as it pays to have a suit of clothes to wear, or a meal of victuals to eat, farming pays; and when I hear so many farmers (if they deserve the name of farmer) complain that it does not pay, I think there is something wrong somewhere.

Not long since I called upon a gentleman who claims to be a farmer. As he has lived on the same farm for over forty years he ought to be one if he is not. On going into his barn I found half a dozen native cows. I asked him how his cows thrived. "Oh! very well; they are all I have to depend on, and if it was not for them I could not get a cent from my farm." I asked him why he did not keep more cows? He said that was all he could keep with what other stock he had. So, of course, I wanted to see his other stock, supposing he had some young stock; but instead of that I found three old horses and a yoke of oxen. There was evidently something wrong here, and I could not help remarking to him that, as his farm was suitable for a horse team, if he would dispose of the lot, and get two good horses, they would do all of his work, and he would save keeping enough for four more cows than he was now keeping, thereby adding over $200 yearly to his income. Then we looked into the barn cellar, where he kept his hogs. There were two of them about fifteen months old, and they would dress about two hundred and fifty pounds each. He said it did not pay to raise pork. "Confounded hogs!" said he, "they root so much they can't grow any," and so saying he threw a stick at one of them that was in the act of rooting up a large stone from the bottom of the cellar. I suggested to him to put fifty loads of muck into the cellar, and the manure, as fast as it accumulated, for the hogs to root over; but he said he had no time, and could not get money to pay a hired man. That was enough to satisfy me that it did not pay him to farm.

It is just such men as this who always complain that farming does not pay. But why don't they give up farming and engage in some other business, if it pays so poorly? The fact is, they would make a failure of anything they undertook, no matter what, for a man who is successful in one business will be in another if he understands it; and a man should never undertake the management of a farm unless he understands it in all its branches; and one who understands it and likes it you will never hear say it does not pay. I have heard men say "I would not give my farm for a whole city if I had got to live there, for you cannot breathe anything but coal gas, or see anything but brick walls." Such men as that will always make farming pay; and have no difficulty in raising steers that will dress from five hundred to seven hundred at two years old, or pigs that will dress three hundred at six months old. In conclusion, I would recommend farmers to take a good agricultural paper, and they could well afford a few books treating on agriculture.—New England Homestead.

The plague raging in Morocco, is horrible beyond description. Famine and starvation come in to aid disease in the terrible work. Living human beings eat the dead. Europeans flee if they can get away, but many die despite all precautions.

DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them A FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

ABSTRACT OF THE MINUTES OF CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

[OFFICIAL.]

Concord Presbytery met at Bethel church April 23d, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. T. G. Thurston, from John i: 16.

Rev. J. H. Thornwell was chosen Moderator, and Rev. J. A. Ramsay and A. C. McLean, ruling elder, Temporary Clerk.

Ministers present 16, ruling elders 23.

The following brethren were present and asked to sit as corresponding members: Rev. Messrs. Prof. J. F. Latimer, W. W. Pharr, W. E. Mellwaine, S. H. Chester and M. R. McKendrick, of the Presbytery of Mecklenburg; W. W. Orr and D. G. Caldwell, of the Presbytery of the A. R. Church; P. M. Custer, of Greenbrier (Va.) Presbytery, and W. P. Williams of the Methodist Church South.

Rev. G. M. Gibbs was dismissed at his own request to connect himself with Fayetteville Presbytery.

Presbytery ordered that on account of age and infirmity Rev. T. N. Paxton be excused from attending Presbytery hereafter.

J. C. Kennedy and C. W. Robinson, licentiates, made reports of their whereabouts and work.

The Moderator announced the usual standing committees.

The narratives from the churches and sessional reports were read and referred to the appropriate committees, and the reports on Sabbath schools and on Systematic Benevolence referred without reading.

Tuesday.—Rev. P. M. Custer was received on certificate from Greenbrier Presbytery, after examination, and his name enrolled.

A communication from Rocky River church asking Presbytery to change the sum promised in the call from that church from $1,200 to $1,000 was read and, the pastor consenting thereto, the request was granted.

A request from Taylorsville church, asking permission to retain Rev. T. G. Thurston as stated supply for another year, was granted.

The Book of Church Order was adopted without debate.

Rev. A. L. Crawford, with Rev. P. T. Penick as alternate, and Ruling Elder D. F. Cannon, with H. C. Hamilton as his alternate, were chosen as commissioners to the next General Assembly.

Statesville church was chosen as the place and Saturday before the second Sabbath of September next, 11 o'clock a. m., as the time for the next regular meeting of this body.

A call from the church of Concord (Iredell) for the ministerial services of Rev. P. P. Winn for one-half his time was read and placed in his hands.

Presbytery proceeded to install Rev. L. K. Gheagow, pastor of Bethel church, whereupon Rev. Rumple preached a sermon, Rev. J. H. Thornwell, Moderator, propounded the constitutional questions, Rev. P. T. Penick delivered the charge to the pastor and Rev. Wm. W. Pharr delivered the charge to the people.

A request was read from Franklin church, asking permission to employ the Rev. R. W. Boyd as stated supply for one year at a salary of $275 for one-half his time, which was granted.

R. Sterling, ruling elder, from the committee appointed at the last meeting to take into consideration the moral and religious condition of the colored population within our bounds and devise some plan for the promotion of their spiritual welfare, made a lengthy and interesting report, which was accepted, and the preamble and first two resolutions adopted, viz:

We recognize the importance of the religious training of the colored population among us, and are convinced that this training can be effectually given only by teachers of their own race, and would recommend the following measures to Presbytery for its adoption:

1. That our ministers embrace every favorable opportunity to convince the freedmen, by preaching for them or otherwise, of our interest in their spiritual welfare.

2. That ministers and sessions be requested to adopt such measures as are practicable for the religious instruction of our colored population.

The third and fourth resolutions in the above report, touching the best plan to be adopted for the education and training of a colored ministry among us, or the further consideration of the whole subject were made the order for the second day of the next regular meeting of this body.

Rev. P. P. Winn signified his acceptance of the call from Concord church (Iredell), whereupon it was ordered that when this Presbytery adjourn it adjourn to meet at Concord church on Friday before the first Sabbath in June next, at 11 o'clock a. m., to install him over said church, if the way be clear; and that Rev. W. A. Wood preach the installation sermon, that Rev. R. B. Anderson charge the pastor, and Rev. Wm. W. Pharr charge the people.

A call from Newton church for one fourth of the time of Rev. R. B. Anderson was read and placed in his hands, and, as he was not ready to answer the call, permission was granted him to retain the call for further consideration.

Presbytery ordered that the sessions of vacant churches appoint two of their number, a principal and alternate, to conduct religious services on the Sabbath and give the people an opportunity of contributing to the various objects ordered by the General Assembly.

Friday.—Rev. J. Rumple, from the Sustentation committee, recommended the following, which was adopted:

1. That Rev. W. A. Wood preach one Sabbath at Fifth Creek, and administer the sacrament.

2. That Rev. E. F. Rockwell supply Third Creek one Sabbath during the absence of the pastor to the General Assembly.

3. That Rev. R. W. Boyd do the same at Mocksville.

4. That Rev. J. H. Thornwell be directed to supply Poplar Tent church a part of the time for the next five months, provided it can be done without injury to his work in Stanly county, and provided further that Poplar Tent shall make a reasonable compensation for his services; but the Presbytery engages to continue to him the whole salary of $700 from its own treasury.

5th. That Rev. J. H. Colton be directed to supply Drusilla Church one Sabbath each month for the next year, and that $75 be appropriated from the Sustentation fund for his support, and that the church at Drusilla be directed to raise all they can to supplement this sum.

Rev. J. H. Thornwell, evangelist, made a brief but interesting report of his work in Stanly county. Reported that he had organized a church of five members in all, with two ruling elders; that the members of this little church have resolved to build a comfortable house of worship without asking any assistance outside of their own little number; that they will thankfully receive any assistance any one outside of their own number may see fit to give voluntarily and unasked. The report was approved and the name of the church (Norwood) enrolled. (I will take the liberty to suggest Mr. Editor, that if any one seeing this, wishes to contribute anything to this church, that it be sent to Rev. J. H. Thornwell, Concord.)

The following overture was unanimously adopted:

To the Reverend, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, to convene in the city of Louisville, Ky., May the 15th, 1879: The Presbytery of Concord respectfully overtures the venerable General Assembly to take up and carefully consider the subject of retrenchment of expenses in the conduct of our ecclesiastical affairs, and would respectfully suggest the consolidation of the causes of Education and Publication under one committee and one secretaryship, together with the orderly abolition of the Relief Scheme.

And would further respectfully overture the General Assembly to consider and adopt the plan of biennial Assemblies alternating with biennial meetings of the several Synods.

The following was adopted:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to obtain an evangelist to the colored people within our bounds, provided he can be supported without calling upon the funds of the Presbytery.

Wm. Murdock, ruling elder, Rev. J. Rumple, and Rev. W. A. Wood, were appointed said committee.

Revs. J. H. Colton, T. N. Paxton and ruling elder J. M. Greenlee, were appointed a commission to settle difficulties in Siloam church, with full power to try cases and inflict censure if need be.

The Committee on Bills and Overtures reported, recommending as an answer to the overture from Taylorsville Church, that the phrase, "Baptised non-communicants he defined to include all baptized children of every age who have not been admitted to full communion. Adopted.

The committee to whom the narrative reports from the churches were referred, reported, recommending the approval of the following: D. College, Salisbury, Morganton, Statesville, Centre, Bethphage, Wilkesboro, Mooresville, Prospect, Zion, Concord, (town and vicinity) and the following in part: Thyatira, Taylorsville, Mocksville, Hickory, Concord, (Iredell,) Bethany, Poplar Tent, Siloam, Marion, Third Creek, Franklin, Rocky River, Back Creek, Bethesda, Norwood and Tabor.

The various committees appointed by the Moderator made reports.

A vote of cordial thanks was tendered to the good people of Bethel and Davidson Colleges (near by) for their kindness and liberality in entertaining Presbytery, and to railroads for reduced fare.

The meeting was a pleasant one in all respects.

Wm. W. Pharr,
Stated Clerk.

BE HUMBLE.

If thou art a vessel of gold, and thy brother but of wood, be not high-minded. It is God that maketh thee to differ. The more bounty God shows, the more humility he requires. Those mines that are richest are deepest; those stars that are highest are smallest; the goodliest buildings have the lowest foundation. The more God honoreth men, the more they should humble themselves; the more fruit, the lower the branches on which it grows. Pride is ever the companion of emptiness.

THE ENO CHURCH.

To the Editor of the N. C. Presbyterian:

Dear Sir—It has been repeatedly suggested that, owing to the advanced age of the writer, he should give from personal recollection some sketches of the origin of this old church, with something of the usages and customs of it, and the neighboring congregations (which were pretty nearly the same) in years long since past.

This old church was organized among the first in Orange Presbytery by the earliest settlers, mostly Scotch-Irish, who migrated here from Pennsylvania and New Jersey. This was called the Eno settlement; the Hawfield settlement was made about the same time, and was composed of about the same material. The two settlements were only from eight to twelve miles apart, and the people intermarried freely. The first proposal suggested for erecting a house for public worship was to unite on half-way ground and have one church for both settlements, and accordingly a site was selected on what is called the old Strudwick plantation. Finally they concluded for each settlement to erect a house where each settlement could worship under its own vine and fig tree; but they united for many years in securing pulpit ministrations and pastoral services.

The exact date when the first house of worship was built at Eno cannot now be ascertained, but it is supposed to have been in 1736 or 1737. The deed given for the ground on which it stands bears date from the ninth year of the reign of George II. The building was of logs and stood near the middle of an acre of ground. A corner-stone remains to point the spot. Buried within the space designated and, nearly filling it, are graves that contain the ashes of those sturdy pioneers who felled the forests and fought the battles of their country, and yet were not unmindful of the duties of religion.

Memory recalls, in association with the early days of this church, the names of Revs. Messrs. Spencer, McWhorter, McAden, Patillo, Lake, Hodge and McGrady—men whose preaching was a terror to evil-doers.

The church took its name from a little tributary of the Neuse river, which winds near by, and, tradition says, was organized in 1756 by Rev. Messrs. Spencer and McWhorter, but the organization may have been earlier. Rev. Wm. McAden preached there at various times in 1755 on his missionary tours through the State. The first elders were Thomas Clark, John Tinnin and Carnes Tinnin.

The present house, which has frequently undergone repairs, was built in 1793 and dedicated to the service of God in the year following, at which time the Rev. James H. Bowman became pastor of Eno and Little River congregations. He continued with them twenty-one years, and during this period his labors in the ministry were blessed and many were added to these two churches. He was a man of tender sympathizing feelings and his manner of delivery mild and persuasive. Possessing more than ordinary oratorical grace and fluency of speech, yet his motto was, "A praying people make a preaching minister;" this he seemed to realize in a good degree. We have often seen grey heads bowed and the congregation deeply affected, while tears stole down the cheeks of the speaker.

The personal recollections of the writer commence with the year 1802 and with the great revival of that year. It was a time of great solemnity and the Holy Spirit was abundantly outpoured. As accords with our observation generally this revival was preceded by much wrestling in prayer. The weekly prayer meetings were well attended. Many dated their conversion from this time and became useful members and office-bearers in the church.

It was usual in those days to hold two examinations in the congregation each year on the Westminster catechism in connection with Willison's and Fisher's catechisms. Friday preceding the communion Sabbath, spring and fall, was observed as a day of fasting and prayer. The communion seasons were very solemn and lasted four days. On Saturday the great bake-oven then used was brought into use and enough baking was done to last till the close of the meeting, so that no one was detained to cook warm dinner on Sunday. Other regulations for proper observance of the Sabbath were duly attended to.

Large crowds attended the sacramental occasions, and there was more solemnity than now-a-days.

Rev. Mr. Bowman left these congregations in 1815 and moved to the West. He was succeeded by Rev. Samuel, Paisley, who became pastor in 1816 and continued to serve in this capacity for over twenty years. He was a man of prayer, and frequently urged upon his hearers the importance of secret prayer, strengthening his injunction by citing the parable of the unjust judge and unfortunate widow. His labors for a number of years were blessed in a good degree.

We cannot take the time and space to follow up the record of the church. Succeeding Mr. Paisley were the three Phillips, Witherspoon, Doak, Graves, Currie, Stanfield and others. The habits and customs of the people are greatly changed since these olden times. The sanctuary was entered with reverence and vacated with becoming solemnity. The aisles of the church were cleared as soon as well could be after the benediction was pronounced. All salutatory compliments were exchanged after leaving the house.

"Thus saith the Lord, stand in the ways and see and ask for the old paths, which is the good way, and walk therein and ye shall find rest for your souls." Layman.

THE NEW EARTH.

Principal Fairbairn, in his work on typology, makes, what seems to us, an unanswerable argument in favor of our theory from the promises made to the patriarchs, in connection with Eph. i: 14, where the Apostle says that believers have received the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of their inheritance until "The redemption (recovery) of the purchased possessions." Another line of argument might be pursued from those passages which speak of the return of Christ to the earth and the scenes then to be enacted; the coming down of the New Jerusalem, the redeemed church, from God out of heaven, and the investing of the Saints with the emblems of their royalty to "reign on the earth." Our theory removes many of the difficulties in which the Premillenial hypothesis involves these passages. But we will pass them over with a reference to the work of Fairbairn and that of Dr. Ramsay, and close our discussion with one or two general considerations which will serve to increase the general probability of our view.

The first of these is drawn from the distinguishing honor which God has put upon our earth as a field for the display of the highest glories of his character. Many of the members of our own little system far surpass it in material greatness; and of the stars which shine through the void immense, there are myriads which far outshine it in material splendor. But it has other and higher claims to honor, which none of them can for a moment rival. Those fields are rendered forever holy.

"Over whose acres walked those blessed feet,
Which eighteen hundred years ago were nailed
For our advantage on the bitter cross."

Its dust is consecrated, not only by the baptism of his blood, but also by being formed into his human body which has been assumed into everlasting union with his Divine nature. On one of its hills his cross was lifted up; that sun of the moral system before which the sun of heaven was veiled, and all material nature shut its glories in, acknowledging that it had no glory "by reason of the glory that excelleth." The cross not only displayed that moral glory of God, his holiness, justice, truth and mercy, with the view of which alone the heart of man is satisfied, but on it "he spoiled principalities and powers, triumphing over them in it." And now we ask, and the question answers itself, shall the earth, which has witnessed such scenes, be blotted out of being, or given up at last to Satan? Shall the conquered enemy retain possession of the battle ground, or shall the conqueror erect no trophy there, that in the ages to come he may show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward them that believe?

Again, the earth was made for man, and man was made for the earth. They are mutually adapted to each other. Except in so far as sin has marred them both, the earth, with all its arrangements, laws and processes, is perfectly suited to furnish man a field for the use and enjoyment of all his powers. We touch the cords of a musical instrument; a vibration is started in the air which strikes upon the curiously wrought membrane of the ear. The impression is conveyed by the auditory nerve to the brain. The effect is what we call music, but the music is not in the air nor in the ear but in the soul.

"There is in souls a sympathy with sounds,
And as the mind is pitched the ear is pleased."

And so with all the other senses. They are but so many avenues, and the corresponding arrangements of nature so many vehicles by which the manifold goodness and glory of God is borne into the secret chambers of the soul to fill it with wonder and delight.

Now we do not suppose that God made man in the beginning an essentially different being from what he intended him finally to be. Still less is the supposition probable, as some writer has well remarked, "that any artifice of Satan should cause the great designer to change his original purpose and produce a new creature out of fallen man essentially unlike the manhood in which he was first created." True, the Apostle says we shall be changed. The saints will be changed in the sense of being purified from sin; of having their natural powers enlarged. They shall be exalted to a higher state and glorified in soul and body. But they are not to have their identity destroyed by being changed into something else than human beings. Their glorified bodies will not be incarnate clogs, but perfect vehicles we would suppose for conveying to their glorified spirits the beauties and harmonies of heaven. Every eye will see and appreciate the splendor of its eternal mansions, and every soul be filled with melody at the voice of the harpers harping with their harps, and singing their new song before the throne.

And now is there not something in our doctrine, pleasing even to those whose griefs have made them tired of the earth? Is it not pleasing to think that here, in the very place where they have fought and suffered they shall triumph and rejoice? That here, where Christ was despised and rejected of man and crucified, he shall be forever worshipped by the adoring millions of his redeemed subjects? That the atmosphere of this very earth, where revelry and blasphemy and the wild song of the bacchanal have so long poured their discord into the ear of the Prince of darkness, shall one day vibrate only with the praises of him who hath loved us and washed us from our sins in his blood.

S. H. C.

The Bethel at Honolulu, which is still in charge of Rev. Mr. Damon, has become an important centre for the religious efforts which are put forth for the benefit of Chinese. Last year 4,000 Chinese learners landed on the Sandwich Islands. Regular Sunday services are held in the Chinese language at the Bethel.

CHILDHOOD'S HOME.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M. D.

Dear home, there is a charm around
Thine oft-remembered spot,
Which from my earliest youth hath bound
Me to thee, as to holy ground,
And will not be forgot.

Long years have overpast since first
I left thine honored dome;
Yet naught that hath upon thee burst,
Hath from thy sacredness dispersed
The loveliness of home.

How bitter, when thy precincts dear
First faded from my view,
How bitter that unbidden tear,
That told me I was no more near
The home my boyhood knew.

The many hours I there had spent
Rushed like a memory-spell;
There no discordant jar had rent
Our little band, and bade prevent Affection's rising swell.

Bright did endearance fondly shed
A halo o'er the past,
And all the future overspread,
With promised blessings on my head,
And bid them ever last.

There came a change—ere morn of days
Had merged in coming noon,
The blot, the pall, the gloomy haze
Had whispered that our future ways
Must separate how soon!

All are not here—one whom we loved
Is taken to her home;
While yet the blessing seemed approved
There came a message and removed
A sister to the tomb.

Years may advance, and with them all
That home's fond joyance gave;
Friend after friend successive fall
Beneath the sad funereal pall
That shrouds them for the grave.

Yet, till life's lamp shall cease to burn
And all in death repose,
Oft would my willing footsteps turn,
And here where I was wont to learn
Submission lose my woes.

But ah! what havoc time hath done,
As o'er thee swept his train!
Years since have past, and one by one
Thy once loved inmates all are gone,
And I alone remain.

But let my heart, thy murmurs cease,
And take thy Father's lead:
Oh sorrow not at their release,
For heaven's attractions but increase
As those of earth recede.

Earth has no home, however dear,
Which death does not infest;
The loved on earth whom we revere,
Can tarry but a season here,
For this is not your rest."

Place not thy treasures then my heart,
In any earthly store;
But e'er remember where thou art,
And choose in heaven that better part,
Where partings are no more.

Then, when life's evening shall have come,
And home on earth shall fade,
A star dispersing all the gloom,
Shall ope a bright celestial home,
Where death shall ne'er invade.

HONEST DEAN STANLY.

Dean Stanley in a sermon recently preached before the Glasgow Society of the sons of the clergy says:

"The Scottish church is not only Christian, Catholic, National, and Protestant—it is also Presbyterian. There was a time when it used to be the prevailing belief of English divines that Episcopacy, in the sense of the necessity of one presiding officer over every Christian community, reached back to the first origin of the Christian society. This belief, in the enlarged atmosphere of more exact scholarship and more enlightened candor, has now been abandoned. The most learned of all the living bishops of England, whose accession to the great see of Durham has been recently welcomed by the whole Church of England with a rare unanimity and enthusiasm, has, with his characteristic moderation and erudition, proved beyond dispute, in a celebrated essay attached to his edition of 'St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians,' that the early constitution of the Apostolic churches of the first century was not that of a single bishop, but of a body of pastors indifferently styled bishops or presbyters, and that it was not till the very end of the apostolic age that the office which we now call Episcopacy gradually and slowly made its way in the churches of Asia Minor; that Presbytery was not a later growth out of Episcopacy, but that Episcopacy was a later growth out of Presbytery; that the office which the apostles instituted was a kind of rule, not of bishops, but of presbyters; and that even down to the third century presbyters as well as bishops possessed the power of nominating and consecrating bishops."

A GOOD PAYMASTER.

Mr. Wesley once, when he was making a collection, urged the people to give, and in this way to lend their money to the Lord, adding: "The Lord is a good paymaster." These words made such an impression upon the mind of a little boy who was present that he put a shilling into the plate. This was the only coin that he possessed. He fully expected that his shilling would soon come back to him, and as time passed on and it did not return he felt disappointed. Twenty years rolled away, and the boy had grown to be a rich man, and what is infinitely better, a real Christian. One day he met Mr. Wesley, and reminded him of his words, telling him also how he had acted upon them. "And so he added, 'the Lord is a good paymaster,' for I am this day worth twenty thousand pounds, and, I trust, have the grace of God in my heart."

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, VA.

Annual Report of the Directors and Trustees of Union Theological Seminary, in Virginia, to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States and to the Synods of Virginia and North Carolina:

The annual meeting of the directors and trustees was held on the 8th and 9th of April, 1879, and twenty-one of the twenty-four trustees, were in attendance. The whole number of students during 1878–'79 was 54; being 11 Seniors, 19 of the Middle Class and 24 Juniors. Certificates of having completed the course of study, were awarded to Wm. B. Arrowood, of North Carolina; Wm. C. Campbell, Wm. E. Cave, Wm. F. Cosner, Theo. P. Epes, J. H. Smith, of Virginia; Lyttleton E. Scott, of West Virginia; B. F. Thompson and J. H. Weaver, of Tennessee. A good degree of faithfulness in study, on the part of the students, appeared from the reports of the Examining Committee and of the Faculty. The health of the students has been generally good. The statement of the Treasurer, (the substance of which is here appended) shows a healthy state of the finances. Satisfactory results are growingly manifest from the written examinations, connected with the oral. One hundred and twenty-seven volumes have been added to the library, making the whole number about ten thousand eight hundred volumes. The trustees made arrangements for erecting a building for a library, for the Institution, and the work will be commenced without delay. The expediency of reducing the number of trustees (mainly on account of the expense) and suggested changes in the length of the period of study and of the times of beginning the terms, have engaged the attention and deliberation of the trustees, and the advice of the Synods on these difficult questions is solicited.

Thanks are due to the Great Head of the Church for manifest tokens of His favor to this Seminary, and to Him do we sincerely look for continued blessings.

Respectfully submitted.

J. Henry Smith, 1st, V. P.

F. N. Watkins, Sec'ry.

It will be seen that $5,000 (Petersburg bonds) have been added to the investments in 1878. It is believed that of the $27,897 reported at present unavailable, at least $6,000 will yield revenue during '79–'80. And after payment of the salaries of professors, and to the scholarships, repairs and incidental expenses, from $1,500 to 2,000 will remain for investment. Of course the Library Building may render it necessary to diminish the amount of our securities, the special donations for that purpose, having been invested; and the amount of repairs and other incidental expenses vary from year to year.

The Officers for '79–'80 are as follows: Rev. C. H. Read, D. D. of Richmond, Va., President, Rev. J. Henry Smith, D. D., of Greensboro, N. C, (1st) and Mr. J. H. Brown, of Baltimore, (2nd) Vice Presidents, F. N. Watkins, Farmville, Va., Secretary and Treasurer.

Professors: Rev. Drs. B. M. Smith, R. L. Dabney, T. E. Peck and H. C. Alexander.

The Post Office address of the Professors and Students is "Hampden Sidney;" that of the Treasurer is "Farmville, Va." The legal title of the Corporation is. "The Trustees of Union Theological Seminary in Virginia." The next term begins 13th August 1879, and ends 8th April 1880.

A SCOTCH LADY'S REWARD.

A Scotch lady taught a school of Jewish girls for twenty-five years in and about Constantinople before she won a single convert. At the end of that time a young woman was converted whose father had given her mother a "writing of divorcement, and put her away," since that time this daughter has, with lowly love for Jesus, and with a burning desire to make known to her sex the perfection of beauty, joined herself to the persistent Scotch Lady, and they steadily went from strength to strength until now they have thirty-two of the daughters of Israel under their care, teaching them the doctrine of Christ, having, in their march, overcome the deadly opposition of the Jewish Rabbis, who from time to time fulminated such anathemas as they thought would deter their youth from attending this school. But the parents and youth found these issues to be quite harmless, and the girls continue to read and hear of Christ.

The smallest living in the Church of England is that of Shipton, near Ludlow, in the diocese of Hereford, which is valued at £3 per annum. The population of the district in 1871 was 198.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From London Weekly Review:

The Revolution Francaise is to be prosecuted for insulting articles on Roman Catholicism.

Since 1860 upwards of six hundred Jews have confessed faith in Christ crucified, in the Episcopal Jews' chapel, Palestine Place.

A correspondent of a Birmingham paper writes, that at two of the churches in that town certainly, and he believes at four, the use of the Athanasian Creed has been discontinued.

It seems that a son of Canon Gregory has opened a college for native catechists and clergy, thirteen miles from Antananarivo, the capital of Madagascar, and has seventeen postulants.

Two missionaries are just being sent out by the London Missionary Society to replace the losses which have transpired in the Central African mission. Dr. Mullens, the Foreign Secretary of the Society, it is stated, is going immediately to Zanzibar, for the purpose of organizing and guiding the mission. If Dr. Mullens finds it necessary to the interests of mission, he will also proceed to Ujiji, and render his valuable aid at headquarters. He is to leave for Zanzibar at once.

Bell blessing, it would seem, is becoming an established institution. The Bishop of Dover has consecrated a new peal of eight bells at the parish church of Folkstone, and at Lyncham, Wilts, and in Thetford St. Mary, Essex, there have been similar ceremonies. The consecration, however, of the vane on the top of a spire which took place at All Saints, Roffey, last week, seems carrying these matters too far.

A rumor comes from Rome that Dr. Dollinger may probably return to communion with the Holy See. Pope Leo is reported to have recently spoken with great respect of the learned professor, who has never once said mass since his differences with his own bishop and metropolitan were formally made public. When Dr. Dollinger quite recently reached his eightieth birthday many congratulations poured in from his old allies, notably from an influential cardinal at Rome, who professes his belief in Dr. Dollinger's "speedy submission to authority."

The Israelite Alliance is forming an International Commission for the consideration of the affairs of Palestine. The Anglo-Jewish Association has appointed a committee in London to co-operate with the International Commission. The object is to educate the Jews of Palestine and systematise the relief of the poor in Jerusalem, which at present is so administered as to pauperise them. There are said to be 18,000 Jews in Jerusalem, and their annual revenue from the benevolent among their brethren in other countries is estimated to be not less than £60,000.

From other sources:

The reports from India are most encouraging. In 1830 there were nine missionary societies at work in this vast country, and probably 27,000 converts. Now there are not less than 500,000.

A Presbyterian conference was recently held at Lahore in the Punjaub. There at the present time one hundred and forty-four ordained Presbyterian ministers and missionaries in India, and a movement is on foot to form an alliance of the different sections of the denomination in the empire.

An interesting archæological discovery has been made by the workmen engaged in laying out the proposed garden on the northeast side of St. Paul's Cathedral. At a depth of about six feet they came upon the foundation of Paul's Cross. The date of the cross is antecedent to the thirteenth century. It was used for ecclesiastical purposes for the first time during the reign of Edward I., the earliest record of such employment being in the year 1299. In Henry VIII.'s and Elizabeth's reigns the pulpit was filled by the most eminent preachers of the Reformation. It was here that Latimer and Ridley held forth to crowds of eager listeners. It was here also that Ridley preached his memorable sermon on the occasion of using the new Service Book for the first time. The demolition of Paul's Cross was decreed by the Long Parliament in 1642, and in the following year it was razed to the ground.

MISCELLANY.

The Bey of Tunis has opened an Arabic printing-house.

The first picture gallery in America was that of John Watson, a Scottish artist, who lived in Perth Amboy, and died a short time before the Revolution.

The Rev. Dr. E. C. Wines has resigned, on account of increasing age, the office of Secretary of the National Prison Association of the United States.

The man who first established post routes in the American Colonies was John Hamilton, a Scot, and Governor of New Jersey. He was the son of Andrew Hamiltom, who had also been Deputy-Governor before him, and was a man of much ability, and greatly respected.

The Civil Damages bill making liquor sellers and owners of places where liquor is sold responsible for damages caused by drunken men had passed both branches of the Massachusetts Legislature.

The Baroness Burdett Coutts, who has given $15,000,000 for the poor of England, recently entertained a large number of poor people and others, with their wives, at dinner at an immence coffee house at Spitalfields. She sat with her guests, and after dinner made an address to them.

Imperial babies are expensive infants to keep, judging from the example of the little Grand Duke Michael Alexandrowitch, the youngest child of the Czarovitch, who, at four months old, had an allowance of $16,845 for his table, while his household consists of 15 persons.

Biblical knowledge would seem to be at a discount in certain quarters. The Daily Telegraph informs the public that the subject of Sir Frederic Leighton's great picture is Jeremiah Fed by an Angel. The Parliamentary report in the Standard of a recent speech by Sir William Harcourt makes the orator say that the "High Commissioner Nathan delivered an ultimatum to Nabob;" while Sir Stafford Northcote is credited by the same journal with the remark that the ultimatum in question was addressed to Nabroth. A few copies of the Bible should be distributed to the occupants of the Gallery.

Truth cannot part from holiness of life and charity of heart.

Good works follow redemption, as fruits appear on the tree.—Luther.

CONVERSION OF SEAMEN.

The Presbytery of New Orleans will overture the next General Assembly of our Church to take the religious instruction and conversion of seamen under its special consideration, and to look after seamen as a special class.

We are glad that this subject will be brought thus prominently before our Church, and it is to be hoped that it will secure very earnest attention. The peculiar traits of seamen, their energy and recklessness, which too often are exemplified in the swift running to mischief, when sanctified, can be employed most effectually in the service of Christ. Our acquaintance, somewhat limited it is true, with this class of men, satisfies us that the most earnest and devoted Christians are to be found among "them that go down to the sea in ships," and our experience is seconded by those who know them well. The very temptations they are called upon to resist, the constant manifestations of God's power and protecting care which converted seamen witness and acknowledge, and the utter fearlessness resulting from their education and training render them robust.

What a mighty instrumentality in the conversion of the world might our mariners become. The mercantile marine is now too often an obstacle in the way of the conversion of the heathen, placing in direct contrast to the teachings of missionaries the wicked practices of those who are presumed to have had instruction in the religion of Christ.

Every converted seaman is a missionary. In the restricted sphere of the forecastle the God-fearing sailor is a preacher of righteousness to his companions, and this more effectually by reason of his long continued and intimate seclusion with them. His frequent changes of service, too, carry his example repeatedly before varied observators. But this is a small though not unimportant part of the service he may render. In a pamphlet before us entitled "Twenty-five Years of Ocean Colportage," the service even now rendered by seamen is surprising and in the highest degree satisfactory.

They have been employed in distributing Bibles and tracts to all parts of the habitable globe. We give the following from the report of the Marine Agent of the New York Bible Society:

"Perhaps the most eloquent statements of the wide scope of these distributions would be the simple enumeration of the ports reached in a single month, as in January, 1878, which is as follows: Havana, St. Jagoe, Sagua, Cienfuegos, Nuevitas, Matanzas, Rio Hache, Trinidad de Cuba, Porto Rico, Martinique, Guadaloupe, Jeremie, Anx Cayes, Port au Prince, Gonaives, Jacmel, Belize, Honduras, Truxillo, Omoa, Puerto Cortes, Vera Cruz, Savanilla, Porto Cabello, Ciudad Bolivar, Rio Janeiro, Para, Pernambuco, Rio Grande, Buenos Ayres, Rosario, Montevideo, Callao, Bordeaux, Lisbon, Cadiz, Gibraltar, Santander, Corunna, Canary Islands, Genoa, Naples, Leghorn, Messina, Zanzibar and Manilla.

"Yet these names do not tell the whole story even of a single month. They say nothing of the distributions by the way—at the lonely islands touched at in the Pacific, not down on the map, yet already inhabited by fugitives from civilization; or to the negro wreckers on the Bahama Keys (mere ribs of sand with a backbone, perhaps, of coral, and a vegetation of a few palms), who watch for the sailor, and as the welcome sail appears in sight, come out to meet him 'singing hymns,' and 'bringing fish and fruit to exchange for Testaments or tracts;' or 'to French and Portuguese trading vessels met with up the rivers Pongos and Nunez, West Africa;' or to Russian officers, glad of a few tracts in Swedish and German, in their isolation at a military post near the mouth of the Amoor river."

"Captain C— of the American brig —, which sailed from here for the east coast of Africa last year, brings back a report of distributions made of Scriptures and tracts in French, Portugese and Arabic, as follows: At Zanzibar he distributed with great acceptance to a number of Portuguese from Goa, on the coast of Hindostan. At Mozambique he gave an Arabic Testament to a Mussulman gentleman of standing, who took it with reiterated injunctions of secrecy. At Aden the American consul asked a copy in the same language to lend to his Mohammedan acquaintances. At Muscat another Arabic Testament was given to the first naval officer in the service of the Imaum of Muscat. He also distributed in the French language, at the Maldive Islands, at several points on the coast of Madagascar, and on the small islands to the north of it.

"In one instance a Frenchman at a lonely trading station in Madagascar, to whom he had given a French Bible and tracts, was so much pleased that he sent him down a touching letter of thanks, and a piece of silver for the Society. 'I am not in very good circumstances,' were his words, 'as you know; but I beg you to cast into the treasure chest of this Society five francs, the poor man's farthing (le denier du pauvre), to aid the expenses of this benevolent work."

The report continues, showing how the peculiar traits of seamen are rendered serviceable:

"In one case he takes the ship's boat Sunday morning and visits the vessels in the roadstead, or he pulls out to the old hulk which serves as a hospital, or to the Spanish man-of-war; on all which his books are enthusiastically received. Or he divides his package among the raftsmen who have floated mahogany down the river to the vessel; or among the fishing craft and bum-boat men boarding the vessel as it lies becalmed off the coast of Spain; or at Cadiz, among the laborers unloading the cargo—one of whom failing to receive, offers to 'work a whole night for a Testament.' Or, more boldly, he goes ashore to the market place at sunrise, so as to catch the market people from the country, or to the town jail to give to the prisoners; or he distributes tracts from house to house in Havana, exhorting also as well as his small stock of Spanish will permit; or in the same port he takes a basket loaded with Spanish reading matter to the large fort adjoining the Moro, and is well received. In Malaga a captain, at the suggestion of a soldier, takes his wife and the Spanish package, and visits the barracks, where they are welcomed as guests, and have to write their names in every Testament given. At Alicante a mate, thinking, with singular simplicity, that 'the cathedral must be a good place to distribute Testaments and tracts,' visits it, empties his pockets, and comes away unscathed."

Space will not admit of further extracts from the pamphlet, though there is very much more that is highly interesting. The sketch of this work is published by the American Tract Society.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN REVIEW, APRIL, 1879.

This only quarterly of Presbyterians in America is before us, and exceedingly interesting is the number for April as a glance at the table of contents would alone suggest. It contains:

I. Mediaeval Modern Mystics, by the Rev. L. G. Barbour, Central University, Richmond, Ky.

II. Non-Scholastic Theology.

III. The Grace of Adoption. By the Rev. Thos. H. Law, Spartanburg Courthouse, S. C.

IV. The Four Apocalyptic Beasts; or, the Cherubic Symbol. By Rev. A. W. Pitzer, D. D., Washington, D. C.

V. The Dancing Question. By the Rev. Prof. R. L. Dabney, D. D., LL., D., Union Theological Seminary, Va.

VI. The Question of Dancing from Another Point of View. By the Rev. John B. Adger, D. D., Pendleton, S. C.

VII. Thoughts on Foreign Missions. By the Rev. J. Leighton Wilson, D. D., Baltimore, Md.

VIII. Capital and Labor.

IX. Life of Horace Mann. By Prof. J. T. L. Preston, Lexington, Va.

X. Critical Notices.

XI. Recent Publications.

Incontestibly this Review stands at the head of all similar publications. All the articles are interesting.

Article I. is not without practical interest at the present day. No. III. touches the loftiest heights of Christian privilege. Article VIII. cuts like a two edge sword. It can not be long before the hitherto supercilious progressive theorists of the world will admit that the Southern civilization they destroyed was in advance of them all. Article IX. is a just review of a life wasted in vain efforts to better the world by methods wiser than heaven has revealed. Articles V. and VI. are doubly interesting at this juncture. Both writers do not seem to have had the same advantage of reviewing the other's article. Dr. Adger has the last say, though the articles appear contemporaneously. Both writers agree that dancing is an evil, but Dr. Dabney pronounces it in some of its forms, if not all, to be a sin, and recommends the General Assembly "to speak out still more explicitly, and order categorically the discipline of all church members who are found contumacious in round dancing as practiced by men and women." Dr. Adger is not prepared to pronounce dancing a sin and technically disciplinable. "Vastly more should we confide in the preaching of Christ and the powers of the world to come in the setting fourth of our duty to the head of his Church." He quotes Augustin and Calvin against "harsh imperious measures." Dr. Dabney writes in his usual nervous style. Dr. Adger sets forth the views of many in saying that: if we begin by allowing sessions to discipline dancing as dancing; if the thin edge is once introduced in this way, our Church liberty may be speedily destroyed and with it will go our Church unity and also our Church purity."

There is much valuable reading in both articles. We cannot forbear saying in reference to Dr. Dabney's concluding question: "Might not a holy ingenuity find a sufficent variety of such gregarious occupations as would supplant the dance in interest and pleasure?" that such holy ingenuity seems to have succeeded at Hampden Sidney, Va., for many can testify that no more refined and enjoyable society can be found in the land.

A GOOD REPORT.

The report of the Concord church, Cabarrus, to the late Presbytery of Concord, showed twenty-four addition during the last year and $2,400 raised for all purposes.

CHURCH IMPROVEMENTS.

The Presbyterian Church at Monroe, N. C., recently received from the ladies of the congregation a new pulpit cushion and set of books. This neat and comfortable little church is now well furnished. At Wadesboro the ladies have beautifully carpeted the aisles of the church. Rev. R. A. Miller is the pastor of these churches.

FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

Presbytery met at St. Andrew's Church, Moore county, April 24th and adjourned April 26. There were thirteen ministers and twenty-two ruling elders present. Rev. Joseph Evans was chosen Moderator. and J. A. McAllister and Rev. Wm. S. Lacy were chosen temporary clerks.

Rev. D. D. McBryde and Ruling Elders H. H. Hodgin were chosen delegates to General Assembly; Rev. Martin McQueen and J. A. McAllister, alternates.

The vote on the new Book of Church Order was a tie—seventeen for and seventeen against.

Application was made by sundry persons residing in or near Cameron, for the organization of a Church at that point. The Committee of Visitation for the district were directed to visit Union Church (in the bounds, and on the border of which Cameron is situated) to ascertain if the way be clear, and a special committee was appointed to organize a Church at Cameron if the way be open.

Sharon Church was chosen as the place, and Wednesday before the second Sunday in October as the time for the fall meeting.

Historical sketches of the different churches of Presbytery were ordered to be prepared and presented at the next meeting.

Rev. G. W. Gibbs was received from the Presbytery of Concord.

The various reports were duly prepared, and the Stated Clerk will give a more careful enumeration of business done. This much is to satisfy the first curiosity. S.

NOTICE.

The Presbytery of Orange stands adjourned to meet at Cross Roads Church on Tuesday, the 20th of May, at 1 o'clock P. M. A full attendance is desired. F. H. JOHNSTON, Stated Clerk.

VOTE OF THE PRESBYTERIES.

Since our last report of the vote on the Revised Book, we have returns from the following Presbyteries:

For—Winchester, Abingdon, Ebenezer, Indian, Savannah and Atlanta. Against—Nashville and Maryland. Fayetteville Presbytery was a tie vote—17 for and 17 against the New Book.

Total thus far in favor of the book, 46; opposed to it, 8; tie, 1.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

SHOE HEEL, N. C., April 28th, 1879.

MR. EDITOR:

Dear Sir—The congregations of Centre and Shoe Heel have given a pastoral call to the Rev. R. Martin. This was done in a meeting of two churches, and their action was without one dissenting voice. We have not heard from Mr. Martin, but hope he will see his way clear to accept. He preached a most excellent sermon on Sabbath at Centre. The salary promised is the same as offered Mr. Allison.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Mrs. C. P. Spencer is announced as editor of the Chapel Hill Ledger. Mrs. Spencer's reputation as a clear and vigorous writer, and her taste in the choice of topics, are so universally acknowledged in North Carolina, that it is safe to predict (which we wish,) abundant success to the journal under her administration.

The progress of Nihilism in Russia threatens not only the subversion of the Russian monarchy, but through its example and influence the stability of other thrones, notably that of Germany. The repressive measures of the Czar are likely to prove ineffectual. Disaffection pervades the army, and in some cases the troops revolt and those sent to subdue insurrection refuse to fire on their comrades. With stronger personal traits than Louis XVI of France, it is yet doubtful if the Czar will be more successful in dealing with the difficulties that surround him. Anarchy, bloodshed and utter ruin are in the near future to all appearances. The ukase of the Emperor has served only to inflame the malcontents and drive them to desperation. They have put forth a counter manifesto thus:

The victims cry out to their executioners "Death we salute thee!" and if you, Alexander Nicolaievitch, refuse to hear our warning voice to put an end to this tyranny, we hereby declare to you that that tyranny will be beaten in the end. Your system in Russia is rotten to the core. Our almost boundless resources are ruined. Your army of functionaries is a gang of cruel and insatiable thieves. Your judges are a shame to justice. Your governors, police masters and generals are so many satraps worthy of Xerxes or Darius. Wherever we turn our eyes we see nought but stupidity mingled with cruelty, wanton waste combined with the most merciless spoliation of the people. For the army alone you reserve your fatherly care. You are getting into dangerously deep waters, Alexander Nicolaievitch. Therefore we warn you, but spare your life."

The way out is certainly not by the arm of power, and yet concessions would only be regarded as weakness. A terrible thing is a nation run mad.

A friend who has returned from a business trip North, sends us some notes of his visit to the churches in New York and Brooklyn.

In Brooklyn he visited Dr. Cuyler's Church and heard the doctor preach. Doctor Cuyler would not probably be called a remarkably fine-looking man, though he has a sharp clear eye. His voice is very clear. The congregation was immense. The membership is said to be the largest in the United States; but the decorations are quite plain; quite different from what one would expect from the size and the wealth of the flock. The music is congregational singing (in a large measure at least) though led by a choir of twenty-two voices. Dr. Cuyler's text was, "There is Death in the Pot," and what a temperance sermon it was. He portrayed many scenes coming under his own observation, and his portraitures were thrilling. On Sabbath afternoon attended a very large meeting at Cooper Union. This was addressed among other speakers, by a reformed drunkard, who depicted most graphically the folly and sins of intemperance as drawn from his own experience.

Dr. Deem's Church (of the Strangers) was visited at night. The subject was "Temperance in all things." In ascending his pulpit Dr. Deems says: "The Lord is in His Holy Temple, let all the people praise Him;" a pause, in which the people engage in silent prayer, then follows and perfect stillness prevails.

The Rev. Alexander Sprunt was married on the 30th ulto. at Hampden Sidney College to Miss Nellie, daughter of Rev. T. E. Peck, D. D. The married couple are now on a visit to relatives and friends of the groom in this city.

THE SEAMAN.

After writing our editorial on the above subject the Southwestern Presbyterian has come to hand and we copy the following, which is very timely and appropriate:

The overture sent up through the Presbytery of New Orleans, was offered to Presbytery by our seamen's chaplain, Rev. A. J. Witherspoon, a man who has this work at heart, and whose efficiency and usefulness in this field of labor, will give weight to his opinions. It occurs to the Presbytery that it would not be amiss to call the attention of the Assembly to a class of men who have many claims to our support and sympathy. We are not prepared to specify any particular plan of operations to be adopted. In fact any special plan would be premature in advance of a thorough consideration of the subject. Such thorough consideration is the first thing. And we incline to think that the Christian community at large has not made itself acquainted with the importance of this subject, or the interest that pertains to it. The sailor is at home upon the sea. On the land he is much like a fish out of water; helpless, a stranger, and apt to be looked on by those who seek his society as a fit subject for insult and robbery. A friendly hand and a word of Christian cheer have been the saving of many such a one on his way to destruction—the only way that seems open to most of them. Patriotism unites with humanity and piety to lift up a voice in behalf of poor Jack. In some instances he is a rough customer, but his hard life makes kindness seem sweeter to him when it is genuine. The church, the prayer meeting, the reading room, the temperance society, the social concert, which goes out of its way to meet and welcome him, is a boon that can only be compared with a draught of water to the traveler parched with thirst. And you will not easily find a work that better illustrates the sweet spirit of Christian charity.

It will be gratifying to our readers to be assured that many of the officers of vessels, and of seamen, are sincere and consistent Christians. When such are in the habit of visiting our port, they usually attend some stated place of worship, and we need not say that we always make them welcome. But even to them the Bethel flag is an official sign of welcome, and they all feel interested in the support of it. There can be no better evidence of the reality of this than the success that has attended our Bethel work in this city. Our efficient city missionary, feeling oppressed with a sense of the needs of this class, undertook in a quiet way, a couple of years ago, to see what humanity and piety could do toward helping them. He succeeded in awakening a sympathetic interest among many friends, and his work has been growing steadily. A Bethel was built and dedicated a year ago, and he is now engaged in enlarging it for the fourth time, to meet the continually increasing wants of this prospering enterprise. His last report says:

The Presbytery of New Orleans, April 10th, 1878, considered the interests of the Seamen's Bethel, and ordained a Seamen's Mission in connection with the Bethel, and for its management appointed Elders J. B. Woods, H. Ginder and W. V. Crouch, together with Rev. A. J. Witherspoon its chaplain, as a Presbyterial Session, with the full power of such a court to receive and have the spiritual oversight of seamen, and boatmen and their families, who may desire to be admitted into the communion of the church. On the 12th of January, 1879, the organization was perfected and the church is now in working order. Some thirteen Christian seamen have connected themselves while in port with the Bethel Church. We not only invite persons to be admitted into the communion of the church on a profession of faith in Christ, but also pious sailors, while in port. By this they hoist the colors and become workers in the Bethel. It also defines their religious positions, and throws the restraints of church membership around them while in New Orleans. Before the Mission Church was organized, I had the pleasure to report some cases of conversion. The imperfect registration books show an attendance of 959 on the Bethel services during the past year and up to the present time.

The Reading Room Department of the Bethel is well filled with reading matter and stationery, and is much admired.

The Temperance branch of the institution has greatly flourished. The officers of the Monday and Wednesday night Associations report over one thousand members.

The following letter indicates the response which these labors have called forth. Mr. Tate, chief officer of the ship Quorn, says:

"I have visited several Bethels in the United States and Canada, but never found one better adopted to the requirements of seamen than this one here. The result is, we have a full house here nearly every evening. I have generally heard of New Orleans as a very bad place for seamen, but I express my own feelings, and also of many more here, when I say that I never before met with such a welcome as I have received from the ladies of this Association, and they have the respect and esteem of seamen when we are thousand of miles away from you."

The British Consul, Hon. A. D. Fonblanque, says:

"As for your Bethel, I only wish it were ten times as big, and then multiplied by five. The management would need no expansion. The humanizing effects of your labors cannot be overestimated."

This work in our city is, in some respects, peculiar. Very few men, we apprehend, are to be found who combine so many of the qualities needed for such a work, as our chaplain. In that particular the work here has something of a personal character. Nevertheless the claims of the sailer upon Christian sympathy—and we may say Christian protection—are the same in every other city. There is no work in which the Church can engage which will command a more liberal sympathy from the whole community. Nothing but good can result from considering the claims of the seaman, or inquiring what we can do to answer those claims.

BETHEL CHURCH.

At the meeting, which occurred in connection with the session of Concord Presbytery and continued till the following Sabbath, five were added to the roll of communicants; all children of the church, all of the Sabbath school—three young men, two young ladies. We thank God and take courage.

PRESBYTERIANISM.

Precious as are the truths conveyed in that form of belief which goes by the name of the great French reformer, John Calvin, and which has found its best expression and exemplification in the creed and among the ranks of Presbyterianism, still those who are most attached to this belief fear that it is losing its hold on men's minds as "a creed outworn," and no longer suitable to an age of advanced thought. Now and then I hear it asked, and now and then I ask myself, is Calvinism declining? Is the Presbyterian Church not holding its own in the land? Since the fathers fell asleep have the doctrines they love to declare lost salt and savor to modern taste? Is God's sovereignty to be upheld no more? Are free grace, election and final perseverance no longer found strong meat and nourishing to the soul of the humble believer?

I believe that there are ebb and flow in every human thought. One generation will see some form of infidelity rampant which the following generation will scarcely hear mentioned. At one time there will be a great movement towards Romanism, at another towards some one of the many shapes of Protestant free thought and expression. Men now living have seen the tide of Unitarianism seem to blot out every vestige of orthodox belief in its old strongholds all over New England, and these men may mark the turn even now setting in, and may live to see Jonathan Edwards again an oracle, and the force of his stern, unyielding Calvanism once more a power among those granite hills and rockbound shores. Calvinism, which is to many in our day like a root in dry ground, where it has once been clearly apprehended and embraced, never lets go. We who find it in every book of the Bible need not be afraid for its perpetuity. Wherever civil and religious freedom are found purest and highest in their development, there, while the world lasts, will be found some form of Calvinistic belief most flourishing. Serious, and noble, and God-fearing men and women will be adorning this doctrine when the trumpet sounds to judgment.

These thoughts have arisen and clamored to be expressed since reading a private letter written a week since by a distinguished lawyer (once a resident of this State and still a North Carolinian in every bone of him) to his mother. Certainly not written for publication but so written that I am constrained to pilfer it that the pleasure a certain passage in it has given me as a Presbyterian may be diffused among other Presbyterians. It is good to see a good thing well said by good authority:

* * * "This reminds me of hearing Gov. Swain talk, thirty years ago and more, of the extent to which Presbyterianism had decayed in North Carolina compared with what it had been in his own recollection. It was in my office, and the Governor walked up and down and repeated these lines,

"By whom shall Jacob's walls arise,
For Jacob's friends are few?"

"So far as 'Jacob' represents what is known as Calvinism there never will be a time when there will not be a large following for it amongst thoughtful people of vigorous powers of intellect. It has, under certain forms, always pervaded philosophy and religion, and always will. It may fluctuate in popularity, and will probably be lowest in frivolous generations. Under one form or another Jacob will, from time to time, arise and carry up his walls, and bring together his friends. He cannot be put down any more than the contrary line of thought." C. P. S.

Any one sending us $2.75 for a New Subscriber shall have the Carolina Farmer and NORTH CAROLIAN PRESBYTERIAN, each twelve months.

From the Presbyterian Board of Publication, we have the three following neat tracts:

No 190, John Potter and Uncle Ben, by Rev. W. Breed, D. D.; 4 pp.

No. 191, What Becomes of the Second Commandment? By Rev. A. F. Dickson; 8 pp.

No. 192, Mose, the Sexton; or, A Talk About Popery. By Rev. T. W. Hooper, D. D.; 34 pp.

The first gives a pleasant history of an humble Christian work for the Master. The other two are excellent for circulation where Papists are striving to effect a lodgement; especially among the colored people.

The Sanitarian. A monthly magazine devoted to the presevation of health, mental and physical culture. A. N. Bell, M. D. editor; T. P. Corbally, M. D., associate editor. May, 1879. New York. $3 a year.

Mason, and other interesting papers.

Hamerton; University work in America, Professor B. L. Gildersleeve; Science and a Future State, Balfour Stewart; The Final Philosophy, Rev. Dr. F. L. Patton; The Critical Estimate of Mosaism, Rev. A. Cave; The Idea of Cause, Prof. F. Bowen; A Plea for Free Trade, A. Arnold; The Supremacy of Conscience and of Revelation, Professor L. W. Atwater. Five distinguished American and four Foreign contributors.

Home Worship. A series of Topical Prayers for use in the family circle. By the late James W. Weir, 1879. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia, Pa.; 16 mo; 318 pp.; 75 cents.

This is a very "helpful" book, not mere "forms of prayer" for the social or family circle, but rather "studies in prayer." They are intended to guide and help the reader by suggesting trains of thought and forms of expression, and thus cultivating both the spirit and power of prayer. Family worship is neglected in many households, and where observed, too often drops into a dead stereotyped dullness. There is no just range of topics or facility of expression or familiar use of appropriate scriptures. Ought this to be so when the love of Jesus and word of God are in Christians' hearts? This series of topical prayers, if fairly used, will tend to lift any family out of old ruts and make home worship both pleasant and profitable to old and young. It is a suggestive and educating book by an earnest worker and ruling elder, who was eminently gifted in prayer, but who has now gone up higher to worship before the throne.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States

Will meet in the Second Presbyterian church, Louisville, Ky., on the third Thursday (15th day) of May, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M. The opening sermon is to be preached by the Rev. T. E. Peck, D. D., the Moderator of the last Assembly.

The undersigned Committee on Commissions, will be in attendance at the Lecture Room of said church, on Wednesday, the 14th of May at 8 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of enrolling the names of Commissioners.

JOSEPH R. WILSON, Stated Clerk.
WM. BROWN, Permanent Clerk.

PRAYER FOR THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

WHEREAS, The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States fully recognizes the efficacy of the prayers of God's people, and the necessity for Divine guidance in its own deliberations; therefore

Resolved, That the General Assembly recommend to all the churches under its care to offer special prayer during the devotions of the Sabbath preceding the meeting of the General Assembly in each year, that God would of His great mercy so give the General Assembly the wisdom that cometh from above, and so direct all its plans, discussions and decisions, as to promote His own glory and advance the kingdom of Jesus in the earth.

NOTICE.

Commissioners who may not be notified of the places to which they are assigned, will go directly to the Second Presbyterian Church, corner of Second and Broadway, where they will be received by the Committee and escorted to their respective places.

In behalf of the Committee,
PATRICK JOYES, Ch'n.

A. DAVIDSON, Sec'y,

N. B.—The Committee hope to announce next week the arrangements made with the various railroads over which commissioners will pass. They also hope to secure favorable terms from railroads, hotels and boarding houses for visitors who desire to attend the sessions of the General Assembly.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

On Wednesday morning 30th inst., lightning struck the steeple of the First Presbyterian church of Wilmington, N. C. The fluid passed down the lightning rod some distance and then breaking it, entered the steeple near the roof of the main building and scattered the bricks but otherwise doing little damage. The lightning has stricken the tall spire before and the question of safety to worshippers who may be at any time of storm, inside, is a serious one.

Rev. J. S. Black has been dismissed by the Presbytery of Chickasaw to join the Presbytery of Wilmington. His post office address is changed from Corinth, Miss., to Burgaw, N. C.

Rev. E. O. Guerrant was installed as pastor of the First church, Louisville, last Sunday afternoon. In the absence of Mr. S. M. Neel (caused by a death in his congregation), the Rev. Dr. Stuart Robinson preached the sermon; the Rev. W. E. Keller delivered the charge to the pastor, and the Rev. Thomas E. Converse the charge to the people. The church was well filled.—Christian Observer.

The prospects of Westminster church organized in Nashville, Tenn., two weeks since, are encouraging. It now has sixty-five members. Six joined by profession and one by letter on 20th inst.

The Southern Church has now full possession of the Hopkinsville church property.

The church at Murfreesboro, Tenn., of which Rev. Dr. J. S. Arbuthnot is pastor has received thirty-eight additions to its membership within the past few weeks, and others are expected to join.

The contributions of the First Presbyterian church of Staunton, Va., during the past year were $4,450.71. The Ladies Society contributed $400 for various sources; the Young Ladies Society to Mission School $15; the Children's Society to Foreign Missions $80; and the Missionary Band of Augusta Female Seminary $180.

Rev. Dr. T. R. Welch writes to the St. Louis Presbyterian that on the 20th, ultimo, it was announced that 22 persons had been admitted to the church—14 by examination, 8 by letter. On that day, 12 adults were baptized, 1 adult and 8 children having been baptized the previous day. The services were solemn and delightful. The Presbytery of Arkansas was holding its session in the church at the time.

Orange Presbytery granted Rev. H. B. Pratt a letter of dismission to Harmony Presbytery.

Rev. J. Woodbridge who has very recently entered upon his labors as stated supply of Helena church at Amite City, La., writes to the Southwestern Presbyterian: Last Sabbath, at Amite City, was one of unusual interest. Five were received to the communion by profession; two of them the youngest children of the only surviving ruling elder, Mr. J. N. Allsworth, who, with his entire family, sat together at the table of the Lord. One entire family was received into the church—the father and mother and four infant children standing together—and were baptized in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost. One lady made a public profession of faith and presented her infant child for baptism. In addition two members were received by letter.

During the past year Mr. S. Connor, an efficient officer, has been ordained as deacon. The church edifice is commodious and usually well filled at the regular Sabbath services. With an excellent membership and revived interest, with the blessing of God, this church seems to be entering upon a career of renewed activity and prosperity.

Rev. J. H. Shuford was installed last Sunday as pastor of Grace Reformed church in this county. Rev. J. Ingold of Hickory preached the sermon and, Rev. J. A. Foil of Newton conducted the installation ceremonies.—Hickory Press.

The Canal Street Presbyterian Church of New Orleans has unanimously called Rev. A. N. Wyckoff, of the South Classis of Long Island, to the pastorate made vacant by the death of Rev. M. W. Trawick.

The pastor elect has been supplying the Church for two months past.

Rev. C. W. Hollis, writes to the Central Presbyterian from Strasburg, Va., April 23d, 1879:

"We closed a fortnight ago a delightful meeting of two weeks' duration. God's people were greatly revived, and grace did abound unto those "without." As an evidence of the latter, eleven (all of mature age, several heads of families and advanced in years) were received on examination, into membership, at our last communion a week ago. We have strong hopes of three or four others who are still inquiring the way.

The post office address of Rev. C. W. Hollis is changed from Strasburg, Va., to Front Royal, Va.

GENERAL.

The Front Street Methodist church of Wilmington, N. C., has organized an auxiliary to the Woman's Missionary Society, also a Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Association for the poor of the church and for holding prayer-meetings in destitute places in the city.

A Woman's Missionary Society has been organized by the Methodist church at Hickory, N. C.

During next Commencement at Wake Forest College, at some suitable time, a memorial service will be held in honor of the Rev. W. M. Wingate, D. D., late President of that Institution, and an address commemorative of the deceased will be delivered by Rev. J. D. Huffham, D. D.

Rev. F. Keugle late pastor of the Trinity German Evangelical Lutheran church of Cumberland, Md., will take charge of old Koiner and Bethany churches in Augusta county, Va.

A Protestant Episcopal paper to be called the Church Messenger is to be established in Winston, N. C., in May.

The Congregation Churches of this State are now holding their first State Conference in this city, at the church here, on South st. There are five churches of this denomination in North Carolina, of which four are colored. They are under the auspices of the American Missionary Association. Quite a number of schools have been conducted in the State by this denomination. Dr. Roy is present at the Conference, and will deliver addresses and sermons. He is field superintendent of this Church for the Southern States.—Raleigh News, May 4th.

Rev. S. P. Hughes was installed pastor of the Lutheran church in Newberry, S. C., on last Sabbath.

The Reformed Episcopal church at Louisville, Ky., has divided. It had suffered from pecuniary embarrassment, and the death of Mr. Powers, the Philadelphia chemist, and lay patrons of the Reformed movement.

NORTHERN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Synod of the English Presbyterian Church have unanimously elected Rev. Dr. F. L. Patton, now professor in Chicago Seminary, to the chair of Apologetics and Pastoral Theology in the Theological College of London. The chair had been offered Prof. Christlieb of Germany, who was disposed to accept but his friends interfered and prevented.

The church at Kinsley, Kansas, was destroyed by fire on Sabbath, April 20th, and everything belonging to Sabbath school and church was lost.

The First Presbyterian church, Baltimore, reports contributions last year of $47,739, and a roll of Sabbath school scholars (including Faith chapel) of 1,335, with 84 teachers.

BAPTIST.

Rhode Island, founded by Baptists, has 60 Baptist churches, with 10,906 members. The results of last winter's work in the cities are shown by the addition of 1,017 by baptism, which is the largest number that ever was reported in the history of the State.

There are in Pennsylvania 23 Baptist associations, 549 churches, and 63,589 members, showing a net loss in the membership of 287.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society has just closed its books for the year. The receipts for the general purposes of the society—that is for its missionary and freedmen work—have been $128,808 42 against $135,778 09 for the previous year, showing a falling off of $6,969 67. The debt, which was $45,000 at the beginning of the year, has been reduced to $31,000, and the financial condition of the society is much better in every respect.

METHODIST.

The Rev. Charles Bishop of Evanston, Ill., and Rev. S. M. Vail of Ohio University, Athens, have been appointed by Bishop Peck missionaries to Japan.

Mrs. Morehouse of Liverpool, N. Y., a few years ago arranged to make a donation of $50,000 to the Syracuse University. Soon after making the subscription she paid $5,000 of the amount to the institution, the interest of which was to aid young men preparing for the ministry. Within a few days Mrs. Morehouse has transferred to the University, bonds, mortgages and other securities to the amount of $25,000. The interest on this latter sum is to be paid to the giver during her lifetime, and at her decease will be applied to the endowment.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL

The late David Le Favour of Pawtucket, R. I., bequeathed $2,500 in money and land valued at $10,000 to St. Paul's Episcopal church in that place.

The Rev. A. J. Faust, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of Washington, has entered the Roman Catholic Church, and asked to be deposed from the ministry. He has been the author of several religious works.

The "Easter offerings" made in Grace Protestant Episcopal church in New York city lifted a debt of $37,000, which had rested on it for many years.

The Episcopal Church at East Saginaw maintains a "Guild House" in a central portion of the city, where there is a free and open reading room, kept warm, lighted and attractive, and where the latest magazines and a few of the best newspapers of the day are to be found. A sewing school for poor girls is maintained here by the young ladies of the parish, and it is the headquarters for the benevolent and social operations of the church.

The school is located in a healthy portion of the State, and the very best of educational advantages are offered. It is under Presbyterian control, but teachers of other denominations are employed, and there is nothing sectarian in its management.

"Well-a-day! If that is so, I will go this minute and get some for my poor George. I know hops are good."

In Rutherford county, March 10th, 1879, Miss MAGGIE M., daughter of J. Harvey and Emma Forney, aged 21 years.

A severe cold contracted early in the winter developed a stubborn case of pneumonia which ended the earthly existence of this attractive, interesting and amiable young lady. For three years she had been a consistent and faithful member of Little Brittain church, and during her long painful sickness she manifested unusual patience and Christian submission. She knew her recovery was doubtful and often expressed a desire to live; at the same time a willingness to die, feeling assured that for her to live was Christ and to die was gain.

Also in Rutherford county, April 15th. J. HARVEY FORNEY, aged 63 years.

Thus with little more than a month intervening the daughter and father are called away and a family hitherto unbroken are now sorely bereaved. For 19 years Mr. Forney had been a member of Little Brittain church; 18 years a Ruling Elder. For 20 months he had been in declining health; though seldom confined to his bed, he knew he could not live long and often spoke of his death as near; expecting it any moment. He was feeling as well as usual the day of his death; late in the afternoon he was seized with violent hemorrhage and died in a few minutes Though the summons came suddenly, producing a terrible shock on family and friends, it brought no terror to him. May He who robbed death of its sting comfort the bereaved family and lead each member of it to love and trust Him.

PASTOR.

At the residence of her mother, near Shoe Heel, on the 20th of January, Miss CARRIE McLEAN.

After a lingering illness she gently passed away in the possession of a strong faith and the assured hope of a blessed immortality. "Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his." May the consolations of the Gospel be rich and abundant to the aged mother who still survives. A FRIEND.

At her home, near Oaks, N. C., April 25th, Mrs. LIZZIE PICKARD, wife of Mr. James Pickard.

Since her early girlhood she has been a consistent member of the Methodist church. By her cheerful performance of duty, her sweet disposition and unobtrusive piety, she endeared herself to all her friends She bore her sufferings with resignation, and was ready and willing to obey the Master's call. May God comfort those whom her death has left desolate indeed.

PRO MEMORIA.

At a meeting of the Bethlehem church and congregation held April 20th, 1879, the following paper was read and adopted, as expressive of their feelings and sentiments in relation to the death of Rev. J. M. ANDERSON, late pastor of the church.

Resolved, 1. That we acknowledge the providence of the great Head of the Church in the death of our beloved pastor on the 30th of March, as having special reference to ourselves; teaching us that our highest privileges on earth are not lasting, and that God in his wisdom and love may and does sunder the strongest and warmest affections of his people. To his ways of mercy we desire humbly to bow.

2. That we are called to humble ourselves in grief in being separated from a pastor whom we loved, and whose Christian solicitude for our spiritual good was evident in his whole walk and conversation among us, whilst even beyond his strength by entreaty, warning and council he ceased not to warn us every one with tears. So that whilst we have cause of gratitude for the ministrations of such a leader and guide, we can but mourn, that we no longer enjoy the saving influence of his teaching and life. To us he was a pastor, whose instructions we desire to remember, and the memory of whose life among us. we hope long to cherish. An Israelite full of Christian love and kind feeling, and in whom there was no guile.

3. That a copy of the above resolutions be sent to the family of our deceased pastor and to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN with a request that it be published.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS FOR SUPPRESSION OF THE MENSES.

Astonishing Relief Given by The Buffalo Lithia Waters. After a Failure of all other Remedies, and when the Life of the Patient had been Despaired of.

"About the middle of May, 1878, I was called professionally to Mrs. R. P. W. I found her complaining of excruciating pain in the head, back, and limbs, attended with nausea and vomiting. Her kidneys were torpid, and the urine—which had to be drawn by means of the catheter—scanty and charged with blood. She had passed EIGHT MONTHS WITHOUT EXPERIENCING THE MENSTRUAL FLOW. She informed me that several times in a period of ten years the failure of the monthly function for several consecutive months had been followed by a like train of symptoms, and that upon these occasions she was relieved by hemorrhages from the lungs or stomach. From the symptoms and history of the case it was evident that the kidneys had attempted to relieve the plethora incident to her condition, and that in the attempt they had seriously disturbed their own peculiar function. During an extreme illness of many weeks every remedy that seemed at all indicated in the case was faithfully tested; but without result, save an occasional slight alleviation of the distressing symptoms already described. The kidneys remained inactive; the average daily amount of fluid drawn from the bladder did not exceed two ounces, and more than half that quantity was blood. On one occasion four days passed without any secretion at all from the kidneys. It became evident that the patient must die unless some remedy could be found of much greater efficacy than any that had been tried in the case.

Looking outside of materia medica I could think of nothing that promised so much as BUFFALO LITHIA WATER, Spring No. 2, a supply of which was ordered with but a faint hope of keeping her alive until its arrival by making the skin and bowels perform the eliminating functions of the kidneys. So soon as the water was received the patient was put upon it, to the exclusion of all other treatment. The result was most astonishing. The first day's use of the water showed marked improvement in the action of the kidneys. The urine daily increased in quantity, while the proportion of blood in it rapidly diminished. The nausea, vomiting, and pain in the head and limbs, which had so obstinately resisted all treatment, soon disappeared. At the end of a week the catheter was dispensed with and the urine was voided naturally, with but a trace of blood, and in twenty days from the day she commenced the use of the water the menstrual flow appeared, and in a short time afterwards she was restored to perfect health, which remained undisturbed until the month of November, when after failing to have a "change," she again experienced the painful symptoms heretofore described. The use of the Lithia Water, however, for a short while, again afforded perfect relief, and she has continued well to the present time."

It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape.)

It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.

It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.

It can be attached to any boiler.

TEN YEARS OF FEARFUL AGONISING SUFFERING CURED BY THE USE OF Swaims Panacea SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA

40 pieces of bones as Relics

Mrs. Dugan, No. 900 Dauphin St., Philadelphia, one of the most respectable ladies of that city, is not only willing, but desirous, to state for the information of any of her sex that they may know what remedy availed her after agonizing suffering for ten long years (in which the disease, beginning one month after marriage, originating from no fault of hers, ravaged her entire system, and gradually spreading until she had 30 Ulcers at one time on one arm, and 20 on the other; having lost all the fingers on one hand, they rotting off; one parent dying broken hearted witnessing her suffering; she having had some sixteen physicians of Philadelphia, and the disease defying their skill,) that she found in SWAIM'S PANACEA the remedy she needed. In a few months after beginning on it she gained over 55 lbs. in weight, her ulcers all healed, and she has now some 40 pieces of bones as relics. She is in splendid health and returns grateful thanks to almighty God that she was directed to the use of this remedy! Not Far.

Not far, not far from the kingdom.
Yet in the shadow of sin;
How many are coming and going,
How few are entering in!

Not far from the golden gate-way,
Where voices whisper and wait:
Fearing to enter in boldly,
So lingering still at the gate!

Catching the strain of the music
Floating so sweetly along,
Knowing the song they are singing,
Yet joining not in the song.

Seeing the warmth and the beauty,
The infinite love and the light;
Yet weary, and lonely, and waiting,
Out in the desolate night!

Out in the dark and the danger,
Out in the night and the cold;
Though he is longing to lead them
Tenderly into the fold.

Not far, not far from the kingdom,
'Tis only a little space;
But it may be at last, and forever,
Out of the resting place.

Grandmother's Story.

"Jenny, my dear, will you come and hold this yarn for me? It is a tedious task, little one but I will not keep you long."

"Grandmamma, will you tell me a story while you wind? It will make the time fly faster. Please tell me what you did when you were a little girl."

"Ah, Jennie, that would take me a very long time, for I led a busy life as a child; but I will tell you of one thing that happened to me that I think you would like to hear.

"My father lived on the side of a mountain in the State of Vermont, and we children grew up amidst the wild and beautiful scenery, and learned very soon to take care of ourselves and help mother in her various duties.

"I had a sister named Polly, who was two years younger than I, and who was always ready to follow me in whatever course I might pursue.

"One bright Saturday afternoon in October, mother gave us permission to go a short distance into the woods, charging us to keep within sight of the house. Happy little girls were we for there were the beautiful fallen leaves to weave into crowns, the lively little squirrels to watch, the satiny chesnuts to gather, and ever so many wildwood treasures to seek, only known to country children. Wild with delight and freedom we wandered on and on through the woods, forgetting our mother's injunction. Neglecting to keep in the path. we were soon lost in the forest, and the more we tried to get back to the path the more confused we were. Frightened and weary, we sat down at last and cried.

"The sun no longer flickered through the trees, the squirrels were all at home in their nests, and we two poor little girls were all alone. All the stories that we had heard about wolves and bears came to our minds, and we grew more and more frightened. Then we thought of what our mother had told us, that when we were in trouble or danger we must seek the protection of God. So we knelt down and prayed with all our hearts. Then we grew calm, for we felt sure that He would watch over us during the night. Like the two babes in the woods, we laid our heads on the fallen leaves, and slept until dawn.

"Poor Polly awoke very hungry, and cried for mamma. I tried to cheer her by playing we were little squirrels and lived on nuts. After awhile we started again on our lonely search for home. But no home could we find, and the day wore on as before, and another night found us still in the woods. The wind arose, and this made us more timid, for every sound seemed to us the howling of wolves.

"'Oh, Jenny,' cried poor little Polly, 'the wolves will eat us up, and we shall never get to our home again!'

"Again we knelt down and prayed, and, after making our supper of winter-green berries, we hid ourselves behind a fallen tree, and, with arms around each other's necks, we sobbed ourselves to sleep.

"In the morning we were aroused by a shout of joy. Before us stood neighbor Jackson. Springing up, we flew into his open arms, and cried for joy.

"'Well, well, little ones,' he said, 'you've given us a fine tramp since Saturday. I am thankful that I had the pluck not to give up the search on this back lot. Come on, girls, the folks at home will be glad to see you.'

"Carrying first one and then the other, he soon brought us into the open country, where we could see and be seen. His shouts of joy were answered by the firing of guns, and Polly declared that it must be Fourth of July again. The firing was to make known to the men who were still searching for us, that we had been found.

"From all directions the villagers flocked to the house to see if we were alive and well, and many a thanksgiving was offered for our safe return. If it had not been for the terrible fright we had had we might have been spoiled by the attention and affection lavished upon us. Our dear, wise mother often said to us at night:

"'Thank God, my children, that he gave his angels watch over you, and heard our prayers.'

"You may be sure that we were careful ever afterwards to heed our mother's warnings, and we learned a lesson then that we never forgot."
—Banner.

"If I Should Die Before I Wake"

"Mother, every night when I go to bed I say 'Now I lay me;' and do you know, mamma, though saying it so often, I never thought what it meant until Fanny Gray died? I asked nurse if Fanny died before she waked, and she said 'Yes.' She went to bed well, and had a spasm in the night, and died before she knew anything at all. "Now, mother," continued Rena, "I want you to tell me about 'Now I lay me,' so that when I say it I may think what it means."

"Well, Rena," said her mother, "I shall be glad to tell you. What does it mean when you say, 'Now I lay me down to sleep?'"

O! that means, mother, that I am just going to lie down in my bed to go to sleep until morning."

"Well, then, as you lie down to sleep what prayer do you offer to God?"

"I pray the Lord my soul to 'keep. I want the Lord to take care of my soul while I am asleep, and take care of me all over, mother, if I should die before I wake, would the Lord be taking care of me then? Now, it seems to me when Fanny died that God did not take care of her that night, and so she died."

"O no, Rena! God did take care of her. The little verse says, 'If I should die before I wake, I pray the Lord my soul to take;' so you see God took little Fannie's soul to himself; and when she awoke she was in the arms of the blessed Jesus. Now, Rena, when you say, 'Now I lay me,' I want you to think in this way; 'Now I am going to bed and to sleep, and I want the Lord to take care of me. If I am not a good child and do not pray to God, ought I to ask him or expect him to take care of me? Let me lie down feeling that I am in the Lord's care, and if I should die before I wake, that still I am the Lord's child; and I pray that he may take my soul to dwell with him.

"O, mother! I will try and remember. Why, I used to say it slow, and clasp my hands, and shut my eyes, and yet I did not think about it. Thank you, mother dear. Please hear me to-night when I go to say my prayers."

Ah, little children, are there not a great many, who, like Rena, say their prayers without thinking what they mean—mere words, with no meaning in them? God cannot listen to such prayers. They are not for Him "unto whom all hearts are open, all desires are known, and from whom no secrets are hid."

Think of what I have written about little Rena when you say, "Now I lay me," to-night; and pray that God will watch over you, waking and sleeping.—Early Dew.

"But the Marks are There.

It is an old story, but it is a good one for all that, and a story that will do for grown up people as well as children. The father told the son that whenever he did anything wrong, or spoke a wrong word, he should drive a nail into the door of the wood shed. The door began to fill up pretty fast. The boy bid not like the appearance of that nail-studded door, and told his father so.

"Well," said his father, "now, every time you are obedient or speak a kind word, I'll draw one of the nails out."

So it went on for some time, till at last the son with a glad heart called his father to draw the last nail. Out it came.

"Oh, I am so glad, father!" said the boy, and then, the pitted-looking door catching his eye, he added a little sadly, "but the marks are there."

Yes, children; yes, friends. We may repent of all our evil deeds and be forgiven; but the marks of those sins lingers on our characters and lives. We ought to try to escape not only the wounds, but the scars that are left after the wounds have healed. The only way to do this is to avoid the wounds.

For example, my boy, don't read any of those flashy, juvenile papers, that are so abundant "just to see what is in them" You may give them up after a while, and take to more worthy and substantial literature; but such papers will leave the "marks" of their low character upon you. Take the opinion of your father or teacher, and leave all these things alone.

Don't indulge in any evil habit, thinking that you can give it up whenever you wish, or when you may find it injurious. You may be able to give it up—though the power of an evil habit is something evil to contemplate—but its "marks" will be left. The surest way to have a clean life is to keep it clean.

Let us all take the scarred door as a warning.

Jeffrey's Criticisms.

Jeffrey's collected articles include about eighty out of two hundred reviews, nearly all contributed to the Edinburgh within its first period of twenty-five years. They fill four volumes, and are distributed under the seven heads—general literature, history, poetry, metaphysics, fiction, politics, and miscellaneous. Certainly there is versatility enough implied in such a list, and we may be sure that he has ample opportunity for displaying whatever may be in him. It is, however, easy to dismiss some of these divisions. Jeffrey knew history as an English gentleman of average cultivation knew it; that is to say, not enough to justify him in writing about it. He knew as much of metaphysics as a clever lad was likely to pick up at Edinburgh during the reign of Dugald Stewart; his essays in that kind, though they show some aptitude and abundant confidence, do not now deserve serious attention. His chief speculative performance was an essay upon beauty contributed to the Encyclopædia Britannica, of which his biographer says quaintly that it is "as sound as the subject admits of." It is crude and meagre in substance. The principal conclusion is the rather unsatisfactory one for a professional critic that there are no particular rules about beauty, and that one taste is about as good as another. Nobody could be less inclined to apply this over-liberal theory to questions of literary taste. There, he evidently holds, there is most decidedly a right and wrong, and everybody is very plainly in the wrong who differs from himself. Jeffrey's chief fame—or, should we say, notoriety?—was gained (and his merit should be tested by his success) in this department. The greatest triumph that a literary critic can win is his early recognition of genius not yet appreciated by his contemporaries. The next test of his merit is his capacity for pronouncing sound judgment upon controversies which are fully before the public; and, finally, no inconsiderable merit must be allowed to any critic who has a vigorous taste of his own—not hopelessly eccentric or silly—and expresses it with true literary force. If not a judge, he may in that case be a useful advocate. What can we say for Jeffrey upon this understanding? Did he ever encourage a rising genius? The sole approach to such a success is an appreciative notice of Keats, which would be the more satisfactory if poor Keats had not been previously assailed by the opposition journal. The other judgments are for the most part pronounced upon men already celebrated; and the single phrase which has survived is the celebrated "This will never do," directed against Wordsworth's "Excursion." Every critic is liable to blunder; but Jeffrey's blundering is amazingly systematic and comprehensive.

In the last of his poetical critiques (October, 1829) he sums up his critical experience. He doubts whether Mrs Hemans whom he is reviewing at the time, will be immortal. "The tuneful quartos of Southey," he says, "are already little better than lumber; and the rich melodies of Keats and Shelley, and the fantastical emphasis of Wordsworth, and the plebeian pathos of Crabbe, are melting fast from the field of vision. The novels of Scott have put out his poetry. Even the splendid strains of Moore are fading into distance and dimness, except where they have been married to immortal music; and the blazing star of Byron himself is receding from its place of pride." Who survive this general decay? Not Coleridge, who is not even mentioned; nor is Mrs. Hemans secure. The two who show least marks of decay are—of all people in the world—Rogers and Campbell! It is only to be added that this summary was republished in 1843, by which time the true proportions of the great reputations of the period were becoming more obvious to an ordinary observer. It seems almost incredible now that any sane critic should pick out Rogers and Campbell as the sole enduring relics from the age of Wordsworth, Shelley, Keats, Coleridge and Byron. Doubtless a critic should rather draw the moral of his own fallibility than of his superiority to Jeffrey. Criticism is a still more perishing commodity than poetry.—Scottish American Journal.

Look at Your Tongue.

A man can never be either well or happy if his stomach is out of order; and dyspepsia, like hysteria, imitates the symptoms of innumerable disorders. But how, the reader may ask, can I tell whether the illness from which I am suffering be real or imaginary? At any rate, I should answer, attend to your stomach first, and, pray, just take a glance at your tongue. If ever I were so far left to myself as to meditate some rash act, I should, before going into the matter, have a look at my tongue; if it were not perfectly clean and moist, I should not consider myself perfectly healthy, nor perfectly sane, and would postpone my proceedings in the hope that my worldly prospects would get brighter. What does a medical man discover from looking at the tongue? Many things. The tongue sympathises with every trifling ailment of body or mind, and more especially with the state of the stomach. That thin, whitish layer all over the surface most likely indicates indigestion. A patchy tongue shows that the stomach is very much out of order indeed. A yellow tongue points to biliousness. A creamy, shivering, thick, indented tongue tells of previous excesses; and I do not like my friends to wear such tongues, for I sincerely believe that real comfort cannot be secured in this world by any one who does not keep his feet warm, head cool, and his tongue clean.—The Family Doctor.

The Handsome Man.

It is quite unessential that a man should be handsome. Let him pray the gods, in the first place, to make him a gentleman—a gentleman at home as well as abroad. Let him stipulate for a fine figure and a courtly manner, and leave it to their discretion after that to shape his eyes, nose and mouth, provided they don't make them hideous. Save us from your plaid-painted, bordered-vested, big-cravated, moustached, cologne-sprinkled, bejeweled, brainless exquisite! Give us a well-informed, plainly-dressed, self-possessed intelligent masculine, perfectly at home upon all subjects, foreign and domestic; neither cringing to the great nor oppressing the little; who puts one hand on his sword and the other on his heart when a woman's name is mentioned; who raises no blush on the cheek of humble innocence, who holds in contempt no living thing that God has made, who can pity the weak and erring without a pharisaical reviling, who can argue without loss of temper and dignity, who scorns a bribe or an oath, who has an arm for trembling age, a smile for prattling infancy, and a strong, brave heart for the oppressed and defenceless. But a "pretty man, a pink and white Sir Brainless!" the united work of tailor, hatter, shoemaker and perfumer! Heaven save the mark! Women know better.

A Large Rose Bush.

Mr. I. B. Alexander has in his yard, the largest and prettiest rose bush we have ever seen It now presents the appearance of an immense boquet, being so covered with flowers that the green leaves are hardly visible. It is about twenty five feet high, and fifteen to twenty feet across. It is estimated that there is an average of at least nine hundred flowers and flower buds in each branch, and there are between four and five hundred branches on the tree, giving the enormous amount of over three hundred and sixty thousand flowers on the tree. It is of the Lady Banks variety.—Camden Journal.

The Mule as a Deadly Weapon.

The "yellow mule," which is found in an unadulterated quality only in the South, is possessed of rare business qualifications. He can out-bite, out-buck, out-kick and out-heh-whehawee any mule of his size and weight in the world. Just, bridle him up, put a raw recruit on his back, give him room to exercise according to his disposition and he will go through more complicated maneuvers in less time, and reach up his back oftener and squeal louder, and give that recruit more vigorous cavalry service in one hour than any ten mules north, east or west of Dixie could do if they were in competition for a gold medal or diploma.

As a weapon of offence or defence he is unapproachable. He is not liable to get out of order, is rapid in conception, lightning in execution, loading and firing at one operation. One healthy mule equals seven mountain howitzers and a battery of Gatling guns. Just back him up towards the enemy, get the broncho streak properly in line by sighting along the backbone, then depress his ears according to the elevation, clear the track, and let No. 3 of the firing squad touch him off with a straw. The result is electrical, and ends in the complete annihilation of everything within range. A battery of Southern mules, properly trained, might prove better than a whole corps of field artillery, being more easily limbered up—the Southern mule is always limbered up—but, strange to say, mule artillery is most dangerous when the column is in full retreat.

In addition to all this, the Southern mule is a most skilful forager, and can, if necessities require it, live for a century on barrel hoops and scraps of sole leather. As economy is a very important element of successful warfare, this characteristic must weigh heavily in the mule's favor. The proposition to introduce this beast into South Africa reflects much credit upon the Disraeli administration, and will, we hope, be carried out.—Philadelphia Trade Journal.

Extracts of Minutes of the 218th Session of Orange Presbytery, Held at Eno Church, April 25th, 1879.

[OFFICIAL.]

Rev. John W. Primrose, the Moderator, preached the opening sermon from 1st Cor. ...13th. There were present, during the ...meeting, forty-nine members, twenty-three ministers and twenty-six ruling elders.

Rev. A. Currie was chosen Moderator, and Rev. S. M. Smith, with rnling elder J. A. Womack, were chosen temporary clerks.

CALLS, DISMISSIONS, &C.

Rev. H. B. Pratt was dismissed, at his own request, to the Presbytery of Harmony.

Rev. D. C. Rankin was received from the Presbytery of Savannah. A call for the pastoral services of Mr. Rankin for half his time, from the Tarboro Church, was placed in his hands.

A call from Reidsville Church for the services of licenciate D. I. Craig for one-half his time, was placed in his hands and was accepted.

A call for the pastoral services of Rev. Jno. W. Primrose for one-fourth of his time from Littleton Church, was placed in his hands and accepted.

Nutbush Church obtained leave to employ Rev. E. Hines as stated supply for half his time on a salary of $250 per annum.

The pastoral relation between Rev. E. Hines and Shiloh Church was dissolved at his own request, the Church concurring. Mr. Hines obtained permission to labor at discretion for one-half his time, and Rev. Dr. Smith was appointed to declare the Shiloh Church vacant.

The application of Bethesda Church for permission to employ Mr. Craig as stated supply, was referred to the Agent of Sustentation with authority to suspend standing rule 10 in this case should he find it necessary.

Mt. Airy Church obtained permission to be supplied by a minister of one of the Virginia Presbyteries until some more satisfactory arrangements can be effected.

CHURCHES ORGANIZED.

The committee appointed for the purpose, at the last meeting, reported churches organized at Rocky Mount, Oak Forest, and Newsome. The latter is a colored organization, and was received under the care of the Presbytery according to the plan of the General Assembly in such cases. A committee was appointed to organize a church at Company Shops if the way be open.

INSTALLATIONS.

Rev. J. L. Currie was installed pastor of Eno Church on Saturday of the meeting of Presbytery.

Rev. F. H. Johnston presided, preached the sermon and charged the pastor. Rev. E. Hines delivered the charge to the people.

Rev. Messrs. Jordan and Watkins, with Rev. D. C. Rankin as alternate to either, were appointed to install Mr. Primrose pastor of Littleton Church on the 4th Sabbath in May, Rev. D. E. Jordan to preside and charge the pastor; Rev. John S. Watkins to preach the sermon and charge the people.

Presbytery resolved to hold an adjournment meeting at Reidsville on Friday before the 4th Sabbath in June with the view of examining, ordaining Mr. Craig and installing him pastor of Reidsville Church. Rev. A. Currie to preside and charge the pastor. Rev. C. Phifer to preach the sermon. Rev. J. C. Alexander, with Rev. H. T. Darnall as alternate, to charge the people. Rom. v: 1 was assigned Mr. Craig as the text of the trial sermon.

Rev. D. C. Rankin obtained permission to retain the call from Tarboro Church until meeting at Reidsville.

REVISED BOOK.

The Presbytery adopted the book of Church Order sent down by the last Assembly by the following vote:

Ayes—Rev. Messrs. A. Currie, Fancette, J. M. Atkinson, Dalton, J. H. Smith, Johnson, Jordan, Alexander, Morrow, Tidball, Primrose, Darnall, Miller, J. L. Currie, S. M. Smith, Law, Watkins, Mebane and Rankin. Ruling Elders—Smith, Hughes, Denny, Brown, Wharton, Stamps, Ford, Watkins, Womack, Dounel, Carter, Davis, Bason, Allen, J. J. White, B. F. White, Morrow and McPheeters—37.

Noes—Rev. Messrs. Hines, Vass, Fitzgerald and Wiley. Elders—Gilmer, L. Lynch, T. M. Lynch—7.

Excused—Elders Bullock, Woods, Morton and Wilson—4.

REPORTS TO GENERAL ASSEMBLY—NARRATIVE.

The Presbytery of Orange would respectfully report to the General Assembly that during the past year the attendance on the means of grace has been generally good; not only upon the public services of the sanctuary, but on the meetings for prayer and praise and religious instruction held in the week. In regard to the matter of Sabbath observance—while the day is reverenced in families of our Church, it is mournfully desecrated in the land at large. Family worship, as far as can be ascertained, is generally observed, but there are many households professedly Christian, in which it is rarely performed or wholly neglected. The monthly concert of prayer for foreign missions is observed in many, if not in most of our town and village churches, and we are convinced that its due observance would tend to kindle and keep alive a proper interest in this grand and vital enterprise. We are glad to believe that the Bible and catechism are beginning to resume that place in our Sabbath school instruction to which their supreme importance in any well-constructed scheme of Christian education, entitles them.

We are likewise pleased to report a growing interest in the evangelization of the colored race; but we believe that from the nature of the case and the relation of the races, most that we can do for their religious instruction must be indirect rather than direct, mediate rather than immediate, through the agency of men of their own race and color, trained in the doctrines and methods which we ourselves approve and adopt.

Whilst our contributions to religious objects have been far below what we think the claims and needs of the Church demand, yet we are cheered by the conviction that in spite of the unexampled stringency of the times, there has been an increasing appreciation of those claims and needs and an increasing disposition to meet them. On the whole, while we cannot report anything like a marked and wide-spread revival of religion within our bounds, the churches have not been without encouraging tokens of the Saviour's presence in the precious and life-giving visitations of his grace

SYSTEMATIC BENEVOLENCE—SUMMARY.

Twenty-seven churches contributed to all six objects of benevolence ordered by the Assembly.

Of our fifty-eight churches forty-two gave to Sustentation $570, forty-seven gave to Evangelistic $832, thirty-six gave to Invalid Fund $236, forty gave Foreign Missions $951, thirty-eight gave for Education $491, thirty-five gave for Publication $211; total, $3,291.

SABBATH SCHOOLS—SUMMARY.

Fifty-two of fifty-eight churches send up reports.

Fifteen have no schools by reason of scattered membership and lack of children. Thirty-seven schools report an aggregate of 329 teachers and 2,164 scholars. About one-third of the schools use the International Questions. One-half take the Children's Friend. The catechisms are taught in two-thirds of the schools, and the Confession of Faith and Form of Government in one-fourth of them.

Rev. J. C. Alexander was re-elected agent of Sustentation.

Rev. Messrs. Primrose and Law were re-appointed evangelists in their former fields; except that Mr. Primrose will give only a bout one-fourth of his time to evangelistic work proper. The Presbytery engaged to give $500 ($200 to Mr. P. and $300 to Mr. Law) for the ensuing year.

DEATH OF REV. JOHN M. ANDERSON.

The committee appointed for the purpose, brought in the following minute, which was adopted:

1st. That Presbytery record with sorrow the death of Rev. John M. Anderson on March 30th.

We are again reminded of the shortness of life and the importance of working while it is day, for what we do we must do quickly.

2d. In the death of our beloved brother we feel that a breach has been made in our ranks on earth, but record with thankfulness our sense of the mercy of God our Saviour in giving us, as in this case, another evidence of the power of his grace to sustain even in death.

3d. That the Stated Clerk be instructed to write a letter in the name of the Presbytery conveying the assurance of our sympathy in this affliction of the family of the deceased; and accompanied by a copy of the above minute.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, 1. That the Committee on Colportage be instructed to take steps as soon as they deem it prudent and practicable to make arrangements for entering on the work of colportage.

2. That it be recommended to our ministers and churches and Sabbath school officers to give the preference in the selection of Sabbath school literature to the publications of our committee.

Resolved, That Presbytery regards with grief and disappointment the fact that many of our churches have failed to meet promptly the payment of their pastors' salary; and that our agent of Sustentation be directed to correspond with the sessions of our churches and ascertain the causes of such failures, and call their attention to the standing rules of Presbytery sec. 2, par. 5 and 9.

Resolved, That a committee consisting of Rev. Jas. C. Alexander, Rev. F. H. Johnston, and Col J. I. Scales, be appointed to prepare a plan to reduce the amount of routine work to be done by the Presbytery, and report to Presbytery at its next stated meeting.

Rev. C. H. Wiley, having made statement in regard to a bequest made to the Presbytery by the last will and testamen of Rev. L. K. Riley, it was Resolved, That Col. Jas. S. Amis be requested to act as agent of the Presbytery, and be hereby authorized to do all things necessary to secure this bequest to the Presbytery, and that the matter be called to the attention of the trustees of the Presbytery.

Historical sketches of Madison and High Point Churches were read by Rev. Messrs. Miller and Dalton.

COMMISSIONERS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Rev. Jas. C. Alexander and Rev. F. H. Johnston, ministers; and Messrs. Thomas Sparrow and A. M. McPheeters, ruling elders, were chosen as commissioners to the General Assembly. Alternates—in order of their names—are: Rev. Messrs. J. H. Fitzgerald and T. U. Faucette, and ruling elders C. G. Yates and T. M. Holt.

Alamance Church was chosen as the place, and Thursday, the 16th of October, 1879, at 1 o'clock P. M., as the time of the next stated meeting of the Presbytery.

The Presbytery then adjourned to meet at Cross Roads Church on Tuesday, the 20th of May, at 1 o'clock P. M. Closed with singing, prayer and the Apostolic Benediction.

Stated Clerk.

THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM.

So much has been written on the subject of woman's influence, that I hope our subject will not seem trite or hackneyed. Our wish now is to impress the minds of our girls with a sense of their own importance in life. Mrs. Spencer's "Young Lady's Column" was always greeted with so much pleasure by this class, and had such a wholesome influence on their minds, we have often regretted the discontinuance of her pen in this line.

Our "perfect women, nobly planned" are passing away with time; our girls are budding into womanhood, and in this age, when fashion and worldly amusements fill many minds, is it not well to remind them of the nobler life they can attain and adorn? When the mind is absorbed with follies they forget that their mission is to make home attractive. Home doesn't mean merely a house comfortably or even elegantly furnished; a word so heaven-derived must have a more exalted signification. The centre of love, joy, peace; what precious, loving, soothing joys cluster around that spot! Some writer has truly said, "Here the Creator has ordained the sphere where woman may make amends for the evil she has brought on the race by listening to the subtle enemy of souls." Only this sacred spot is full of opportunity for high moral, religious and mental culture, full of cherished life-time associations—the grounds, the trees, and the library, the drawings and paintings, and every little home decoration, where the heart and mind are trained and encouraged to noble impulses, Christian faith and love.

We dread the influence of women who have no domestic tastes—the butterflies of fashion, who think only of their beauteous display of person. We would not be understood as underrating physical beauty, for no one feels its charm more; but without beauty of soul and intellectual graces the most perfect features can never be quite satisfactory. A plain woman who has a cultivated mind and good taste ought always to hold her ground against pretty women; for with good taste come the charm of artistic dress, pleasant, fresh, entertaining conversation and graceful manner, which does far more execution than the victims of it imagine.

We almost lose patience in listening to our girls express their antipathy for domestic duties. Do we live only for pleasure? It is very sweet to poor, tired mothers to be relieved of these household cares, after a lifetime of service for their girls. The charm consists in unsensualizing coarse and common things—the objects of mere sense—meat and drink, and household drudgery, elevating them by the spirit in which the mother ministers into something transfigured and sublime.

The words woman, mother and home, form the golden links that keep society together, and we rejoice that "women's rights women" have found so few champions in the South. We agree entirely with the eminent divine, Rev. Dr. Dabney, that the thought is sheer infidelity. He says, "The woman's sphere is expressly assigned within her home; nature has adapted her for one thing, and disqualified her for another. The violet would wither in that full glare of midsummer in which the sunflower thrives; this does not argue that the violet is the meaner flower. The vine left to stand alone would be hurled prone in the mire by the first blasts of that wind which strengthens the grasp of the sturdy oak upon its bed, still the oak may yield no fruit so precious as the clusters of the vine. But the vine cannot be an oak; it must be itself dependent, clinging, but more precious than that on which it leans, or it must perish." All girls have a secret day-dream in their hearts of the home they will eventually occupy and preside over. In the beautiful language of Sheridan, "it is by woman that nature writes on the hearts of men." He cannot be an unhappy man who has the love and smile of woman to accompany him in every department of life. The world may look dark and cheerless without, enemies may gather in his path, but when he returns to his fireside, and feels the tender love of woman, he forgets his troubles. He is but half prepared for the journey of life who takes not with him that friend who will forsake him in no emergency, who will divide his sorrows, increase his joys, lift the veil from his heart, and throw sunshine amid the darkest scenes.

Above all, woman must possess that gem which most beautifully enriches the coronet of feminine character—true piety. The soon but silent beauty of holiness speaks more eloquently of God and duty than the tongues of men and angels.

L.

Dr. Newman is now on his way to Rome to attend the Consistory at which he is to be made cardinal. His return is fixed for the middle of June.

THE MEASURE OF A MAN.

Under the above caption, William Page, the artist, gives an account of his rediscovery of the ancient proportions of the perfect human body:

"In Rome, in the year 1853, having been engaged for some months in carving wooden figures for manikens for artistic purposes, I was impressed with the fact that of nearly one hundred and fifty different measures of the human figure not one was adapted to popular use. Some are applicable to the front, some to the back, others to the bones, and all in general leading from lesser to greater parts. Something more universal was needed, and so external that if one path of measure was lost in a particular attitude, another corresponding one may remain practicable; as, for instance, if the figure inclined forward, thus lengthening the back and contracting the chest, that the sides might show a line unchanged in length, though curved; or, if inclining to one side, as in the 'Ilissus,' making one side long and the other short, that the back or front might show points to fix the exact division in the chest.

"While seeking for truth of form and adjusting the proportions of my manikens a remarkable statement in the Revelation engaged my attention:

"'And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel.' (Revelation xxi. 12–17.)

"I thought I would take the writer at his word, and ask the unit of measure of his golden reed. The Golden Rule of life being the real mean proportional of morals and religion, might I not hope to find the mean common ground of art and science, of nature and humanity, in the 'Measure of a Man,' the highest work of nature and the most perfect image of his Maker which the Supreme Artist has left us?

"In other words, my own impulse, with these hints, was to try and find out if these seemingly cabalistic words might be capable of a practical artistic interpretation.

"In measuring my little 'Egyptian Water-Carrier' I found it plain as a foot rule—the figure in height and breadth is divided by twelve. Being satisfied in this respect, I re-assured myself and friends by immediate actual measurements of the Egyptian standard in the Vatican, and of the casts of the 'Theseus' and 'Ilissus,' at Rome, and afterward of their marbles, and the 'Fates' at the British Museum, considering these to be the highest 'angels' of sculpture that the world has known. Other famous figures, in proportion to their excellence as acknowledged by the best judges, were found to come more or less near this standard, that is, according as their divisions into twelfths were actually indicated."

THE VALLEY OF SILENCE.

But far on the deep there are billows
That never shall break on the beach;
And I have heard songs in the silence
That never shall float into speech:
And I have had dreams in the valley
Too lofty for language to reach.

And I have seen thoughts in the valley—
Ah, me! how my spirit was stirred!—
They wear holy veils on their faces,
Their footsteps can scarcely be heard;
They pass down the valley like virgins
Too pure for the touch of a word.

Do you ask me the place of this valley,
To hearts that are harrowed with care?
It lieth afar between mountains,
And God and his angles are there;
And one is the dark mount of sorrow,
And one the bright mountain of prayer.

BE NOT DISCOURAGED.

Many Christians are depressed and disquieted because they are not, as they fear, growing in grace. The following consideration should give them comfort:

To see and lament our decrease in grace indicates not only the life of grace, but its growth. As it is a sign a man is recovering and getting strength when he feels his weakness, so it is a step forward in grace to see our imperfections. The more the Spirit shines in the heart, the more evil it discovers. A Christian thinks it worse with him than it was; whereas, his grace may not have declined, but only his light have become greater.

If a Christian does not increase in one grace, he may in another; if not in knowledge, he may in humility. If a tree does not grow so much in the branches, it may in the root; and to grow downwards in the root is a good growth.

A Christian may grow less in affection when he grows more in judgement. As the musician, when he is old, though his fingers are stiff, plays on the instrument with more art and judgement than in his youth, so a Christian may not have so much agection in duty as at the time of his conversion; but he is more solid in religion, and more settled in his judgement than he was before.

A Christian may think he does not increase in grace because he does not increase in gifts; whereas, there may be a decay of natural powers, the memory and other faculties, when there is not a decay of grace. Powers may be impaired when grace is improved.

A Christian may increase, yet not be sensible of it. The seed may grow in the earth when we do not perceive it to spring up, and grace may grow, during our spiritual gloom, and not be perceived.

Christians, therefore, should not yield to despondency because they are not conscious of making advance in the divine life. The sun is reaching his meridian, even when clouds intercept his beams, and it is the assurance of a faithful God, that the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

WHEN JESUS COMES.

There is one very sweet sense in which "Jesus comes" to his own followers in these days. He does not come in fleshy form, as he did eighteen centuries ago; nor does he come amid clouds and celestial splendor, as he will at the final judgment. But in spirit, seen by the eye of faith, Jesus draws delightfully near to those who seek for his presence. He comes to the awakened penitent, who cries out to him: "Come and take away my stony heart, and make it a heart of flesh." If any one doubts this, let him fervently call upon that wonder-working Saviour who visited the house of Jairus and the tomb at Bethany. He is very close at hand, my awakened and anxious friend. Already you may hear his knock at your heart, and his loving voice: "If thou wilt open the door, I will come in unto thee and sup with thee, and thou with me."

Hasten to let me in! When Jesus comes in, he will bring pardon for your sins. When Jesus comes, he will bring light and joy, and true peace such as you never tasted before. He will not be satisfied with a closet or a corner of your heart, or with a paltry share of your thoughts, grudgingly given. He wants every room—your faculties, affections, and will, must all be surrendered to him. The key to your purse must be his too. Don't plead that you are not worthy that he should come under your roof. He loves to stoop to the lowly in spirit. He will bring his own entertainment with him when he "sups" with you. You will be fed with more than angels' food when the King sitteth at the table. This is the very essence of conversion; to turn sin out of the door and convert your heart into a dwelling-place for the sinner's Friend.

"Admit him, for the human breast
Ne'er entertained so kind a guest;
Admit him, and you won't expel,
For where he comes, he comes to dwell."

The richest and most joyous hours in a believer's experience are those in which he tastes of Christ's presence in close spiritual communion. Sometimes when feasting on such words as those in the fourteenth chapter of John, sometimes when at the Lord's table, sometimes in secret prayer, Jesus comes into the soul just as he did at that upper room where the disciples were assembled. The believer feels the warmth and the light of his countenance. His left hand is under our head, and his right hand doth embrace us. We can roll off our cares and worries and doubts upon his everlasting arm. Such times of close companionship with Jesus are our holiest and happiest hours this side of heaven.

Into sick rooms where his children lie, Jesus often comes. No physician visits so faithfully. Nobly old Halyburton, of Scotland, said one morning to his family: "Jesus came to me in the third watch of last night, walking upon the waters. He said to me, 'I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, and I have the keys of hell and death.' He stilled the storm in my soul, and lo! there was a sweet calm!"

When Jesus comes in the house of sorrow, he speaks the same woudrous words which he spake to the mourners at Bethany. He allowed death to come there first to make ready for his own coming. Is not this one reason why death is allowed to take our loved ones? Then we are ready to send for Jesus!

WHY WOMEN WORK.

It is curious that the world has yet to be convinced that women do not love work any better than men do. They are credited with dependence, with a love of ease and luxury, and yet when a salaried position is in question the woman has to be content with less because "she needs less." It cannot be because she spends less, for the extravagance of women was dwelt upon by Solomon and Jeremiah, and it is a song that has never known a rest. The reason for the difference in wages is generally found in the assertion that women who do not need a support, or who have few responsibilities, crowd into the paid occupations. There is an inconsistency here. If she loves ease why does she work? If she spends more how is it she needs less? The truth is that very few women work from any other reason but necessity. Here and there is one who loves independence, works for it and deserves it, and here and there is another who would rather work than forego certain luxuries, and she earns them; but the majority of women work because they have responsibilities, and as a class they are our most reliable, sober, and economical workers, for no woman with a family of little children gambles away their bread and butter, and no sister or daughter who is, of necessity, the bread-winner, wastes what she earns, and comes home to a sad, hungry family, bringing them empty hands and indifference to their needs.—Banner.

MISS LEIGH'S HOME IN PARIS.

One of the first inmates of the home in 1873 was a Jewess. On Miss Leigh going, as was her custom, to say good night to the girls, and to see that they were comfortable this one, on being addressed, burst into tears. "Are you unhappy?" Miss Leigh asked. "No," was the reply; "it is like being in heaven! I never was cared for like this before!" "If you think so much of what I have done for you," said Miss Leigh, "you must think a great deal of what Jesus has done." "Jesus!" was the reply; "I have heard something of Him, but don't know much." The next morning a New Testament was given her, and very soon Rebecca was converted, and became a member of the Church. She took a situation from the home, and after an absence of four years she was found bearing faithful testimony for Christ in the heart of the gay Exhibition!

THE GREATNESS OF TRIFLES.

The best fidelity to Christ is shown in a daily vigilant service to Him in trifles, in efforts to honor Him in humble inconspicuous services, such as good temper in families, sympathy with man and beast, honesty in business, liberality to servants, fidelity to employers. These things make up the best discipleship. The same truth applies to many things. The best paintings are those where such details as the blades of grass, the leaves of the trees, the lines upon the waters, and similar minute points are most perfectly delineated. Artistic excellency consists chiefly in the complete accuracy which the slothful, or the ignorant worker cannot or will not, accomplish. The great Italian sculptor, Michael Angelo, was once visited by an acquaintance, who remarked, on entering his studio, "Why, you have done nothing to that figure since I was here last." "Yes," was the reply, "I have softened this expression, touched off that projection, and made other improvements." "Oh," said the visitors, "those are mere trifles!" "True," answered Michael Angelo, "but remember that trifles make perfection, and perfection is no trifle." In like manner, the highest forms of devotion to Christ consist in fidelity to apparent trifles. For only heartfelt love and abiding recollectedness of Him, as an ever beloved object, will enable His disciples to maintain throughout each day, in word and company, in busy occupation, and before His enemies, the duty of honouring Him thus continuously and in the whole details of life.

CONSCIENTIOUS GIVING.

Recently in reading the life of Mrs. Isabella Graham, a pious Presbyterian, who died in New York in 1814, I have been struck with her fidelity in giving, according "as God had prospered." She was left a widow at an early age, with four small children, and at one time so reduced in circumstances that "her breakfast and supper was porridge, and her dinner potatoes and salt." God in his providence raised up friends for her, and after awhile blessed her with a good share of temporal prosperity. Her biographer says: "Mrs. Graham made it a rule to appropriate a tenth part of her earnings to be expended for pious and charitable purposes. She had taken a lease of two lots of ground on Greenwich street from the corporation of Trinity church with a view of building a house on them for her own accommodation; the building, however, she never commenced. By a sale of the lease, which her son-in-law, Mr. Bethune, made for her in 1795, she got an advance of one thousand pounds. So large a profit was new to her. 'Quick! quick!' said she, 'let me appropriate the tenth before my heart grows hard!'"

May not God have sent this result to her investment in order to test her faithfulness in fulfilling her pledges? How many of us would be equally conscientious amid the first surprise of an unexpected good fortune?—L. G. C. in Biblical Recorder.

THE TREASURED BIBLE.

Sir Herbert Edwardes relates a beautiful story of an Afghan youth named Mohammed Ali Khan, to whom in the year 1820 an Indian missionary presented a Bible in the Pushtu tongue at the Hurdwar fair. In 1847 or 1848, the same youth, then an elderly man, brought out that Bible carefully wrapped up in many folds of silk, and told Sir Herbert "that the village priest, who was a scholar, said that it was a good book, for it was all about Father Moses and Father Noah." Strange to say, when the Peshawur Mission to the Afghans was founded in 1854, and it wanted to reprint the Serampore version of the Bible in Pushtu, the only copy that could be found in India was that so long and carefully treasured up by Mohammed Khan.

As a proof how the work of Christian missionaries is likely, under God's blessing, to strengthen British influence in India, it may be mentioned that in the Sikh war this same Mohammed Khan brought 400 followers, who fought nobly on our side.—Christian Signal.

FAMILY PRAYER.

Family prayer is the untriment of family piety, and woe to those who allow it to cease. I read the other day of parents who said they could not have family prayer, and one asked this question:—"If you knew that your children would be sick through the neglect of family prayer, would you not have it? If the child was smitten down with fever each morning that you neglected prayer, how then?" O, then they would have it. "And if there was a law that you should be fined five shillings if you did not meet for prayer, would you find time for it? Yes. "And if there were five pounds given to all who had family prayer, would you not by some means arrange to have it?" Yes. And so the inquirer went on with many questions and wound up with this:—"Then it is but an idle excuse when you, who profess to be servants of God, say that you have no time or opportunity for family prayer?" Should idle excuses rob God of His worship and our families of a blessing? Begin to pray in your families; and especially if things have gone wrong, get them right by drawing near to God more distinctly—C. H. Spurgeon.

Erasmus, having given an equivocal answer, through fear of his principles damaging his position, to Duke George of Saxony, the Duke replied, "Dear Erasmus! wash me the fur and do not wet it."

Men will not forever fight about mere memories. He is wisest who leaves the dead to bury their dead and who follow the Master into the new fields of present duty.—Gov. Woodford.

FOREIGN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

From London Weekly Review:

The Bishops of Metz and Strasburg refused to hold special services in their cathedrals on the Emperor William's birthday.

The death is announced of the Rev. Dr. Malcom, the founder of the American Tract Society.

Father Hyacinthe has publicly announced that he will give "the communion of both kinds;" and not only to those who shall have confessed according to the Catholic rite, but also to those who, on their own responsibility, shall feel disposed to present themselves for it.

Leo XIII. has devised a bribe, but what Roman Catholics call a brief, to his faithful children, which people, easily led and given to obedience, will probably accept without much compunction, even though the condition is an important one. The offer is that to all who, when using the ejaculation "Blessed be the Holy Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin," add the words "Mother of God," no fewer than three hundred days' indulgence will be granted. The explanation given for the issue of this brief is the necessity for checking the propagation of opinions opposed to the belief expressed in the ejaculation.

Rev. J. E. Carlyle, has been commissioned by the London Tract Society to prepare a hand-book or general view of Christian missions throughout the world. This will be published somewhat in the form of the Statesman's Year-book. At the close of this year it will furnish not only a resume of the statistics of the various mission societies, with short historical notices of their progress, but will also give geographical outlines of the missions grouped according to countries and continents. The London mission secretaries have promised their cordial support to this undertakiug.

Senor Castelar, who is expected in this country next month, and on whom it is intended to confer the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws at Oxford, having shown marked favour to the cause of Protestantism in his native country, the Evangelical Alliance will seek an opportunity of expressing their appreciation of his good offices on their behalf. They also intend to consult him respecting their future operation in Spain, and will be guided to a considerable extent by his views and opinions in the difficult task they have before them.

The Rev. E. Walters, who for some years has been pastor of Fishergate Baptist Chapel, has announced his intention to secede from that denomination on purely conscientious grounds. He was very much liked by his congregation, and his decision is much regretted. This makes the fifth dissenting minister who has seceded within the last ten years—three having joined the Church of England and one the established Church of Scotland, to which latter body Mr. Walters will probably ally himself.

From general sources:

Cheering news comes from the Niger Mission. Persecution, which had so greatly tried the native Christians for years past, has ceased, and the indications are that the chiefs will guarantee religious toleration.

The Rev. H. Paddon, M. A., late vicar of High Wycombe; the Rev. C. T. Astley, M. A., late vicar of Gilliugham, and another vicar, who has resigned his incumbency, have joined the Reformed Episcopal Church in England.

The American Missionary Association has decided to accept Mr. Arthington's proposition, accompanied with $15,000, to occupy a district in Central Africa, which lies south of Abyssinia and north of the Victoria Nyanza. It is accessible by the Nile, and steamers can be used on the Nile and its tributaries, so far as to facilitate communication with different tribes. The Association calls for $35,000 more to start the mission.

MISCELLANY.

M. Jules Favre is occasionally writing newspaper articles in defence of the Protestant faith.

A general missionary atlas is a desideratum which would to warmly welcomed by all who are interested in missions. It is rather surprising that no publisher has undertaken such a work.

San Salvador, which is fifty miles from the west coast of Africa, and South of the Congo river, will henceforth be the headquarters of the English Baptist Missionary Society.

The Manchester Ladies' Flower Mission distributed 20,000 bunches among the sick in the hospitals, workhouses, and cottage districts of that city during last year.

An English Roman Catholic bank has been formed, and it is starting in business with a large capital subscribed by Roman Catholics. All its directors, managers, &c., are of that faith. Many stockbrokers have determined to join the Roman Catholic Church on the distinct understanding that they are to be employed, whilst not a few impecunious gentlemen are anxious to know whether, provided that their religious principles are sound, the bank will discount their paper. "If it succeeds," said a Hebrew to a correspondent, "we will have our bank;" and it will be a curious phase in banking if each religious community only discounts the bills of its own members.

Ayodhya is one of the sacred cities of India in the province of Oude, and is the cradle of the Hindoo and Buddhist faith. Three thousand years ago it was in its glory, but it is now considerably run down. Nevertheless, some of the principal temples and other objects of interest are kept up. One of the chief attractions is the Hanomangahri, or temple. Within its walls dwell 600 "Disciples of the Silent Sect." They live as monks do, and pass most of their time in solid indolence. There are in Ayodhya seven cloisters of this order, each of which is presided over by an abbot. These are the "Silent Sect," the "Void-of-Affection" Sect, the "Naked" Sect, the "Ash-besmeared" Sect, the "Dumb" Sect, the "Patient" Sect, and the "Provisionless" Sect. The men who compose these sects are supported by the revenue of lands set apart for the purpose, and by the gifts of pilgrims. Ayodhya contains a tomb of Seth, one of Job and of Noah's. Noah's grave is twenty-seven feet long and two feet wide. The great Fair of Ramnaumi, which is held annually at Ayodhya, has recently closed. It attracted this year nearly a million of pilgrims. The name of the place means "The unconquerable city of God."

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

RETRENCHMENT.

That business enterprise is most successful in which the largest revenue accrues from the smallest expenditure.

A decrease of outlay is always proper when such reduction will not injuriously affect the income, and increased expenditure is always justifiable when the results which can be achieved thereby are more than commensurately augmented.

Stated in another form, any enterprise in which an expense of $2,000 will produce an income of $4,000 is quite successful; it will be more successful if $1,500 expended will produce the same return, and it will be conducted even to better purpose if at a cost of $3,000 the amount of $6,000 can be realized.

These principles hold good whether pecuniary disbursements are to produce results either moral or financial, and they are stated here as preliminary to a consideration of the subject of retrenchment in the expenditures in the work of our Church.

In the approaching General Assembly the cost of conducting the various benevolent enterprises of the Church will be fully stated by those having them in charge, and the results accomplished will be as accurately as possible detailed. With this necessary information before them the commissioners of the Church will be called upon to determine how far, if at all, any curtailment of expenditures can be ventured upon, and what other measures may be necessary that the advancement of the cause of Christ upon earth, so far as it is committed to our branch of Zion, may be promoted. Let us hope that they will secure that divine guidance which will enable them to faithfully perform the duty which will devolve upon them.

We are accustomed to the cry of retrenchment as applied to the affairs of civil government, and indeed under the heavy pressure of financial stringency it is not unnatural that even our Christian people should desire that the affairs of the Church should be administered with the strictest economy. The desire is not only natural but reasonable, yet under the impulse of a natural selfishness we may not give due weight to the first of all considerations, that the work of our Lord must not be abridged or impaired in our hands. If retrenchment in any outlay of means is to render that work in any degree less effective then the thought of retrenchment should not be for a moment entertained.

We confess to the conviction that our benevolent causes are now operated on a scale as economical as can be devised without seriously impairing their efficiency; at least, if any changes can be made they will be so small as to be scarcely appreciable as affecting the contributions necessary from the Church at large. Our eyes and our minds have been turned in the wrong direction, and the effect of this one-sided view of a many-sided subject is disastrous in the extreme.

The work is vast. In a large scope of view it is well nigh limitless; proximately it is far beyond our efforts to its accomplishment. Means are needed to reinforce our foreign missionaries, to build up our waste places at home, to educate our candidates, to provide for the widows and orphans of those who gave their life service to Christ, to provide proper literature for our Sabbath schools and for ourselves, and to properly support those whom God has called as the immediate and direct ministers of His Word to us. Looking away from these necessities for increased expenditure, we have applied the theory of retrenchment to the serious detriment of all our benevolent operations. We have forced retrenchment upon our committees, and our mission operations have been curtailed, and this while new fields are open and laborers are pressing for the work. We are retrenching in the wrong direction. Our contributions are retrenched when they should be multiplied and extended. A glance at the minutes of Assembly or the records of our Presbyteries will show that many churches do not contribute one cent to any one of the causes of our Church, and that very many contribute to only a very few. What church, what individual, contributes all he might, all he ought, to the promotion of God's work?

It behooves us, then, while we may fairly demand that every dollar contributed shall be wisely expended, not to let our care for this matter blind us to the fact that we may make it the pretext for such a non-performance of duty as shall result in incalculable harm to what should be dearest to every Christian heart. Sacrifice is involved, sacrifice of means; of means which procure pleasures, or luxuries, or comforts, or what we call necessaries. But what sacrifice of ours for Christ can approximate Christ's sacrifice for us?

DEATH OF REV. N. Z. GRAVES.

Rev. Nelson Z. Graves died at Warrenton, N. C., on 3d May inst. He had been confined to his room since the latter part of January last. At first his indisposition took the form of a severe cold, from which fatal results were not apprehended, but other troubles followed and the disease became more serious as it was protracted, notwithstanding a few weeks since his early recovery was anticipated. It was only a few moments before his death that the event was realized as near. His end was peaceful.

We append the following sketch furnished by a near relative:

"Rev. N. Z. Graves was born in Perkinsville, Vt., Sept. 16, 1811. Graduated at Union College, Schenectady, in 1833. He then chose the profession of law, was admitted to the bar, and purchased a valuable library; but, yielding to the wishes of his mother, gave up the practice of that profession. He was afterwards elected to a professorship in Newark College, Delaware. From Newark he came to Warrenton in May, 1841, and in connection with the late Julius Wilcox, established the Warrenton Female Institute. He was admitted to Orange Presbytery in 1851, and for some years had charge of a church in Louisburg, N. C., and a church in Mecklenburg, Virginia. In 1858 he sold out his interest in the Institute to his brother-in-law, Mr. Wilcox, and went to New York. While in that city he attended a regular course of medical lectures, by way of spending part of his leisure time pleasantly and profitably. In 1860 he went to Little Rock, Ark., and until 1863 was president of a flourishing female seminary. After that time he had charge successively of female seminaries in Middlebury, Vt., and Clinton and Goldsboro, N. C. Wilmington Presbytery received him from the Presbytery of Arkansas September 24, 1869. He had charge of the Presbyterian church at Goldsboro, and was its pastor until he came to Warrenton in 1875, when he again became connected with the Institute.

"He excelled as a linguist and mathematician, but the study of the natural sciences was his chief pleasure. Science and religion were with him so intimately blended that the knowledge of the one only increased his belief in the other. He was a close student and deep thinker. Every object in nature awakened his interest and gave him a theme for thought. As a teacher he excelled. His explanations and illustrations were clear and concise. The many who have enjoyed the benefit of his instructions will hear of his death with deep sorrow. Amiable, unselfish and unaffectedly modest, his was the life of a true Christian.

'To this just man let this just praise be given,
Heaven was in him before he was in Heaven.'"

Rev. B. F. Marable writes from Goldsboro:

"No man ever lived here who commanded such unusual esteem and love. His name is never mentioned in this town except in accents of affection.

He was a man of large natural ability, fine culture, and a Christian character that I have never seen surpassed in spiritual elevation and moral purity. I do not say this in the spirit of conventional eulogy now that he is dead; but only repeat what I have often said with emphasis while he was living. No man of the least degree of appreciation of merit, could possibly know N. Z. Graves without loving him. I verily believe that no better man has lived from the days of Abraham until now. Always meek, patient and radiant with love to God, and man; his faith was simply sublime. I have seen him under the most overwhelming affliction, and yet as confident and placid, as if he stood with his hand upon the eternal Throne, looking into the face of Him who said "My grace is sufficient for thee."

We knew Mr. Graves quite well, for such was his unaffected simplicity of character and openness of heart, that one might know him well in an evening's intercourse. What in other terms we would have said is said above. We only add that as a preacher of Christ he had few equals. His sermons were remarkable for polished elegance of diction and style, and yet so plain that a child might understand. They bore the impress of a kindly heart gladly bringing messages of love from the Eternal Throne, and were sweet, comforting, delightful.

DEATH OF REV. ANDREW HART.

We extract the following concerning Rev. Andrew Hart, from the Christian Observer, as furnished it by Rev. P. B. Price.

"He died at his home in Buchanan, Va., on Wednesday, April 23d, at 11 P. M.

He was the oldest minister, at the time of his death, in the Presbytery of Montgomery, being about seventy-five years of age. His early pastoral service was in Charlotte county, Va.; and his later at Buchanan, and in connection with it, at High Bridge, Carmel and other adjacent places. About four years ago he resigned his charge at Buchanan, on account of ill health, preaching occasionally during the subsequent years, till last year. His health steadily declined, and his bodily sufferings increased to the end of his life. He was an acceptable preacher and a useful presbyter, remarkable for his clear views, perspicuous style, and excellent judgment; fluent and fervent in the pulpit. His faith in the doctrines of salvation sustained him in death; his testimony was truly edifying."

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The commencement exercises at Peace Institute will take place on the evening of June 10th, and the annual concert on the next evening. Rev. Samuel M. Smith of Washington, N. C., will deliver the address.

It would be good to be at "Fair, delightful Peace" to hear the address and mingle among beauty and culture, but we shall trust to "our own correspondent" to give us and our readers an account of all, in his usual graceful and graphic style.

In response to the request of an esteemed lady friend we ask any Presbyterian families who may contemplate moving to Texas, and who may wish to communicate with other Presbyterians having similar intentions, to send their names to us. The request is based on the fact that when Presbyterian families move in colonies, a church soon follows, but when they are scattered over all parts of the State they are often deprived of all religious opportunities, or, at best, compelled to unite with other churches. The suggestion commends itself to reason, and we will take pleasure in putting parties in communication.

The Pope of Rome in his late letter to the Cardinal-vicar very plainly declares that had he the power there would be no toleration of Protestants in Rome. Why, then, should any one suppose there would be elsewhere if Rome had the power?

The Presbyterian is very sore at the failure of the overture for reduced representation in the Northern Assembly, and indulges in very severe language on the subject. It denounces the mileage system, and thinks each Presbytery should pay expenses of its own delegates. No doubt this, which is the plan of the Southern Church, would be an improvement, but the true secret is, there are too many Presbyteries, and sooner or later—why not now?—there must be a division into two or more Assemblies. Do not wait for the Southern Church to come in; that will not be in our day and the case seems urgent.

PRESBYTERY AT ST. ANDREW'S.

Good John Knox, the stern old Reformer, would doubtless have been deeply shocked to have foreseen that the descendants of the sturdy Scotch, whose land he, more than any other one man, rescued from the control of Romish ideas, should have in the venerable Presbytery of Fayetteville churches bearing the names of saints. But surely, if Scotchmen and Presbyterians might in their ecclesiastical nomenclature use with propriety the name of any "saint" they might take the name of the guardian saint of Scotland, Saint Andrew, and, of the champion of the great doctrines of grace, Saint Paul. So it happens, somehow or other, that there are in the Presbytery of Fayetteville a St. Paul's and a St. Andrew's. And this year the spring meeting was held in the latter church.

Its history is not very old. Just at the beginning of the war it was organized, chiefly out of Buffalo church, and lies about six miles to the south of that church. Not far from the same time Salem church, about eight miles east, was organized largely out of the same congregation. Of course every one knows where old Buffalo is, and why it is the Greenwich of the present deponent, from which longitude is reckoned.

This church, Saint Andrew's, is faithfully served by the Rev. James McQueen, and more than once special benedictions have rested upon his labors. During the last summer and fall the church was greatly revived, and nearly forty added to its communion. St. Andrew's certainly supplies, as the newspapers would say, "a felt need," and brings the ordinances of God's House more conveniently near to many who might otherwise be denied frequent enjoyment of such privileges. With what glad hearts would the fathers of this church, now entered, most of them, into rest, have seen the Presbytery entertained at their church, and with what cordial hospitality did their children receive and welcome the venerable body! The struggle for existence is over, and a future of increased usefulness and prosperity lies before this good and earnest people. The outlook is hopeful and encouraging.

The meeting of Presbytery did, I think, much good. The people were much interested in the proceedings, and gave great attention and care to their guests. The house of worship was put in neat and attractive guise for Presbytery, newly ceiled, and supplied with new pulpit and furniture. There was preaching every day at the stand, a crowded and interested missionary meeting Saturday afternoon in the church, and on Sabbath there were four sermons, two in the church and two outdoors—besides the precious communing of brethren and saints—and of a number more than could fill the church at one time, so that tables were twice served. On Saturday and Sunday immense crowds attended, and it greatly cheered and encouraged the good people of St. Andrew's and all who were there to see the multitudes, and the evident appreciation and enjoyment of the devotional exercises.

The weather was charming. A delicious haze in the atmosphere, fresh half-formed leaves in the forest, and all through the sweet winding country roads the wood violets, the jessamine's golden stars, and wild honeysuckles and pinks, with songs of mocking birds, murmur of streams and sighing or rustling of breezes, blended to make each day more perfect for physical enjoyment.

You know what was done. Our good clerk never failed to tell you. I may say, however, that it seemed strange to me that the Presbytery could find time, during its session of little more than two days, for animated discussions on matters important but largely personal; could find time for the tedious reading of the "old book" and the "new," consuming more than two hours; but could not find time to hear a single report from a single church—not one—though many sessions had taken pains and time to prepare what the Presbytery requires. Nobody heard what churches were revived, what additions were made to membership, what Christian work was done, what contributions were made, what Sunday schools were organized, what sessions had been faithful, and what churches had failed to do their duty, though such reports from the churches were before the body. Some of us will get into a "state of chronic indignation" if this indifference to the important details of Presbyterial oversight continues. I have somehow always had an idea that such things claimed at least a hearing and a part of the time of Presbytery.

So that I cannot give any idea or resume of the church's progress in the Presbytery of Fayetteville during the year. An organization was reported of a new church at Shoe Heel (or Qubele!) and an organization was asked for at Cameron. An addition to the effective ministry of the Presbytery was made in the reception of Rev. G. M. Gibbs. But one of our number had permission to labor without our bounds, Rev. Dr. Shepperson. The Sunday school work has grown. A colporteur was commissioned for the summer. Some congregations are building new churches (we heard of incidentally), and so with mingled hues the warp is made.

On the whole there is reason for gratitude and hope. And this Presbytery will be long remembered. "It was good to be there."

PRESBYTERY OF MECKLENBURG

Met at Castanea Grove church, Lincoln county, May 2d, was constituted by Rev. S. H. Chester, retiring Moderator, and sermon was preached by Rev. E. H. Harding, from John xiv: 6, "I am the life."

Rev. G. L. Cook was elected Moderator, and Rev. M. R. Kirkpatrick and Col. Michal of Lincolnton church were elected Temporary Clerks.

Calls from the churches of Franklin, Morrison and Hiwassee for pastoral services of Rev. M. R. Kirkpatrick were read, placed in his hands and by him retained.

Permission was granted Sharon church to employ Rev. D. P. Robinson of Bethel Presbytery until fall meeting of Presbytery. Also to Ramah and Huntersville to employ Rev. J. F. Latimer.

Rev. S. C. Alexander was appointed Evangelist for the counties of Madison, Jackson, Graham and Cherokee.

Commissioners to the Assembly are as follows: Principals: Revs. S. T. Martin, J. F. Latimer, with Ruling Elders Gen. R. D. Johnston of Second church, Charlotte, and Dr. B. W. Moore of Franklin; alternates: Revs. G. D. Parks and W. E. McIlwain, with Ruling Elders Gray and Michal.

Presbytery overtured the Assembly touching the office of the diaconate.

Messrs. Jas. Ochler of Huntersville church and Walter W. Moore of First church, Charlotte, were received as candidates for the ministry, and candidate John H. Dixon was licensed to preach the Gospel.

At the hour appointed the memorial service of Rev. H. H. Banks was held. Rev. Dr. Miller read a most interesting sketch of his life and labors, and, at the Moderator's request, led the Presbytery in prayer.

Executive committee of Sustentation made their full report, and, whilst the consideration of the report was pending, Revs. Martin, Davis and Kirkpatrick of the mountain field, made gratifying reports of their labors.

Rev. R. A. Miller made report of his labors, whereupon Presbytery took the following action:

Resolved, 1. That Presbytery has heard with great pleasure of the successful labors of Rev. R. A. Miller in the counties of Union and Anson.

Resolved, 2. That our Sustentation Committee are hereby authorized to place an additional laborer in this inviting field so soon as the funds of Presbytery will admit of the necessary outlay.

Presbytery authorized its committee on colportage to begin the work so soon as the way is clear, and directed the Stated Clerk to remind the churches which had not contributed to this cause to do so at an early day.

Attendance of Presbytery was large, and was handsomely entertained by the good people of Castanea Grove. The venerable Dr. R. H. Morrison, the former pastor of this church, was present several days upon the sittings of the Presbytery, much to the delight of the whole Presbytery.

Presbytery adjourned to meet at Philadelphia church on the 17th of October, at 11 A. M.

SOMETHING TO THINK UPON.

Is anything plainer than this, that the great Head of the Church does not mean ordinarily to advance His kingdom in this world by the aid of the world's usual levers. When we consider who it is that is travelling in the greatness of His strength, mighty to save, does it not seem wonderful that so little of the gold and silver, so few of the mighty and noble are called to His feet. His Church is infinitely dear to Him, its progress is watched and noted in heaven. Would one not suppose that He would divert into coffers more of the wealth which would enable it to go on with increased vigor, and do tenfold work for his cause. Why does He prefer to carry on that work so slowly with such stinted means? The last number of the Missionary tells how a rag-carpet was made for the Mission cause by a lady. Bit by bit, and ball by ball the materials grew, and at last a poor woman who had nothing else to give, gave the weaving. So the carpet was made and sold for $12. Twelve dollars for Christ's kingdom; and that same week a race horse won for his already rich owner several hundred thousand dollars on one race. Next we read of a little boy who had raised and sold two canary birds for four dollars, and sent the money with great joy to the missions. Four dollars for Christ, and the infant grandson of the Russian Emperor has just had sixteen thousand a year settled on him for the expenses of his table. Is'nt it wonderful? The silver and the gold is mine, says God, and yet he does not choose to use it. He prefers to get twelve dollars here, and four dollars there from the self-denying labors of poor women and children. Now and then He allows one of His followers to bring a rich gift to the altar, as if to show us what they all would do if He would give them the means. The N. Y. Observer tells of a gentleman walking into the office of Domestic Missions of the Northern Presbyterian Church last week, and giving it twenty-five thousand dollars. The Observer says it was pleasant to see, and was the more pleasant because he had done the same thing several times before." Twenty-five thousand dollars! Well-done. We wish there were twenty-five thousand more like gifted, and like-minded. But there are few such.

SHOE HEEL CHURCH.

SHOE HEEL, N. C., May 12th, 1879.

MR. EDITOR:—The Rev. Roger Martin has accepted the call from the churches of Centre and Shoe Heel and will be among us by the first of June. We are all highly delighted at this. The Rev. Luther McKinnon of Concord preached for us at Shoe Heel on last Friday night, and again on Saturday morning. On Sabbath morning he preached at Centre and again at Shoe Heel in the afternoon.

Those sermons, one and all, without any attempt at oratorical display on part of the speaker, were direct and powerful appeals to the minds and hearts of his hearers, and I trust and believe had a good effect.

Our little church had on this occasion an addition of six members, two on profession of faith in Jesus Christ and four on certificate. Thus our hearts were made glad and we take courage to go on in the Lord. Our church is in progress of building, but it will be some time before it is ready for the worship of God.

THE PRESBYTERY OF MECKLENBURGH'S DEFINITION OF A COMMISSION.

1. "A Commission is a court, meeting with less than its usual number, for the executing such business as can be done as properly and as safely by a part, as by the whole of its members; such as the taking of testimony in judicial cases, the ordination and installation of ministers, the visitation of portions of the Church affected with disorder, and the organization of new churches. 2. A Commission must always consist of at least a quorum of the Court. 3. When the ordination of a minister is by Commission, the previous examination must be made in full Presbytery. A Commission is not a Committee; it is the Court itself, just as the quorum of a Court though a moiety of the Court, is the Court itself. The meeting of a Commission of Presbytery is properly, a pro re nata Presbytery meeting by Commission."

The powers of a Commission are set forth in the following action of the General Assembly: "Ordered by the Presbytery of Philadelphia that upon the desire of Mr. Smith and the people of Cohanzy, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Andrews, and Mr. Boyd shall wait upon them at Cohanzy, in order to his ordination, and the people are to present them a call to the said Mr. Smith." Minutes 1708. "Presbytery of Philadelphia appointed as follows, that Masters Andrews, Anderson, Powell, Jones and Gillespie, do manage in the affair between Mr. Wotherspoon and the people of Apoquinimy, appoint the said Mr. W. to pass his trials before them, and that if they shall be fully satisfied as to his qualifications, they proceed to his ordination and settlement among that people." Minutes 1714. "That Messrs. Jedediah Andrews, Jones, Anderson, Gillespie and Wotherspoon, solemnly ordain Mr. David Evans to the work and office of the ministry, after having been satisfied with his ministerial abilities, in any pieces of trial they shall think fit to appoint him." Minutes 1714. "It is appointed that Messrs. Davis, Andrews, Anderson, Powell and Wotherspoon, take Mr. Bradner under trials in order to his being ordained in that place (Cape May,) and that they proceed in the aforesaid affair as they shall see fit."—Minutes 1714. "It was appointed that Messrs. McGill, Anderson, Gillespie, Wotherspoon and Evans, after being satisfied with Mr. Conn's ministerial abilities, should solemnly ordain him by prayer, fasting and imposition of hands, unto the work of the ministry among the abovesaid people of Baltimore county."—Minutes 1715. "It was appointed that Mess. Andrews, Powell, McNish, Jones, and Morgan, after having been satisfied with Mr. Orr's ministerial abilities, should solemnly ordain him by fasting, prayer and imposition of hands, unto the work of the ministry, among the said people of Hopewell and Maidenhead."—Minutes 1715. "The Presbytery of Philadelphia does appoint Messrs. Davis, Hampton, Henry, Wotherspoon, Anderson, Gillespie, Evans and Bradner, to take Mr. Thomson's trials, and upon their satisfaction to proceed to ordination."—Minutes 1716. "That Mr. Andrews, Mr. Jones, Mr. Orr, Mr. Pumry, Mr. Powell and Mr. Bradner, do ordain Mr. Pierson, as they shall upon trial find satisfaction."—Minutes 1716.

"A committee was appointed to go to Goshen, with the full power of the Synod to hear and determine that business. The persons appointed for said Committee are Mr. Andrews, Mr. Cross, Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Pierson, Mr. Webb, Mr. Pumry and Mr. Pemberton, or any three of them, though it is expected they will all use their diligence to go."—Minutes 1732.

"In the matter of a complaint an appeal from the Presbytery of Donegall went up to the Synod of Philadelphia which appointed "Messrs. Andrews, Treat, David Evans, Gillespie, Houston and Thomas Evans, to go to the Upper Octorara the last Tuesday of October, and consider and determine the business, and that any three of these be a quorum; and it is recommended to their ministers to take elders with them if they can."—Minutes 1735.

In the matter of an appeal from the Presbytery of New York, the Synod of New York and Philadelphia appointed "a committee to determine this matter."—Minutes 1761.

In the matter of an appeal from the Presbytery of New York, the Synod of New York and Philadelphia appointed "a committee to hear and to try the merits of the cause, and to issue the whole affair and to take what methods they may think proper thereto."—Minutes 1764.

In the matter of an appeal from the Presbytery of Donegall, Synod of New York and Philadelphia appointed "a committee to issue and determine the matter."—Minutes 1765.

In the matter of an appeal from Suffolk Presbytery, a committee of ministers was appointed "to meet with each an elder, to try and issue the whole affair."—Minutes 1766.

A committee, consisting of Messrs. Treat, Rodgers, McWhorter, Hunter and Miller, were appointed to prepare an overture to be laid before the Synod of New York and Philadelphia ascertaining the powers of a Commission. The following paper was adopted: "Whereas, there have arisen doubts in the minds of some members respecting the utility and powers of what is called by us the Commission, the Synod proceeds to take this matter into consideration, and after due deliberation, in order to remove any scruples upon this head, and prevent all future difficulties in this matter, do determine that the Commission shall continue, and meet whensoever called by the Moderator, at the request of the first nine in the roll of the Commission, or a major part of the first nine ministers, and when met that it shall be invested with all the powers of Synod to sit by their own adjournment from time to time; and let it also be duly attended to, that there can lie no appeal from the judgment of the Commission, as there can be none from the judgment of the Synod, but there may be a review of their proceedings and judgments by the Synod, and whensoever this is done, those who were members of the Commission shall be present and assist in forming all such judgments as the Synod may think proper to make upon any such review."—Minutes 1774.

The Assembly of 1846 appointed a committee, consisting of Drs. Hodge, Lindsley, Musgrave, MacFarland and McDowell, to bring in a report discussing the constitutionality and powers of a commission. This was submitted to the Assembly of 1847. It concludes with these words:

"In view of the original rights of our judicatories, of the long continued practice of the Church, and of the great value of the right, on due occasions, of acting by Commissions, the hope is respectfully expressed that the Assembly may do nothing which may have the effect of calling that right in question."

Dr. Thornwell, in his review of that Assembly, after referring to "the very able and elaborate report of Dr. Hodge," observes:

"The question before the Assembly was not as to the right to appoint committees or commissions—this was universally conceded—but as to the powers with which they might be legitimately invested. The precise point in dispute was, whether a court could resolve itself into a portion of its own members. Now to us this question seems perfectly plain. The commission contemplated in the resolution of 1846 is not a separate and independent body, entrusted with delegated powers; it is, in no proper sense, an agent of the court which appoints it; but it is the court itself, resolving to be constituted as such, with less than a majority of its members. The appointment of certain persons by name precludes none others from attending. All the members of the court are de jure members of the commission; the only object of the appointment is to render it certain that some shall attend by making it their special duty to do so. When any ecclesiastical judicatory, therefore, nominates a commission it does nothing more than issue a command to the individuals specified to attend at the time and place, and for the purpose mentioned, and at the same time to declare that these persons so attending shall constitute a quorum of the court, even if none others should be present. This seems to us to be a true statement of the case, and if commissions are to be condemned we are at a loss to determine upon what principle the provision of our government, making the quorum of a court consist in many cases of a very small fraction of its members, can be defended. It is quite a mistake to suppose, as some in the Assembly seem to apprehend, that the right to appoint a commission is founded upon the right to delegate power. According to this view there would be no necessity that the members of the commission should be members of the court. If a session, Presbytery or Synod possessed inherent powers which it could legitimately entrust to others, we see not why it should be restricted in entrusting them to agents exclusively selected from itself. But the truth is, the right to delegate power pertains to no ecclesiastical judicatory at all. Christ, according to all Protestant confessions, is the Head of the Church, and all the powers of all the courts are derived from Him. These courts are his agents to do His will, and if a delegate cannot transfer his commission no more can they commit their functions to any other hands. They are to do themselves the work which their Master has imposed upon them. Possessing no original and inherent jurisdiction, all their powers are restricted to themselves. If a commission were an agent, acting with delegated powers, we should unhesitatingly pronounce it to be unlawful."—Collected writings, vol. 4, pp. 486-488.

These views accord with the teachings of the Church of England as shown in Pardovan's Collections:

"A committee is appointed only to prepare matters, whereas a Commission determines in matters committed to them, and from whose sentence therein there lieth no appeal to the ensuing General Assembly, though a complaint may be tabled before the next Assembly against the proceedings of the Commission, * * * * Delegation seems inconsistent with the principles of presbyterial government, for if the Assemblies of the Church can give power to delegates to determine in one point they may in more, and consequently in all, and thereby may introduce a prelacy."

Foote's sketches show that commissions are nothing new or uncommon in North Carolina:

"In the year 1804 the Presbytery of Orange appointed Rev. Messrs. S. C. Caldwell, John M. Wilson and Humphrey Hunter, and Elders Messrs. John McKnitt Alexander, Thos. Harris, Jacob Alexander, Isaac Alexander, Hugh Parks and Robert Stephenson a committee to visit Long Creek and take up the irregularities of Long Creek and Knobb Creek on the subject of religion. They performed the duty assigned, and found, upon inquiry, that some of the laymen laid claim to special divine guidance, and had administered the ordinances of the Supper and of Baptism, being moved, as they said, by a divine impulse. For these and other irregularities many were suspended from the ordinances of the Church."—Pages 465, 466.

"Resolved by the Synod of the Carolinas, that the following ministers and elders be a Standing Commission of Synod, and particularly to take up and issue the affair of Mr. Cossan, if not issued by the Presbytery of Abingdon, viz: the Rev. Samuel E. McCorkle, Moderator; James Hall, James Templeton, James McRee, Robert Hall, Wm. C. Davies and Charles Cummins, with Elders John Dickey, John McKnitt Alexander, Adam Beard, William Cathey, William Anderson, Joseph Feemster and John Nelson. The moderator's council to consist of one minister besides himself and one elder. Two ministers, besides the Moderator, and as many of the above elders as may be present, to constitute a quorum."

"From this time the Commission of Synod was a regular appointment, with few intermissions. Much important business was done by them, and their decision was final."—Page 285.

The constitutionality and judicial authority of this Commission were distinctly recognized by the Assembly. (See minutes 1798.)

The definition of a Commission, as contained in the Book of Church Order, which has been adopted by a majority of the Presbyteries, though erroneous in some particulars, is yet certainly accurate in according to it judicial authority, the ordination and installation of ministers, and the organization of churches.

PRESBYTER.

Official Report of the General Assembly.

The verbatim report of the proceedings and debates of the next Assembly will be published by the Assembly's Reporter in a pamphlet to be issued after the final adjournment. It will probably contain between two and three hundred pages, of about the size and style of the Missionary. The Louisville Courier-Journal containing a briefer daily report will be sent during the sessions to every subscriber.

TERMS:—The verbatim report in pamphlet, with the daily Courier-Journal, will be sent post-paid for ONE DOLLAR—the same also without the Courier Journal. Any one sending the money for five subscriptions will be entitled as a compensation for his labor to an extra copy, or may retain $1, and the same percentage on every additional subscription.

Address orders to the undersigned, care of Thos. Royall, 120 Jefferson St., Louisville, Ky.

G. L. WOLFE.

It will not be practicable for us to give more than a very much condensed report of the proceedings of the Assembly; nevertheless, it is in the highest degree desirable that the record complete and entire should be in the hands of all of our people. We advise all to secure the "Official Report." It will be found interesting to all who desire,—and all should desire—to keep up with the work of our Church.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Preacher and Homiletic Monthly for May: The usual variety and very large quantity of sermons from distinguished divines, and other good reading. "Bernard as a preacher" by Rev. Dr. Storrs we shall read with pleasure, a glance impresses us with its excellence. Price $2 50 per year.

We tender thanks for invitations to attend commencements at Trinity College, N. C., and Erskine College at Due West, S. C.

"Joy Bells" from Whiting's Music House, Toledo, O., is a very late contribution to Sabbath School music. Some of the pieces very fair and others not so good.

We have from D. Appleton & Co., New York, "An Accomplished Gentleman." A novel of the light order, we suppose, though knowing nothing we cannot say much. Handy Volume Series. Price 30 cents.

Another from same house "Ruskin on Painting" is of quite a different order, though of the same series and furnished at the same price. It consists of passages selected from Ruskin's great work on "Modern Painting" and presents the main argument of that work. To all interested in the art of painting, it will prove very satisfactory.

An exceedingly interesting compend of Church History in times which tried men's souls, just before the Great Reformation. As we read we feel we want more of the history, as well as more of the spirit of the martyrs. But Dr. Meares has done well in condensing the records and giving our families this clear and stirring condensed account of three chief Christian worthies. We have read and enjoyed the book, and now commend it heartily to all our readers.

The Teacher an Educational Journal, published monthly by Eldredge & Bro., Philadelphia. 50 cents per annum. May, 1879.

The Edinburgh Review for April has come to hand. Contents: Memoirs and Charters of the Lennox; Electric Light; Recent Excavations in Rome; Bastiat an Apostle of Free Trade; East Anglian Sculpture; The King's Secret; Gold and its Effects on Trade; William Cobbett; Pessimism; South Africa. RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

East Hanover Presbytery received Rev. S. K. Winn, from Chesapeake Presbytery. New Book was adopted by a vote of 26 to 1.

Rev. J. E. Triplett's postoffice is changed from Poplar Hill, Va., to Cynthiana, Ky. In Giles county, from which Mr. Triplett removes, six years ago there was but one church building and thirty-five members; now there are four comfortable churches and one hundred and twenty-five members.

A correspondent of the Texas Presbyterian writes: "Our little Presbyterian church at Belton has long been without a house of worship; but now we have been able to purchase a lot and will commence to build immediately. We have about $1,200 subscribed for the purpose, and think we can raise more as soon as we get underway on a building. Our church is growing some, and with a house of our own our prospect would be much improved."

Postoffice of Rev. G. L. Ewing has been changed from Hendersonville, Tenn., to Rose Hill, Va.

Prof. J. S. Blackwell of Ghent, Ky., has been elected Professor of Hebrew, Syriac and Arabic in the University of Missouri.

Rev. J. H. Morrison of Owingsville, Ky., has accepted the call to the Portland avenue church, Louisville, Ky., and entered his duties there on the first Sabbath in May.—Christian Observer.

The Presbyterian church in Graham, N. C., is undergoing considerable improvement. A new roof and cupola, soon to be completed, will greatly improve its appearance. A bell will be provided also.—Alamance Gleaner.

Thirty-two children have been baptized by Rev. Joseph Bardwell, Meridian, Miss., in two months past. Eleven were baptized May 4th.

Four additions to Point Pleasant church in West Virginia, on third Sabbath in April. Rev. W. E. Hill, pastor, was assisted by Rev. G. A. Hopper.

On 27th April, ult., fifteen additions were made to Beard's church, Ky., and a Sabbath school and young men's prayer meeting established.

There is in Tazewell, Tenn., a college of 150 students. The Rev. S. B. Campbell is the pastor of the Presbyterian church there. A few weeks ago a protracted meeting was held, in which almost every youth in the college was converted. We have not received particulars of this remarkable work of grace. —Christian Observer.

The health of Rev. J. D. McClintock of Columbus, Miss., is materially improving.

A revived interest in religion is noted at Union church, Miss. One person united with the church at last communion. The attendance on services is large and the collections for Foreign Missions have increased. A ruling elder and deacon were installed.

The postoffice address of Rev. John R. B[...]bey is changed from Lexington, Mo., to Patterson, Wayne county, in the same State.

At the stated celebration of the Lord's Supper last Sunday, at Pine Street church the announcement was made of the reception of seven new members, three by profession and four by letter.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

Under date of May 3rd, Rev. Dr. Grasty, who is supplying the Mexico church, writes to the St. Louis Presbyterian. "We had services for several days. There were seven additions. The outlook is promising."

The St. Louis Presbyterian says: Last Sunday, at the usual service in Dr. Brank's church (Central) in this city, six persons were announced as having been received into the church; five of them by letter. A mother and her three children were baptized. On the same occasion, five hundred dollars were secured for the reinforcement of the Pernambuco mission.

GENERAL.

Rev. Geo. Taylor for many years a Baptist minister in Virginia, but for six years past a missionary to Rome is now in this country. He is a brother of Rev. J. B. Taylor of this city.

The first colored man ordained by the Episcopal church in Louisiana, is Rev. C. H. Thompson, rector of St. Philip's church, New Orleans. He has recently been advanced to the priesthood.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Home Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church received more than $90,000 in the month of March. This leaves a debt of $7,000.

A Presbyterian church of twenty-three members was organized by the Rev. F. A. Spencer, April 13th, in Pine Grove, in Schuyler county, near Watkins, N. Y. A church edifice, built by a former organization, is provided for the new society, and their future is quite hopeful.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Central Congregational church in Boston, to which Dr. Duryea has gone, cost $325,000, and a debt of $210,000 was paid in a very short time, during the ministry of the Rev. John DeWitt, by a united effort of the people.

Fisk University at Nashville, which recently received $50,000 from the Stone estate, is further enriched by a bequest of $20,000 from the estate of the late R. H. Graves.

The South Church, East Hartford, Conn., has recived 28 members the last year, lessened its debt $2,780, and increased its S. S. library some seventy volumes.

EPISCOPAL.

An Episcopal church in Hartford, Conn., has voted that hereafter only baptized persons shall be employed in the choir.

The Easter offerings of the Church of the Messiah, Brooklyn, were sufficient to pay off the balance of the debt of $35,000.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL.

A new Reformed Episcopal Church is about to be established in Newark, N. J. The one which has for some time been in existence has enjoyed considerable prosperity, and it is thought that there is enough of the Reform Episcopal element in the city to maintain three active church organizations. The new one has secured a hall for present purposes and will maintain regular services. A number of energetic gentlemen have charge of the new enterprise and are determined to make it a success.

METHODIST.

Rev. H. M. Bachelor, M. D., a local preacher at Summit, N. J., has united with the Presbyterian church. He will probably be appointed missionary to Africa.

BAPTIST.

The Rev. Allen R. Beach, one of the oldest Baptist clergymen in the State of New York, died at Hamilton, Madison county, on Saturday evening. He was 83 years old.

Rochester Theological Seminary is to receive gifts from five well known laymen amounting to $136,000. The names of these generous men are J. B. Hoyt, J. B. Trevor, Charles Pratt, and the brothers Rockfeller. The gifts of the two latter are for a library and a library building, while that of the first is to endow the chair of Hebrew Language and Literature.

GENERAL.

The Biennial Conference of the Evangelical Alliance of the United States will be held in St. Louis, beginning October 28, 1879. There will be addresses on topics under Christian life and Christian work.

A Chinese mission and school was opened on Sunday last at No. 14 Mott street, New York. It will be in charge of Moy-Jin-Kee, a Christian Chinaman. Over 1,000 Chinese live in Mott street, where the mission is established as a central point.

DEATH OF MISS MAGGIE TOON.

Suddenly on May 10th in her twentieth year, died MAGGIE, daughter of the late William H. and Sarah Elizabeth Toon.

We might speak of her Christian loveliness and tell of a home lately so joyous, now so desolate; and of spirits overwhelmed by an affliction so startling and so awful. But it is not a time for words. Death is ever a transition from life in time to life eternal. In the full flush of health and engaged in the ministrations to which duty called, the summons came and earth exchanged for Heaven.

To live is well; to live with Christ far better.

SECULAR NEWS.

A bank to be called the Wachovia National Bank will go into operation at Winston, N. C., on June 1st.

A very important admiralty decision was made by Judge Brooks at the late session of the U. S. District Court in Wilmington. The U. S. Commissioner has made decisions taking cases in dispute between British seamen and the masters of vessels of that nationality out of the hands of the resident British vice-consul, Alexander Sprunt, Esq. A protest was made before the District Court by the consul, and the right of prior jurisdiction has been confirmed to the consulate.

The London Times thinks that the continued cold will probably cause a deficiency in the fruit and cereal crops, which means larger payments than usual to foreign growers and dearer money. On the Continent a deficiency is anticipated in the crop of raw silk and a consequent increase of flow of silver to China and Japan.

Mining troubles in Indiana. Strikes and threats of murder to those continuing work.

TO AGENTS.

It will not be practicable to write to each one of the Agents of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and ask them to continue their exertions. We now make the general request, and take occasion to thank them and all other friends for the disinterested kindness so fully and so constantly manifested in the past.

THE MOTOR.—We have seen the motor advertised by Dr. Thos. B. Carr. The advertisement very fully describes its operation. It seems to remove the objection so generally urged against sewing machines, of their putting an undue strain upon the lower muscles of the body.

Col. John L. Brown, at Charlotte, N. C., and Messrs. J. D. McNeely, at Salisbury; J. D. Williams, Fayetteville; W. S. Moore, Greensboro, N. C.; will receive and receipt for any subscriptions to this paper. The checks of these and many other agents, on their local banks of deposit, will be cashed here, without discount, and save expense of postal order or registration.

Mr. McNeely is Agent for the Missionary also.

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

We furnish gratis with one new subscriber at $2 65.

Every reader of this paper can have free one month's subscription to our Illustrated Magazine of choice literature, LEISURE HOURS, by sending eleven cents to pay for mailing the premium that goes with the magazine, viz: a pair of Easter Cross chromos. These crosses are entwined with calla lilies, ferns, grasses, &c. We shall feel fully repaid for this gift if the articles are shown to your friends. Catalogues of 1,000 desirable and curious articles sent to all; 1c and 2c stamps taken. Address J. L. PATTEN & CO., 47 Barclay street, New York.

MARRIED.

☞No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

At Hampden Sidney, Virginia, on the evening of April 30th, by the bride's father, Rev. ALEXANDER SPRUNT, of Winchester, Va., and NELLIE R., second daughter of Rev. Thos E. Peck, D. D., of Union Theological Seminary.

DIED.

☞Obituary notices must be paid for in advance. The first ten lines are inserted free. The excess over ten lines are charged for at the rate of ten cents per line. Correspondents can ascertain what an obituary will cost by counting eight words to a line, and multiplying each line by ten cents.

After years of suffering, and almost helplessness, departed this life, on the evening of May 2d, 1879, Mrs. SARAH McDONALD, aged as is supposed about 74 years.

For many years she was a member of McPherson church, and when it was dissolved in 1852, she was transferred to Galatia church.

When the old church was re-organized in 1867, she again became a member, and while health and strength lasted, she attended the house of God and took great delight in the services of the sanctuary.

She is not, for God took her.

In Franklin township, Sampson county, on the 6th inst., Mrs. MARY JANE INNIS, consort of Mr. James Innis after a protracted illness, aged 68 years.

Mrs. Innis was a consistent member of the Black River chapel and died as she lived in hopes of a glorious immortality.

NETTLETON CRAIG, a ruling elder in New Hope church, Orange county, died at the residence of his father, David Craig, on Friday morning, May 1st. He was about thirty years old, and the sole remaining prop of his family. His two older brothers had died in the Confederate army, and on him had developed the duty of attending to the declining years and infirmities of his good father and mother. He had lately been elected an elder in the church where his father had long served. In every respect, this Providence is most melancholy. Mr. Craig was a man of many excellent traits, and such as commanded the respect and regard of all who knew him. In the desolate home his place can never be filled; in the church he will be long missed; as a friend, neighbor and citizen the entire community will deplore him. C. P. S.

In Tarboro, N. C., on the morning of the 1st of May, EDDIE ROMEYNE, youngest child of the Hon. and Mrs. George Howard, aged 14 months.

"Jesus called them unto Him and said, Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God."

Feels Young Again.

"My mother was afflicted a long time with Neuralgia and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system; headache, nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters, with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over 70 years old. We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—A lady, Providence, R. I.

A DESIRABLE ARTICLE.

We verily believe that it would be rendering any family a very great service to introduce into it Kitto's Cyclopedia. This Cyclopædia is the work of John Kitto, D D., F. S. A., author of the "Pictorial Bible," the History and Physical Geography of Palestine, and editor of the Journal of Sacred Literature, etc., etc.

It is arranged expressly for Sunday School Superintendents, Teachers and Bible Students, and embraces a complete and authentic description of all the characters, customs, countries and events mentioned in the Bible, and those connected with them in Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, Grecian and Roman History. Including the period of over four hundred years between the Old and New Testaments, to which are added many valuable tables, and the products of the latest researches in Biblical literature, together with the knowledge gained by the explorations and discoveries of eminent travellers. The whole illustrated with numerous cuts, maps and full page engravings from the best authenticated models and designs that antiquarian research and ancient monuments can produce.

By special arrangement we can furnish this work well printed and bound in cloth, with the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN one year for $4 50—or to any new subscriber, or any one sending us a new subscriber, at $4 00 for paper and cyclopædia. Publishers price is $4 50.

NOTICE.

Romulus M. Johnston, Esq., agent of the Goldsboro Messenger, is authorized to receive and receipt for any money due us for old or new subscriptions. Our friends will oblige us by paying promptly. We will welcome any new subscribers.

TALBOTT'S PATENT SPARK ARRESTER
The Invention of the Age.

It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable. as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape).
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

TEN YEARS OF FEARFUL AGONISING SUFFERING CURED BY THE USE OF Swaims Panacea 40 pieces of bone as Relics — SWAIM'S CELEBRATED PANACEA

Mrs. Duran, No. 900 Dauphin St., Philadelphia, one of the most respectable ladies of that city, is not only willing, but desirous, to state for the information of any of her sex that they may know what remedy availed her after agonising suffering for ten long years (in which the disease, beginning one month after marriage, originating from no fault of hers, ravaged her entire system, and gradually spreading until she had 30 Ulcers at one time on one arm, and 20 on the other; having lost all the fingers on one hand, they rotting off; one parent dying broken hearted witnessing her suffering; she having had some sixteen physicians of Philadelphia, and the disease defying their skill,) that she found in SWAIM'S PANACEA the remedy she needed. In a few months after beginning on it she gained over 35 lbs. in weight, her ulcers all healed, and she has now some 40 pieces of bones as relics. She is in splendid health and returns grateful thanks to almighty God that she was directed to the use of this remedy. Pamphlets furnished gratis on application to Dr. Franklin Stewert, Swaim's Laboratory, 113 South Seventh St., below Chestnut, Philadelphia, Pa.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

"Screw the Finger as Tight as you can, that's rheumatism; one turn more, that's gout," is a familiar description of these two diseases. Though each may and does attack different parts of the system, the cause is believed to be a poisonous acid in the blood. Purify this by the use of
TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT.
It will do its work speedily and thoroughly. It is the great friend of the sufferer from rheumatism and gout.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS,
For Malarial Poisoning, Especially Hepatic Diseases and Malarial Fevers.
Testimony of Distinguished Medical Men:
MALARIOUS FEVERS.

Extract from Letter of Dr. Wm. T. Howard, of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, of August 1st, 1873:

Dr. Howard compares these waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

The Greenbrier White Sulphur Waters will be recognized by all informed upon such subjects as one of the most noted Mineral Fountains of the World.

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases: and more especially to the cachexia and sequels incident to MALARIOUS FEVERS IN ALL THEIR GRADES AND VARIETIES."

* * * * * * In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the BUFFALO SPRINGS, in Mecklenburg county, Virginia."

"The Buffalo Lithia Waters have unquestionably displayed great power in the peculiar diseases of the warm, miasmatic regions of the South, which may be grouped together under the general head of Malarial Cachexia, covering Hepatic Engorgements, Enlargements of the Spleen, Jaundice, &c."

"It is not pretended that these Waters possess any anti-periodic properties, such as belong to Quinine—At the same time, however, it is unquestionably true, that in the Intermittent and remittent fevers in a chronic form, they have in numerous instances, given relief in cases which had obstinately resisted all the anti-periodic drugs of the shops. From my experience with them, I feel fully warranted in saying that, with rare exceptions, whenever disease is found originating under malarial influence, a potent remedy may be found in this water."

Extract from a Letter of Dr. John C. Coleman, of Halifax county, Va., (prior to the War a surgeon of the U. S. Navy, now retired) dated near Scottsburg, Va., January 1st, 1879.

"Perhaps no claim made for the Buffalo Lithia Waters is more thoroughly established than that they are a powerful antidote to malarial poison in all its forms and varieties. In that large class of disorders, included in term Malarial Cachexia, embracing Engorgement of the Liver and Spleen, Jaundice, Indigestion, Dropsies and Neuralgias, of which the warm malarious districts of the South are so prolific, the action of these waters as a general rule is most decided and happy, and oftentimes astonishing. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, they are especially efficacious. I presume there is no season at these Springs in which some cases of this character do not find relief from these Waters, which have before baffled the healing art."

Extract from Letter of Dr. Alfred Plumber, of Manson, N. C., dated March 10, 1874.

"I have known the Buffalo Springs of Mecklenburg county, Va., for twenty-five years, and have sent many patients to them. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fever, and in all diseases originating in malarial poison, I have found their action almost that of a charm. I have sent young ladies to these Springs so enfeebled from this influence as to be scarcely able to walk across a floor, and in a few weeks they would become so invigorated as to be able to dance half of every night."

These springs open for guests the 1st day of June. The water in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00 per case at the springs. Springs pamphlets sent to any address.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Oh, Little Feet.

Oh, little feet, that such long years
Must wander on through doubts and fears,
Must ache and bleed beneath your load!
I, nearer to the wayside inn
Where toil shall cease and rest begin,
Am weary, thinking of your road.

Oh, little hands, that weak or strong
Have still to serve or rule so long,
Have still so long to give or ask!
I who so much, with book and pen,
Have toiled among my fellow-men.
Am weary, thinking of your task.

Oh, little hearts, that throb and beat
With such impatient, feverish heat,
Such limitless and strong desires!
Mine, that so long has glowed and burned
With passions into ashes turned,
Now covers and conceals its fires.

—Longfellow.

A Boy Emigrant in the Quaker City.

"It was a dismal winter evening," said the governess, "neither snow nor rain, but such a sleet! Sleet that sent that very day some of our Philadelphians with broken bones to the hospital. The circle, however, in the doctor's pleasant parlor took little notice of the storm. We were so comfortable, the ample grate glowing with coal, and the gas lighting up everthing. The doctor was resting in his large arm chair after the fatigues of the day, and dividing attention between his newspaper and the pursuits of his family. A five years' old girl was laughing merrily at a cat running after a string cut from the selvage of flannel we were making up for the poor. An older daughter was busy with slippers she was embroidering for her father, and the only son was poring with delight over his Virgil—the book so distasteful to most boys—and we all settled for the evening."

The servant girl suddenly threw open the door, and said in a slightly impatient tone, "An Irish beggar-boy at the basement door." She dared not neglect the doctor's strict order—"Never send away beggars until I see them, if I am in the house." And he went immediately to the basement. There stood a boy of about fourteen years—one of the most ill-clad, uncared-for fellows that beg or steal in the street, and looking half starved, too. Provisions were ordered and quickly devoured, while the boy passed through close scrutiny. Underneath the torn garments, wild, uncombed hair and unwashed face, was a clear eye, and a good-humored, intelligent expression. He said he had heard of the doctor, and wanted to get work. Only yesterday he had landed from an emigrant ship, and had been robbed of all his money. He had stopped for the night at a hotel on Market street. He had been put in a room with another boy whose friendly ways greatly cheered him. But in the morning his companion was not to be found. Going to his purse he found it empty and his bundle was gone.

"I felt very sore," he went on to say. "I ran to the landlord and told him how it was. He looked hard at me, and told me I lied. But he was afterwards kind, and gave me a good breakfast. He had changed his mind. I have had nothing to eat all day, and got no work. Nobody knows me, and I have no character; but I'll work anywhere, if I can earn a living."

"What kind of work do you want?"

"Any kind, sir."

The doctor looked about, and was quite at a loss. At last a thought struck him. There was a barrel of ashes mixed with a few bits of coal waiting to be carried out. And he turned to the boy.

"If you want to sift this coal from the cinders I will pay you." He set about it in good earnest, so that it was soon done. Putting some money in his hand, the doctor told him to call the next evening.

"Where are you going, dear papa, this dark night?" asked his little girl, anxiously—for he had taken down his overcoat and umbrella, and was putting on his heavy boots.

"Never mind, my dear;" and this always meant that there was to be no further questioning. He sallied forth on the slippery pavement from Walnut street, across Chestnut, till he found the little hotel on Market street. He inquired about the emigrant boy, and the landlord gave the same account he had already heard.

"That boy tells the truth," said he. "At first, I had no doubt he was lying—the old story, sir—scallawags are always crying robbed, robbed, to impose on you. But I understand their ways. This lad is straight forward, I was sorry for him, but in too much hurry to mind much. I let him have his breakfast and go.

All the way home the doctor was trying to think of some way to help the poor little stranger, and next day he went around among his business friends seeking employment for him. The answers he received were very curious.

"Anything on earth," said one, "but being bothered by a raw hand—above all, a fresh Irish boy."

"Just what I was wanting," said another, "only too late. I just engaged a boy yesterday."

"You ask me to take a strange boy," said a third. "Why, my last boy had to go to the penitentiary for stealing. I want a boy, but must know all about him beforehand."

Still the doctor did not lose heart. He was too familiar with work of this sort, and finally he secured a situation. The boy was to have $6 a month with board. He proved faithful and honest, and was full of energy. After seven months he found a place for himself with better wages, spending part of his evenings in study. Meantime, the doctor gave him advice in many ways.

Years rolled on. One cold evening we again gathered at the delightful home in Walnut street. The furniture and surroundings were not greatly changed. A small grandchild from the West and the mother were on a visit. The child's glee and a passage read aloud from the daily, imparted unusual life. The son had received the highest honors of his class at a New England college, and the youngest of the household was eager for the arrival of her father that he might hear of it. His "click" sounded at the front door, and he entered heartily into the common topic. But at the same time, and while caressing the baby who had rushed to to him with open arms, it was plain that he, too, had pleasant news. There was a happy smile on his benevolent face, his whole countenance fairly lighted.

"Father has found somebody to help," whispered the little girl, "and he is in fine spirits."

Coming up the street an unknown person had accosted him by name, heartily shaking his hand. He stopped, looked at him, and told him there was a mistake in the person.

"Don't you remember, sir, the little Irish boy that sifted your cinders one dark night to whom you gave a supper?" The doctor started. Before him was a handsome young man, well-dressed, with the air of a gentleman. He told his own story somewhat like this: "What a desperate night to me! without home, friends, or money! Refused employment or food all day! You, sir, took me up and made a man of me. I have been highly prospered ever since. My second situation I gave up. The master had a brain disease, and his exactions became unbearable. I was soon, however, in another situation still better, having received recommendations from both employers. I put money all the time in the bank, and now I have capital enough to go into business myself, and have settled in a neighboring city. But I want to thank you for your kindness. Without you, I never could have succeeded. To you alone under Providence I owe it all." He was obliged to hurry away for the night boat. But his loooks and his manner, even more than his words, showed the depth of his gratitude.

"It paid me a thousand times over," said the doctor, while a little mist gathered over his eyes. "They say I am sometimes duped. It may be true; and yet all the impositions of a lifetime are nothing to me—compared to one day like this.—Christian Inteligencer.

The Sugar Maple.

It is a pity that the sugar maple is not more extensively grown than it is at present. As an ornamental tree its outlines are very symmetrical when young, while in advanced years it usually assumes a diversity of form seemingly dependent on the soil and situation. It sometimes reaches the height of 70 or 80 feet, although it is generally considerably smaller, and it is remarkable for the brilliancy of its autumnal colors. As firewood it ranks next to hickory and is the most valuable wood we possess for charcoal. The curled and bird's eye varieties are prized for cabinet work and interior finishing, while the straight-grained kind is used for a number of household and artistic purposes as well as for ship-building.

Moreover, a maple orchard, or sugar bush, as it is called, is a source of no small income on a farm. The product is cane sugar, is cheaply and easily manufactured, and is preferable on some accounts to that from sugar cane. The syrup, too, as the best in the market, always finds a ready sale, brings a higher price than any other and some makers dispose of all their product in this form. According to the census of 1870 the total production of maple sugar in this country was 28,453,645 pounds. Twenty-eight different States contributed to the quantity, of which the following yielded the largest amounts: Vermont 8,894,302, New York 6,692,040, Ohio 3,469,128, New Hampshire 1,800,704, Pennsylvania 1,245,919, Indiana 1,332 332, Virginia and West Virginia 755,699, Wisconsin 507,192, Massachusetts 399,800, Kentucky 269,416. The total quantity of maple molasses or syrup was 921,057 gallons. Of course the actual production of both syrup and sugar must have been considerably greater than the amounts returned by the census, for in all such cases the sins of omission both on the part of canvassers and small makers are always numerous.

The industry is at present confined chiefly to the few States mentioned, with small contributions from the other States east of the Mississippi and north of the 40th parallel of latitude, for west of the Father of Waters the sugar maple is seldom met with, while in the Southern States it is found only along the mountains. The black sugar maple which Michaux classed as a distinct species, is now regarded as only a variety of the common kind, and is generally considered the most productive sort.—Rural New Yorker.

Unhappy Marriages.

The truth is that these too frequent "unhappy marriages" are the offspring of ignorance quite as much as of actual sin or wrong. Fools, and especially vicious fools, have no right to get possession of an honest woman's life and soul, which they cannot comprehend, and the elevating influence of which they throw away even more by stupidity than wilfulness. A woman, by her sex and character, has a claim to many things beside shelter, food and clothing. She is not less a woman for being wedded; and the man who is fit to be trusted with a good wife recollects all which this implies, and shows himself perpetually chivalrous, sweet-spoken, considerate and deferential. The fools and brutes who abound among us may think such demands hard, but they are not nearly so hard as to live the cat-and dog life, missing the dearest possibilities of human intercourse. What right has a man to expect happiness in a household who brings no sunshine into it? What right has he to look for the graces and refinements of early love when he violates them by rough speech, ill manners, and the disregard of those little things upon which the self-respect of a wife is built and maintained? The cynic who rails at marriage is generally one and the same with the thoughtless egotist who flings into the presence of his wife careless, stubborn, and sour-tempered. Let us have more social justice in these matters. The fate is horrible which a pure and faithful girl may endure by encountering in him whom she weds, not mere actual cruelty or injury, but stupid incompetence to understand a woman's needs, dull forgetfulness of the daily graces of life, and oblivion of the fact that while men have the world women have only their home. These grossenesses of masculine ingratitude do not, indeed, often lead to visible catastrophe, nor grow into such absolute tyranny, but they equally tend that way. They drag down a wife's soul to the point where she must despair; they change the sublime meaning of marriage to vulgarity and weariness; they spoil the chance of that best and finest of all education which each man obtains who wins a reasonable good woman for his companion, and they cost more to a million households than money or repentance can ever pay back.—Daily Telegraph.

Missionaries and Marriage Making.

When the Danish missionaries had secured the confidence of the Greenlanders, marriage was made a religious ceremony. Formerly the man married the woman by force. One of the missionaries writing in his journal describes the present style of courtship as follows:

The suitor coming to the missionary said, "I should like to have a wife." "Whom?" asks the missionary. The man names the woman. "Hast thou spoken to her?" Sometimes the man will answer, "Yes, but thou knowest womankind." More frequently the answer is "No." "Why not? It is difficult; girls are prudish. Thou must speak to her." The missionary summons the girl, and after a little conversation says, "I think it is time to have thee married." "What a pity! I had a suitor for thee." "Whom?" The missionary names the man who has sought his aid. "He is good for nothing; won't have him." "But," replies the missionary, "he is a good provider; he throws his harpoon with skill, and he loves thee." Though listening to his praise with evident pleasure the girl answers "I won't have him." "Well, I won't force thee. I shall soon find a wife for such a clever fellow." The missionary remains silent, as though he understood her "No" to have ended the matter. At last, with a sigh, she whispers, "Just as thou wilt have it." "No," replies the clergyman, "as thou wilt; I'll not persuade thee." Then, with a deep groan comes "Yes," and the matter is settled.

The Walled Lake.

In Iowa, one hundred and fifty miles west of Dubuque, lies what is known as the "Walled Lake," a body of water covering two thousand eight hundred acres, and whose surface is between two and three feet higher than the ground about it. In some places the water is twenty-six feet deep; it is clear and cold, and has no apparent inlet or outlet. It is confined by a wall of stone, in some places ten feet high and fifteen thick at the base. The stones used in building it vary in size, from about one hundred pounds to three tons. In the country around the lake there are no other stones within a circuit of five or ten miles, but a belt of woodland composed of oak makes the entire circumference of it. It is thought that the trees were planted at the time the wall was built, and for that reason the wall cannot be of great antiquity. The Dubuque Herald says, however, that no one can form an idea as to the means employed to bring the stones, or who constructed the wall. In the Spring of 1856, during a heavy storm, the ice on the lake broke down the wall in several places and the farmers in the neighborhood were obliged to repair the damage to prevent an inundation.

A Robe of Glass.

In the large basement room of the home of S. Isaacs, at No. 1434 Mission Street, between Tenth and Eleventh, is now weaving the most wonderful fabric of which the voluminous history of unique feminine apparel furnishes any account. It is the material, as flexible as the finest of silk and as durable as Blue Jeans William's favorite stuff for trousers, for a lady's dress, and it is woven by the world-renowned artist in glasswork, Prof. Theodore Greiner, out of the innumerable colored strands of glass first spun by himself. Compared with the completed garment, the mythical glass slipper of the fabulous Cinderella will sink into as vulgar an insignificance as an exhausted Napa soda-bottle. A Chronicle reporter called on him recently, and he very courteously showed him the entire process. Breaking an extra piece out of the soiled bottom of an already broken tumbler, he submitted it to the heat of a blow-pipe until it became incandescent and soft. Then with a "stick" of glass he touched the molten portion, and with an expert motion, which may be described as a flip, he carried a thread so fine that it was almost invisible till it caught on the disc of a slowly-revolving wide wooden wheel of nineteen feet circumference. At a certain number of revolutions the strand was complete, and the wheel was stopped and it is removed. It then consisted of innumerable softly glistening threads, finer than the finest of floss silk. These strands are spun of all colors, and are then washed in a solution of water and beet-root sugar, which toughens them. The spinning is all done and occupied many weeks. The weaving is done on an old-fashioned hand-loom, the warp being nineteen feet long and the woof four feet, so that the material will cut to advantage. Only about ten inches a day can be woven, and the whole piece will not be completed until some time in April.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Fertilizers for House Plants.

When a plant is in a bad condition, it is a mistake to apply a stimulating fertilizer. The causes of ill-health are many, but the most general one with those who have no experience in the care of plants is, over-watering. Plants, to live, must have water, therefore the more water the better seems to be the reasoning, and the consequence is starved, nearly leafless sticks in pots of mud. In the majority of cases withholding the water is the one thing needed, and with invalids, a stimulating fertilizer is the one thing, of all others, not needed. When plants are in a flourishing condition and making growth, then fertilizers may be useful, especially if the soil in the pots was originally rather poor. Any of the fertilizers used in the garden would answer for plants in the house, were it not necessary to avoid unpleasant odors, and to consult neatness and ease of application. For hard-wooded, slow-growing plants very fine bone—flour of bone—sold by seedsmen for the purpose; is perhaps the best; a few table-spoons being forked into the soil of the pot. For soft-wooded quick growers, a liquid fertiliser may be used. This may be guano, a teaspoonful to a gallon of water; soot, two tablespoonsful to a gallon, or the Water of Ammonia [Liquid Hartshorn] of the drug store, an ounce to the gallon. Water the plants with either of these instead of clear water, once or twice a week, as the condition of the plant requires. No invariable rule can be given.—Am. Agriculturist.

Gladstone.

The ex-Premier is tall and spare, and a little stooped. The hair has long since forsaken the upper portions of his head, and the locks that still remain are blanched like the snow. He wears no beard, except about the temples and low down upon the neck, so as mostly to be hidden by his standing collar. At a distance he appears to have no beard. His dress was that of a countryman who does not hold the tailor's art in much esteem. His coat looked old, was wrinkled, and hung loosely upon him. His necktie was somewhat awry. There was not the faintest idea of varnish about him. All seemed simple and unaffected, and in keeping with the character of the man. His face is an earnest, thoughtful one, and full of dignity and consciousness of his own strength. He seems a man born to lead and command, and a nobler countenance I have never looked upon.

It is well-known that English speakers do not very far cultivate the graces of oratory; the matter may be good, but the manner is generally bad. To some extent Mr. Gladstone may be said not to transgress the orthodox rule in this particular. He does not gesticulate much, and the papers make a point of noticing that he did gesticulate on this occasion.

SECULAR NEWS.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Aldermen of the city of Wilmington enacted that a fine of $50, or imprisonment for thirty days, should be the penalty for enticing seamen from vessels in that port.

The Mississippi valley labor convention assembled in session on the 6th inst., adopted several resolutions as to the causes operating to produce the exodus of negroes, and pledging their influence to the end that negroes should enjoy all rights, civil and political, guaranteed them by the Constitution and laws.

The celebrated Cox-Alston case in Atlanta, Ga., has been concluded. The jury brought in a verdict of guilty of murder against Cox, and recommended that he be imprisoned for life. A recent law of the State allows the jury to commute the death penalty to that of life imprisonment. This virtually abolishes the death penalty. Cox is the first man to receive the benefit of this law. The wife of the prisoner was in court when the verdict was pronounced and went wild with grief. Her shrieks were heartrending and she attempted to throw herself from the window.

DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression Dr. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. MCLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

AN ARGUMENT FOR CHRISTIAN LIBERALITY DRAWN FROM THE SACRIFICE OF CHRIST.

The doctrine of Christian liberality is one of supreme importance. It is clearly taught in the Word of God, the only infallible standard of faith and practice. The same divine volume which inculcates the vital dogmas of regeneration, faith, justification, adoption and sanctification, teaches with equal authority the doctrine of Christian benevolence, and it is entitled to our most profound respect, most ardent love and most faithful practice. Now, the Church is essentially a spiritual institution, but it is dependent, to some extent, upon human agencies for the successful prosecution of its work. It has been founded by God among men and for men, and must be carried on by men. As in nature and providence, so in the Church Jesus Christ works by means. Hence, so far as human instrumentality is concerned, the Church is dependent upon the liberal contributions of her members for her sustentation and extension, and she will need these contributions until millenial glory shall flood this rained sphere. The most potent argument, we think, for Christian liberality is found in the great sacrifice of Jesus Christ on sacred Calvary. The true test of love is sacrifice, and as Jesus sacrificed the unparalleled glories of heaven to die in agony and ignominy on the cross as a manifestation of His infinite love for hell-deserving sinners, so should His followers exhibit their love for Him and His blood-bought Church by continued sacrifices. That we may fully appreciate this grand scriptural argument for giving, let us conder,

1. Christ's estate before His incarnation. He was infinitely rich and happy. It is absolutely impossible for finite minds to form adequate conceptions of the riches which Christ possessed in the bosom of the Father before the world was. We cannot fathom the depth of the incomprehensible God in His triune relations, and explain the manner and degree of His happiness in these relations. But from the nature of the case there must have been perfect harmony and happiness between the three Persons of the Godhead from eternity. The Scriptures tell us that God the Father was to God the Son a perennial Source of uncreated, unalloyed and boundless beatitude. This ineffable felicity Jesus Himself says He enjoyed before the universe actually existed, and the countless orbs were evolved from nothingness. "Then I was by Him, as one brought up with Him; and I was daily His delight, and rejoicing always before Him." (Prov. viii: 30.) He was infinitely exalted above human infirmities and frailties, to which He was subjected when He became incarnate. He knew nothing of His Father's wrath until He consented to become our surety. He knew nothing experimentally of the privations of poverty; nor the sufferings and pains of mortals; nor had He uttered the heartrending cries of the garden and Calvary, nor experienced their unwonted agonies. He was rich in His Father's uninterrupted love, rich in the plenitude of the divine perfections, rich in being one with the Father in essence and attributes, rich in being partaker of His Father's essential and eternal glory, rich in the boundless, ceaseless, perfect holiness and happiness of the infinite God. He was independent of all creatures for this immense wealth. All the creatures in the universe, whether animate or inanimate, could not have added one unit to His original riches. But did Jesus remain in this state of exaltation and riches? Let sinners adore as they read, "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was rich yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye, through His poverty, might be rich." (2 Cor. viii: 9.) Hence,

2. Christ's estate after He became incarnate. It was one of abject poverty and disgrace. He emptied Himself of His primeval glories and humbled Himself. (Phil. 2: 7.) He assumed a "true body and reasonable soul," and became a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." What transcendent humiliation for God's only begotten Son to assume human nature with its sinless infirmities! It would be a great degradation to the orb of day to disrobe him of his gorgeous mantle and reduce him to an opaque atom, or cause one of angelic order to become a loathsome worm; but for the second Person of the adorable Trinity to become man, and not only this but a poor man, is humiliation beyond degree. He was poor in His origin, poor in His life, and poor in His death. His were not regal parents, nor did the angel band sing His natal song over a splendid palace. He said, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay His head." (Mat. viii: 20.) He did not enjoy the comforts and luxuries of life, and was despised of His countrymen. And as the King of glory is King only of the poor in spirit, so He was Himself very humble. "Take My yoke and learn of Me: for I am meek and lowly heart." (Mat. xi: 29.) He stooped to the most menial service, washing the disciples' feet. The Hebrews expected Him to come as a temporal Prince and deliver them from civil bondage, and institute a glorious universal kingdom on earth; and when He came as a spiritual Ruler in such extraordinary poverty and humility; they despised and rejected Him. When, too, He was crucified He was not laid in His own tomb. Remarkable Man! Contemplate the wonderful contrast between His heavenly and earthly states. In heaven He was crowned with glories; on earth He was environed with miseries. If we were kings would we be willing to become paupers? But

3. What was the motive by which Christ was actuated in exchanging a sinless heaven for a sinful earth, and the supernal beauties and felicities of the former for the privations and toils of the latter? Was it because sinners merited salvation at His hands? By no means. The very opposite is true; for God's justice clamored for their eternal damnation. Adam had not fulfilled the covenant of works, and hence he forfeited its promises. Was it because man was a rational and religious being of high order? By no means; for He hurled the angels that sinned from the realms of amaranthine glory to the fiery prison-house of Tophet and them "He hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day." (Jude vi.) The motive was no other than free, unbounded, undeserved love for fallen beings. When sin was tolling the knell of the funeral of sinners, and they were being carried in the spacious hearse of time to their eternal doom, the great heart of Jesus moves for them, and He leaves the ineffable beatitudes of His Father's bosom, and releasing them from the thraldom of sin changes the knells of sorrow to the peals of joy. Jesus, with garments dyed in blood, now proclaims peace between man and God. O, the length and breadth and depth and heighth of this immeasurable love! Did David love Jonathan with a love passing the love of women? Jesus loved sinners more. Do Christians love Jesus, when they meditate upon His dying love and the wonders of His grace? Jesus loved sinners more. Do the ransomed throng, robed in white, sing in celestial strains the praises of Jesus' love? Jesus loved sinners more. Do the holy intelligences in glory love each other and God freely, continually, perfectly? Jesus loved sinners more. All creatures are capable only of finite love, but the love of Jesus for His enemies was infinite.

4. The last thing to be considered is the object of Jesus Christ's incarnation and death. This was the salvation of sinners. He desired to crown them with immortal glory, beyond the shades of the grave. He became poor that panpers, through His poverty, might be rich. We are in the midst of wonders. It is a wonder that Jesus would consent to leave the inconceivable happiness of His Father's bosom. It is a wonder that He would deign to become a man, a poor man. It is a wonder that He could love such sinful and unlovely creatures as we are. It is a wonder that He would come and die for the objects of His love. We can do nothing but wonder and adore, and doubtless we will study sublime mysteries as long as the endless cycles of eternity roll. Now, in the Scriptures these are rich who have the graces of the Spirit, such as "love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." By nature we have none of these in a Christian sense. By nature we have natural-but no supernatural affections. Jesus Christ, by His Spirit, gives us all of these. He gives us the riches of His grace here, and the riches of His glory hereafter. By His grace we are regenerated, sanctified, saved. He gives us grace to bear the prosperities and adversities of life; grace to discharge our various duties; grace to resist the subtle temptations of the great adversary of our souls, to conquer our sinful appetites and passions, and to withstand the allurements of an evil world; grace to love God and men, yea, even our enemies; grace to rejoice in tribulations; grace to look with the eye of faith beyond the cloudy skies of earth to the cloudless skies of heaven; grace to produce a sweet consciousness of peace with God, and conscience through justifying faith; grace to give us security against the fiery darts of the wicked one, and make us tranquil before the muttering thunders of the law; grace to be contented with our temporal estate; grace to be patient in enduring injuries; grace to be temperate in the good things of this life, as well as in thought, word and deed; grace to sacrifice our time, talents, means, influence and ourselves to Him, as a manifestation of love and gratitude; grace to be kind, tender-hearted, gentle and humble; grace to trust Him implicitly in the various circumstances of life; grace to unfold new beauties and learn new lessons from nature, providence and His written Word; grace to treasure up and practice His commands and precepts; grace to rely upon and receive heavenly consolation from His precious promises; grace to examine ourselves, meditate, pray and praise; grace to practice self-denial, self-renunciation and devotion, and grace to face the appalling King of Terrors, and exclaim triumphantly, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" (1 Cor. xv: 55.) These are some of the priceless jewels that Christians obtain without money and without price from the unfailing riches of Jesus' grace. O, how rich is the Christian! He is united to Jesus by faith and possesses everything. (1 Cor. iii: 21.) O, how poor is the sinner! He is not united to Jesus by faith, and possesses nothing. Jesus also secures for believers the riches of His glory. Think of a place of perfection, beauty and glory, where the baleful influences of sin and Satan are expelled, where Jesus, in His exaltation, reigns in eternal peace and love. Heaven must be a place and state of fathomless, endless, boundless, spotless blessedness, because it is prepared by a God of infinite resources of happiness. Jesus Christ has purchased all these things at wondrous cost for us.

Now the conclusion from the preceding remarks is this: that as Jesus Christ was infinitely rich before His incarnation, and being actuated by free, unbounded love for sinners, became poor in order that we might enjoy the riches of His grace and glory, so we should make great sacrifice for Jesus and thus manifest our love for Him. Jesus gave His life for us; what have we given for Him? Jesus is the great example of liberality. If an exhibition of Jesus' love for sinners will not move their hearts to give liberally and cheerfully, they must be as dark with sin and as hard in vice as the adamantine walls of the pit. Can any genuine Christian venture near dismal Gethsemane and see through its shades, the Lamb of God sweating great drops of blood and hear Him pour forth His exceeding bitter cry: "O My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me," and can he follow the Lamb to Calvary and stand by the cross and see His dying agonies and hear His poignant cries, and go away with the reflection, that all these sufferings are for him, and not be willing to give his money in support of Jesus' Church? If he can he must love his money more than he loves Jesus; and unless he repent, both he and his money must burn together in endless flames. If we love our property, or even our lives more than we love Jesus we cannot be His disciples—Luke 14: 26. Are there not many millionaires in this world, who will be paupers in the next? O Christians we need more devotion to Jesus and love for the Church dear to His soul. Should we not be willing to deny ourselves some of the luxuries, and even necessities of life, to support the cause of Jesus, when we remember that He denied Himself the inexpressible delights of His Father's bosom for our sakes? Will we devise plan after plan to accumulate worldly possessions, which time will corrode and the fires of the final day utterly consume, to gratify our love for money and pleasure, when we remember that Jesus became poor that we might have unfading wealth in heaven? Can we be illiberal when we contemplate Jesus' infinite love for sinners, and will we dishonor the divine love by our niggardly contributions? Dare we give a contemptible trifle to advance the cause which God has espoused, when we consume ten times as much upon lusts; when we know that we must appear before the great tribunal of Jesus, with the great assemblage of angels and men, to render a strict account of the disposition we have made of our property? Think O Christian, think again, what Jesus has done for you, and then think what you have done for Him. For you He left His Father's bosom and became incarnate and suffered prayed and wept and sweat and sorrowed and toiled and bled and died. What hast thou done for Him? Have we "assurance of God's love, peace of conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, increase of grace" and will we persevere therein to the end? These unspeakable blessings were purchased by Jesus. Do we enjoy the heavenly blessings of the Christian religion? Are we cheered by promises, refreshed by its glorious truths and encouraged by the cordial sympathies of its divine Author? These favors are results of Jesus' sacrifice. Millions of the human race are pressing toward the blackness of darkness forever in total ignorance of Jesus and His love; and column after column, year after year enters the gates of the infernal city, their final restless place. Are we striving to send them the gospel? God grant that our love for Jesus may become more ardent and self-sacrificing, when we remember that He first loved us. Grant that pentecostal showers may water our Christian graces and cause them to bear much fruit. Grant that the miserly may become liberal and the liberal more liberal, and all who bear the Christian name, who profess to have been emancipated from the slavery of death, may not scandalize the cross, by professing one thing and being another; and turning traitors in the camp of Jesus, be instrumental in dragging His blood-stained standard in the dust, amid the scoffs of an ungodly world and the jeers of hell. Grant that we may act some part by our liberal contributions, in hastening millennial glory when the heavens shall ring with the accumulations of millions redeemed by the blood of the Lamb of God.

PRESBYTERY OF MECKLENBURG.

AT CASTANEA GROVE CHURCH, GASTON COUNTY N. C., REV. S. H. CHESTER PASTOR, MAY 25, 1879.

OFFICIAL.

Presbytery met at 11 o'clock A. M. Friday May 2d, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. E. H. Harding from the text: "And the life;" John xiv: 6. There were present forty members, twenty ministers and twenty elders. Rev. Geo. L. Cook was elected Moderator, and Revs. M. R. Kirkpatrick and Wm. H. Michal clerks.

A committee previously appointed reported the organization of a Church at Huntersville, in Mecklenburg county. The name of the church was enrolled, and the representative elder, J. H. McClintock took his seat as member of Presbytery. Excuses for absence were presented from Rev. J. Douglas, D. T. Towles, Wm. Graves, J. E. Morrison, S. C. Alexander and Wm. M. McGilvary.

Licentiates—Mr. Wm. B. Arrowood, licentiate, was dismissed at his own request to Montgomery Presbytery, and Mr. D. McQueen, licentiate, was dismissed at his own request to Augusta Presbytery. Mr. John H. Dixon was licensed to preach.

Calls—From Franklin, Morrison and Hiwassee churches for the pastoral services of Rev. M. R. Kirkpatrick, were placed in his Hands. At the request of Mallard Creek church the pastor, Rev. Walter W. Pharr, was permitted to give that church three-fourths of his time.

A communication from the session of Sugar Creek church was read, and Rev. Wm. E. McIlwain and elder Scarr, of Charlotte First church, were appointed to visit the congregation and report touching the same.

Ramah and Huntersville churches were allowed to employ Rev. J. F. Latimer (each) half his time. Sharon was allowed to employ Rev. E. P. Robinson till next meeting and to endeavor to establish the pastorate.

Commissioners—Revs. J. F. Latimer and S. T. Martin and elders R. D. Johnston, of Charlotte Second church and B. W. Moore, of Franklin church, were appointed commissioners to the General Assembly; and Rev G. D. Parks, Revs. Wm. E. McIlwane and J. A. Reedy and Wm. H. Michal, (of Lincolnton Church,) were made alternates respectively.

Candidates—The Agent of Education—Rev. J. F. Latimer—made a report touching the candidates under care of Presbytery, and Rev. E. H. Harding and Rev. Wm. E. McIlwain, and elders J. H. Foust and Julius Alexander were appointed to act with the agent. Mr. James Cornelius Oehlor, member of Ramah Church, and Walter Wm. Moore, of Charlotte First Church were received as candidates,

A sketch of the life and labors of the Rev. H. H. Banks, deceased, was read by Rev. A. W. Miller, D. D., and adopted.

The stated clerk was directed to address churches which failed to raise assessments for the Evangelistic Fund.

Presbytery resolved not to license candidates until they have completed the required course of studies, except in extraordinary cases.

Records of Session—The records of sessions of the following churches were examined and reviewed: Sugar Creek, Steele Creek, P. Hill, Providence, Pineville, Hopewell, Philadelphia, Goshen, Long Creek, Olney, Ramah, New Hope, Caldwell, Little Brittain, Charlotte First and Second Churches, Lincolnton, Dallas, Mallard Creek, Sharon, Unity, Castanea, Hiwassee, Asheville, Franklin, Morrison, Union, Mills River, Hendersonville, Monroe, Wadesboro and Huntersville.

Reports were received from all the churches except Machpelah, Lebanon, Sandy Plains, Matthews, Red Oak, Swannanoa and Hephzibah, from which Presbyterial statistics, narrative and Sunday school report were compiled and ordered to be forwarded to the General Assembly.

Rev. R. Z. Johnston and Rev. S. H. Chester were appointed to raise the Manual of Presbytery and report at next meeting.

Overtures—Presbytery sent overture to General Assembly to raise a committee to prepare a paper upon the doctrine of the Diaconate with special reference to its relations to the agencies of the Church.

The following overture to the Synod of North Carolina was adopted:

WHEREAS the Presbytery of Mecklenburg did overture the Synod of North Carolina to appoint a Committee on Publication to consider the whole subject, watch the progress of events and report to the Synod; and, whereas the Synod at its session in Charlotte did take the action asked for in this overture, and did appoint said committee; and, whereas the said committee in obedience to instructions of Synod, did send its report to the Synod during its late session in Goldsboro; and, whereas the Moderator, Rev. J. R. Wilson, D. D., did rule that the report could not be received because there was no mention of such action and the raising of such committee, in the printed minutes, notwithstanding there could be no question about the facts of the case, because this action was published in the editorial colmns of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN and in the abstract of Synod proceedings in the other religious papers, and because the error in the printed minutes was noticed in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN by the stated clerk, whose untimely death prevented any investigation at Goldsboro. Therefore,

Resolved, That the Synod is hereby requested to decide whether the absence from the printed minutes of a church court suffices to nullify the action of said court.

2d. That the Synod be asked to order the reception of the report of the committee that the committee may be discharged.

Presbytery pleased with report of the minister (Rev. R. A. Miller) in Union and Anson counties, directed the Committe of Sustentation to place another minister in that field so soon as the funds at their command will permit

Colportage—The committee in charge of this work was instructed to proceed with it as soon as the way is clear to do so; and the Stated Clerk was directed to address the churches which have failed to contribute to this cause as required at last spring meeting.

The following was adopted as a substitute for rule first of the standing rules of Presbytery:

Rule I. At each regular meeting of Presbytery, the stated clerk—or in his absence—the temporary clerk shall call the roll of the churches according to date of organization, and the preaching and ruling elders representing the same, shall report the names for enrolment as members of Presbytery.

A communication from elders and deacons' convention was read and ministers directed to instruct their people on the mutual duties of elders and people.

Presbytery adopted a report on the minutes of Synod and left it in hands of the committee (Rev. A. W. Miller, D. D., chairman) with instruction to forward it for publication in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN.

In Regard to Candidates.—The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, 1. That it be made a standing rule that the consideration of the report of the Agent of Education, and all matters pertaining to the appropriation of funds to candidates shall be conducted in interlocutory session.

2. That the examination of candidates for the ministry, on religious experience and motives for seeking the gospel ministry, shall be thorough and extended and conducted in interlocutory session, and that after the examination the candidates shall withdraw that the Presbytery may deliberate and vote.

3. Resolved, That in all ordinary cases before the license of any candidate, Presbytery shall hold an interlocutory session for deliberation and vote.

4. Resolved, That before receiving under our care any candidate for the gospel ministry, he shall furnish the Presbytery with a recommendation from the session of the church of which he is a member.

Conference on Revivals—Presbytery appointed a conference to be held on Saturday afternoon, during next meeting, on the subject of revivals, and appointed Revs. W. H. Davis and Walter W. Pharr to open the discussion.

Evangelists.—Rev. S. C. Alexander was appointed evangelist for the counties of Cherokee, Graham, Swain and Jackson, and this cause was commended to the liberality of our people.

WHAT WE NEED.

A heart that ever overflows
With love for all its kind,
And pitying weak humanity,
To errors oft is blind;
A hand that in the cause of right
Is lifted, not for greed—
These two, combined with a clear head,
Make just the men we need.

A darling, such as makes a home
Seem brighter every day,
With willing steps and sweet, soft mien,
Whose words like music play;
Whose mind o'er dress and fashion soars,
And worth 'neath labor sees,
Looking for good in everything—
We want such girls as these.

WOMEN PREACHERS.

EDITOR OBSERVER:—We read in the Observer of May 4th a learned defence of "women preachers," prepared, we presume, by one of our most distinguished and able citizens. Believing, however, as we do, that women are prohibited from preaching by the plain teachings of the New Testament, and that your contributor is in error, we ask space in the columns of your paper to present our views on this important question.

Of the import and ultimate design of this new departure in Southern Christianity, we shall at present say nothing. That our people are almost wholly in the dark in these particulars, is to their credit for honesty of purpose and refined Christian civilization. The able defender of women preachers lays much stress on the term "prophecy," as used in 1 Cor. 12: 4, 5.

"Prophecy," he says, "is defined to be 'the inspired utterance of God's will in respect to the way of salvation, including also, as an occasional part of it, the foretelling future events.'"

"But," says he, "the term, 'shall prophecy,' as used in Acts 2: 18, is defined, 'proclaim the will of God;' used again in other places 'praying,' 'teaching, and 'prophesying' are spoken of as substantially the same thing."

We do not fully accept this definition. The original meaning of the word prophecy implies the capacity and office of foretelling future events; and is so used throughout the Old and New Testament Scriptures.

As the prophets explained the messages to the people and warned them of the consequences of the sin of disobedience, they were sometimes regarded as teachers. But in Romans 12: 6, the Apostle mentions the different classes of gifts or endowments which Christians have, and exhorted them to discharge aright the duty which results from the rank or office which they held in the Church. He says, "Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given unto us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering; or he that teacheth on teaching, &c;" showing that these were different gifts or offices, and not "substantially the same thing."

In this connection Dr. Barnes, the learned Presbyterian commentator says, "the word "prophecy" properly means to predict future events; the word minister means servant, and teacher denotes one who instructs or communicates knowledge. It is clear that it is used to denote a class of persons different in some respects from those who prophesied, and from those who exhorted."

These different offices or gifts in the early Church had their regular order of position and importance. We see this clearly stated in Acts 13: 1. "Now there were in the Church that was at Antioch, prophets and teachers, &c." And again in 1 Cor. 12: 28, we read: "And God hath set some in the church—first apostles; secondarily prophets; thirdly teachers; after that miracles; then gifts of healing helps, governments, diversities of tongues." In 29th verse he asks: "Are all apostles? Are all prophets? Are all workers of miracles?" &c., plainly showing that these were not the same.

That there were prophets and teachers in the apostolic age of the Church is abundantly evident. As it had been predicted by the prophet Joel 2d chapter and 28th verse, in the day of Christ the "sons and daughters" did "prophesy," and God did "pour out His spirit upon His servants and upon his handmaidens," and they did prophesy. But Peter tells us that this was all fulfilled or accomplished on the day of Pentecost. In Acts 2: 16, Peter says: "But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel." This positive declaration of the Apostle Peter leaves no room for doubt, even in the minds of the most skeptical. That the gift of prophecy continued in the Church during the life of the apostles is more than probable. We have reason to believe that all these gifts or offices were continued while the office and gifts of the apostleship continued. It is also admitted that there were female prophets—the four daughters of Philip, the Evangelist, and Anna, the prophetess, possessed the gift of foretelling future events in the Apostolic Church. Of this gift of prophecy Dr. Barnes says: "The office of the endowment, was temporary, designed for the settlement and establishment of the Church; and then, like the apostolic office, having accomplished its purpose, to be disused and cease." Everybody admits this. There are no apostles or prophets in this day of the Church's history, and have never been since the death of the Apostle John. The prophet's of the apostolic age spoke by inspiration. For one, either male or female, to pretend to inspiration in this age of the Church, after these gifts have ceased for nearly 1,800 years, is absurd even to the common judgment of mankind. Our women preachers of to-day are not the successors of the female prophets of the New Testament, as their defenders argue, and the attempt to so represent them is indicrous in the extremo. They are not prophetesses; they are not inspired; both the office and gift having ceased centuries ago.

But, says your correspondent, "Paul gives directions that when a man prays or prophecies' he shall have head uncovered; but when a woman 'prays or prophesies' she shall have her head covered, probably not because it is indispensable that it shall be so, but because it looks better."

To this we reply in the language of a most learned commentator. Dr. Barnes, in explaining this passage, says "That they (the women in the church at Corinth) prayed is clear; and that they publicly expounded the will of God is apparent also. As the presumption is, however, that they were inspired, this example is no warrant now for females to take part in public worship, unless they also give evidence that they are under the influence of inspiration, and the more especially as the Apostle Paul has expressly forbidden their becoming public teachers." I. Tim., chap. 2, 12th verse: "If it is now pleaded from this example, that women should speak and pray in public, yet it should be just so far only as this example goes, and it should be only when they have the qualifications that the early propheteisses had in the Christian Church. If there are any such—if any are directly inspired by God, then there will be an evident propriety that they should publicly proclaim his will, and not till then. It may be further observed, however, that the fact that Paul here mentions the custom of women praying or speaking in the church does not prove that it was right or proper. His immediate object now was not to consider whether the practice was itself right, but to condemn the manner of its performance as a violation of all the proper rules of modesty and subordination. On another occasion in this very epistle, he fully condemns the practice in any form, and enjoins silence on female members of the churches in public; chap. 14th and 34th.

Dr. Barnes is sustained in his interpretation by Conybeare and Howson in their learned commentary on the Life and Epistles of St. Paul, and indeed by nearly all of the learned commentators and Biblical scholars in the whole history of Biblical interpretion. This has been the understanding of the church in all ages. The Roman Catholics, Greeks, Presbyterians, Episcopalians and Baptists, and indeed all men, up to the last few centuries, clearly understood the Scriptures as prohibiting the public ministry of women. The new doctrine came to light in the strange and unsettled teachings of George Fox, the founder of the Quakers in 1684. He held and taught his followers that scriptures were but a secondary rule, subordinate to the spirit, and that the divine revelations made to the Quaker men and women were not to be subject to the examination either of the testimony of Scripture or to the natural reason of men. We are not surprised, therefore, that the Quakers, who thus virtually reject the authority of the Bible, allow their women to preach contrary to its plain prohibitions.

Mr. Robert Barclay, the great expounder and defender of Quakerism says, in speaking of preaching: "It is left to the free gift of God to choose any whom he seeth meet thereunto, whether rich or poor, servant or master, young or old, yea, male or female." * * * "When God moved by his spirit in a woman, we judge it no way unlawful for her to preach in the assemblies of God's people." Your learned defender of the women preachers seems to agree fully with this rejecter of Scripture authority and resorts to special inspiration, or call of the spirit, both of which are unscriptural, if not wholly absurd. It is by this rejection of Scripture authority that the Quakers repudiate all the ordinances of the New Testament. The ordinances of baptism and the Lord's supper, they say, "are to be taken in a spiritual sense, there being no need of outward ordinances."

But does anyone suppose it possible for the whole Christian world to have been wrong in these matters, and that God left it to these people, and this late day, to discover the truth of his word? The very supposition is preposterous.

The last and closing argument of this defender is as follows:

"And above all, if it be wrong for women to prophesy, why does God confer upon them the spirit of prophecy? And if it be wrong for them to preach, why does God bless their labors with hundreds of converts?"

This shows the writer's capacity in special pleading. "Why does God confer upon them the spirit of prophecy?" asks your contributor in triumph. Has God conferred upon them this spirit? We did not know that God had conferred upon these women the spirit of prophecy, and we never heard before that they pretended to prophesy. Are they inspired? Have they been foretelling future events? Are they able to prophesy? Do they even pretend to be able to foretell what is to be? We neither believe that God has thus endowed these women, nor that they are silly enough to claim such wonderful power. Paul tells us that the gifts of "prophecy" and "tongues" and "miracles" were to pass away. And history as well as human experience plainly proves that these gifts and offices in the Christian Church were done in the first century of the Church's history. And if, says he, it be wrong for them to preach, why does God bless their labors with hundreds of converts?" This seems, after all, to be the argument for the preaching of women and for allowing them to preach in some of the churches. They succeed, and whatever is successful is right, no matter what men say, and no matter what the Bible teaches—God blesses His Word. Wherever the Gospel is preached, whether it be preached through envy or strife, or to add to the bonds of any of His servants, God will bless His Truth, and make it the savor of life to them that believe. That some good will be accomplished by the preaching of women, we are prepared to admit. God forbid that the results should be wholly evil.

But the mere fact that some good is accomplished, or that hundreds of converts are made is, after all, no argument in favor of such ministrations, and does not prove that God's blessing rests upon the instruments employed, but upon the truth. Success is no proof that the means used is of divine appointment. God often blessed His truth, by whatever instrumentality it may be made known. It is by no means safe to judge of a measure by the success which seems to attend it. But no one knows better than the defender of "women preachers" how men and women are influenced, how converts to new and striking theories are made, or how little importance is to be attached to the mere fact that success attends certain persistent and well directed efforts.

No one can say that the result will be wholly beneficial.

Are we ready for the sake of apparent success to ignore the plain teachings of God's Word, to do violence to all our ideas of female modesty and deportment, and to hazard our most sacred interests?—Cor. Raleigh Observer.

Persons of the higher classes in Spain receive copies of the Gospels in paper covers through the mails. The Spanish Evangelization Society sends them.

The sound of the organ in public worship in Glasgow cathedral was heard on Sunday, April 13th, for the first time these three hundred years.

The Vatican and Germany have come to a common determination to keep absolutely secret all future negotiations, thinking that the polemics of the press influence them unfavorably.

The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge has just published in the Roman character a translation of the Psalms of David in Sea-Dyak, one of the numerous languages of the Island of Borneo, by the Rev. J. Perham, missionary in Sarawak.

In a charge to his clergy, on Wednesday, the Bishop of Ripon said he regretted that the burials question was still in an unsettled state. In his opinion the best remedy would be to concede to the Nonconformists the liberty of using the parish churchyards for interments.

Negotiations have taken place between the Vatican and Canon Dollinger, with the view to his submission to the Church, but the Canon, while expressing a wish for reunion, has not been able to make such entire submission as the Vatican judges necessary. Thus all negotiation is at an end.

The new Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, Dr. McCabe, having in a circular letter repeated all the denunciations on the State for not conceding denominational education, adds that revolt against the authority of the Church may find its complement in rebellion against the State, and even war on society itself.

It is currently stated in Rome that grave differences have arisen between the Marquis of Bute and Monsignor Capel, and it is not so improbable that the noble Marquis will leave the Roman Catholic Church. The step is not likely to surprise the dignitaries of the Papal Church, as serious doubts have been lately expressed concerning the orthodoxy of Lord Bute.

PRESBYTERIAL OVERSIGHT AGAIN.

We have a few other suggestions on this subject. The recent reported proceedings of our Presbyteries justify our former advocacy of some more intimate and active inspection, and control of the condition and working of our individual churches. How apparent is this, when we consider in numerous cases the measure and manner of collections for our general causes, or for evangelical work; or look at troubles brewing in congregations, and threatening to divide, or actually dividing them into wrangling partizans, and crippling all efficiency; or contemplate the unsatisfaction relation between pastor and people? Just think about this last illustration. Often presbyters know well that serious incompatibilities mar and jar the pastoral relation so that a church drags along a half-heated life, and yet not a finger of legitimate power of oversight is lifted for relief. Here is a source of weakness and decline. What ought to be done? We once heard a good man, whose case was under consideration in secret session of Presbytery, indignantly denounce the idea that he or any man could kill a church of Christ! Yet he, in fact, was, by reason of mere unacceptableness, disintegrating his own charge. It was necessary to dissolve the pastoral tie, but he did not feel the necessity of it. He was blind, and Presbyterial eyes were needed to see for him.

Life-pastorals are not a necessity to the church. We are not advocates for Methodist rotation; but we know that Presbytery often permits a pastor to stay too long with one church. Good men sometimes wear out in one charge, who renew their youth and usefulness in another. Respect and love for the pastor of many years restrain any from initiating a move for his honorable removal, and yet all believe the removal would be beneficial to the church and pastor. What ought Presbytery to do? What can Presbytery do? Cannot some loving yet searching measure of inquiry be adopted which will reveal all such ill health of our churches officially to the ruling body, that remedies may be applied and healing result without dissension? Cannot pastors be removed, with their consent, without creating any reflection on their characters, or any sore feelings in their hearts? The difficulty of doing this has given birth to the congregational relation of stated supply, because it is informal and easily broken. We would like to see this abolished save as a temporary expedient; and the pastoral relation so looked into and wisely and authoritatively regulated by Presbyterial oversight, that all our churches would seek it alone. They would rise into vigorous life and grow in holy power.

WOMAN-PREACHING.

The prohibition by the scriptures of woman-preaching is in terms clear, and it would seem unmistakable, but those who approve the practice bring forth other passages of Scripture upon which they found conjectures or inferences in support of their position. These inferences are assumed as conclusive, and would, in the views of those who advance them, settle the matter of propriety, but for its plain Scriptural prohibition. But if the inferences are just, what opposes them cannot be so, and so another assumption construes the plain test of Scripture to mean exactly what it does not say. Vastly more reasonable it would be to take the direct command inspired by the Holy Spirit and shape thereby all conclusions of man's devising. Such would be the well-nigh universal judgment, but that good, real or apparent, it matters little which, results from the preaching of women.

In the popular mind, undoubtedly just here is the great difficulty. It must be right, because it produces good results, is the popular cry. So it has been and so it will always be. But what is this but the theory that the end sanctifies the means? Shall we do evil that good may come? Results or consequences do not affect the question of propriety. If woman-preaching is wrong, no amount of resultant good can justify it; if woman-preaching is right it needs no plea of results to warrant it. Good results may indeed be adduced as ground of encouragement from the right use of proper means, or even confirm inferences fairly deducible from, and entirely consonant with Scripture, but can never countervail divine command.

But in estimating results from the preaching of women as good, do not its approvers take a very shortsighted view of the matter? Do they look beyond the immediate effects? Granting (for the sake of the argument only) that all is as they believed it to be, would it not be well to extend the horizon of vision and behold the outworking of all this in the lapse of time? Who shall certify as to the characters of those who shall be forthcoming without ordination to the work, with no credentials save that they feel called to preach? Are they prepared to see their ministry, set apart as they must believe, in that regular manner which God approves, pushed aside, superseded by those who are entirely independent of all ecclesiastical control? Have they counted the cost in loss of souls consequent upon the degradation of the ministry before the world? What are the immediate effects, however great, beside the incalculable harm which must result to society and to morals, from reversing that decree of the Almighty which from the earliest days of creation, has subordinated the sphere of woman to that of man?

No, it cannot be. This is now the "rage." In the days of St. Paul the Athenians were eager to hear or tell some new thing, and so it is now. We must hope that in a little while it will be numbered among the fashions of this world that passeth away; yet harm—much harm—will live after it.

It seems surprising that our Methodist brethren should be so carried away with this notion. Has a new light broken in upon them? These women making such a stir among them are not Methodists, but Quakers. Our brethren need not, certainly, go beyond their own pale to find earnest women, pious women, women burning with religious zeal. Why then, from the days of Wesley until now, have none appeared to stand in their pulpits and preach the Gospel? They have the reputation, and deserve it, of being the most progressive of religious sects. Have they been asleep?

Let us not be unjust to Methodism. Not all Methodists sanction preaching by women. The Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, replying to one of its own faith and order says:

Nor or we prepared to admit that "Methodism, by common consent, recognizes the voice of woman in the pulpit." There are many Methodists who, while they cheerfully concede her right to an active participation in the social meetings of the Church, do not accord her the position of public teacher in the House of God. Bishop Andrew, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, declared a short time since that a woman was not entitled under the discipline of that Church to be licensed to preach. The fact that Methodism, which has always been ready to avail itself of all suitable instrumentalities in pushing forward the work of God, has thus far withheld from woman the rite of ministerial ordination, finds its explanation in sound Scriptural reasons and a due regard for woman's true social position. In innumerable ways can woman's fervent love for the Saviour and ardent zeal in his service find practical expression; but when she mounts the rostrum, or declaims to promiscuous multitudes from the sacred desk, she violates the instincts of her native modesty and offends against a refined public sentiment. As long as woman occupies the sphere allotted her by Providence and by the verdict of polite society, she will be treated as a woman and receive all the delicate courtesy due her sex; but if she assume the bold attitude of a man, she must expect to be treated as a man, and bear her share of rude jostling from the outside world.

The mother of Jesus ministered to her Son, but she never expounded in the Synagogues, nor proclaimed along the public highways. Every glimpse we have of Mary clothes her with all the meekness and modesty of a true woman. And we have sought in vain in the New Testament history for a single instance in which a woman exercised the office of a public teacher.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

We give to-day all the information obtained from the General Assembly of our Church. The Louisville Courier-Journal will furnish daily reports. That paper compliments Dr. Peck's sermon very highly, and says the Assembly is a remarkably good-looking body of men.

"There are sunburned ministers from the Southern plantations and scholarly preachers from the fair cities of the South. There are men whose education has all the finish which the best colleges can put upon it, and sturdy bearers of the Lord's standard who are self-educated, yet resolute in the cause. During the two weeks they will be here it is evident they can accomplish a great deal by concentrating the various opinions upon stated subjects and giving the results as guidances for the members of the church.

"The result of the election of the Moderator was a deserving tribute to an efficient minister. Dr. Wilson is sixty-five years old, has been preaching for forty years, and for thirteen has acted as Stated Clerk to the General Assembly, never having missed one of its sessions. He is thoroughly acquainted with all the business of the office, and is probably the very best man for the place. He is a man of very fine appearance, being tall and well made, and having a very intellectual face and kindly expression of countenance."

Which, however complimentary to the Moderator, is very accurately descriptive, except in the matter of age, and there the reporter, after the manner of reporters, went well astray. We must vindicate the truth of history by declaring that the Doctor is younger by a decade than our reporter makes him, and his term of ministerial service is overstated to a like extent.

There is a great deal of talent in this Assembly, and it is well, for many questions will arise requiring the highest qualities of mind, as well as the amplest stores of grace, for their solution and disposal.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

We are pained as the various reports, statistical and otherwise, are presented to our Assembly to remember that so many will fail to receive them. To publish them in full in our columns is simply impossible and no summary could give an idea of the importance of the work. Send to Rev. George L. Wolfe, 120 Royal street, Louisville, Ky., and get the whole. Price $1.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE.

This institution has, as our readers will bear witness we have not infrequently remarked, peculiar claims for patronage upon the Presbyterians of the South, and especially upon the States of North and South Carolina. The catalogue before us suggests some points which it is well to bring before the public.

The financial prosperity and the popularity of the college is improving, as evidenced by the increase of scholars during the present term—106, against 85 last session. This is very gratifying. Over one-third of the whole number—thirty-seven—are from South Carolina; a larger number from that State than any college without its borders, not excepting the University of Virginia.

The scientific course of the institution has been revised and greatly improved. Still a three years course and very full and complete. In Mathematics and Natural Sciences the course is particularly full, and the college is amply provided with necessary apparatus. Very properly great attention has been paid to Rhetoric, and the last representative and graduating classes made a fine impression on their audiences by their manly and vigorous speeches. We can hardly refer to the faculty by way of individualizing without doing injustice, for it would be difficult to place in any department one superior to him by whom it is filled, but we must be allowed, to refer specially to the admirable management of the department of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy under Professor Blake. Those who enjoy Professor Blake's acquaintances, and thus appreciate his qualities of heart as well as mind, and those who have heard his superb lectures on Astronomy will feel that we may be pardoned for this allusion.

But in times like these there is perhaps nothing that so readily commends an institution of learning, or should, other things being equal, as cheapness of cost. Tuition, room rent, servant's hire and contingencies are set for the first term at $44, and for the second term at $61. Two hundred dollars should cover all necessary expenses (excluding clothing and traveling expenses), and two hundred and twenty-five dollars is ample.

READY FOR WORK.

Mr. J. L. Stevens, who has been two years resident licentiate at the Theological Seminary of Columbia, S. C., is now ready to resume work. After his licensure he labored two years and a half within the bounds of Charleston Presbytery, occupying one of the Missionary fields under the direction of the Presbyterial Committee of Domestic Missions.

His post office address is Charleston S. C., care Mr. J. T. Dill.

PRESBYTERY AND PRELACY.

The Presbyterian Committee of Publication at Richmond have embodied the articles which appeared some months since in the columns of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN in a neat little 12 mo. book of 67 pages. Bound in cloth, the price is 30 cents; in paper 15 cents.

Parties have often expressed a wish that these articles should be gathered in a form for preservation and they are indeed well worthy of it. Every Presbyterian family should have a copy, for it is important that our children should have always before them the proofs of superiority of Presbyterian to any other form of Church government.

FESTIVAL BY THE NEWBERN CHURCH.

The "Ladies of the Sewing Circle" of this church, of which Rev. L. C. Vass is pastor, have just given an "ice cream and strawberry festival," in connection with a bazar, exhibiting some of their beautiful fancy work. A large hall was transformed into a place of beauty by a wilderness of evergreens and fragrant flowers, arranged with wondrous skill. Beautiful and radiant demoiselles, in chaste and appropriate costumes supplied the numerous guests, clustered in small circles as knights and queens of the round tables, that dotted the hall. It was a cheering time of social intercourse and friendly enjoyment. These ladies are energetic workers, not surpassed in our State. They realized a handsome sum for their church work; one act of the entertainment was especially noticeable, and is worthy of imitation in other quarters. It was this, a liberal cabinet maker of Newbern presented the ladies an elegant folding parlor chair. This was quietly and privately bought by subscription of a large number, and at the close of the festival was publicly presented to pastor's wife, the active President of the Sewing Circle. She was so taken by surprise that she could only take her seat smilingly in "the thing of beauty" as a great joy, and without making a speech. In fact she has not yet reached the acme of modern achievement, viz: woman-preaching. She says her Bible seems to forbid it; but she means to sit in her chair and study the question, that she may not be cornered again, and smitten with silence.

NEWS NOTES.

At the sacramental occasion at Carthage church on May 1st, Rev. M. McQueen was assisted by Rev. W. S. Lacy. Five persons were received into communion of the church, one was baptized.

Rev. John G. Law, having been called to the pastorate of the Darlington church, Presbytery of Harmony, S. C., has entered upon his labors in said congregation with a view to becoming their pastor.

A friend writes us that efforts to secure a pastor for the church at Hickory, N. C., have been thus far unsuccessful; which is to be regretted.

"We have hopes of much growth in our church. Much interest is felt by all its members. Our Sabbath School is quite an interesting one, with an average attendance of 90 to 100. Such a flock certainly needs a shepherd."

MEMORIAL DAY IN MORGANTON.

MR EDITOR:—On Saturday the 10th, our citizens met in the court house to pay their annual tribute to the Confederate dead. The exercises began with prayer after which our young friend Mr. Isaac Avery in a few appropriate words introduced Gen. Johnston Jones. Although his subject was necessarily old he delivered an address of exceeding interest. It was truly eloquent with simplicity and tenderness and strength, free from all bitterness and yet yielding nothing that was dear to any Southern heart. He held our attention to the end when tearful eyes and the husky voice showed how even stony men were moved by memories of the past. The ladies and others preceded by the "Avery Guards" afterwards went in procession to the different church yards where with a profusion of flowers they decorated the graves of our soldiers and those also of the few Federals who rest with them here. It was a day that many of us will long remember.

HUNTERSVILLE CHURCH.

HUNTERSVILLE, N. C. May 12, 1879.

DEAR BRO:—After the adjournment of the Presbytery of Mecklenburg Rev. R. A. Miller of Monroe remained over with me to aid me in my approaching communion meeting. Services begun on Friday and closed on Sabbath. On Friday and Saturday Rev. R. A. Miller was ably assisted by Rev. G. L. Cook. The attendance was very large notwithstanding the fact that similar services were being held in two neighboring churches and the visible results were quite encouraging. Twelve new names were placed upon our roll, six of them being received on examination and six by certificate. Our number now is 250 which is 99 more than it was in June, 1875 when the present pastorate begun. To our God be all the glory.

Yours fraternally, PASTOR.

Proceedings of the General Assembly.

The General Assembly met in the Second Presbyterian Church (Dr. Stuart Robinson's) on Thursday last. Rev. Dr. T. E. Peck preached the opening sermon, from Mark xvi: 14-20, which is thus reported in the Louisville Courier-Journal:

THE MODERATOR'S SERMON.

The scene which is here described, my brethren, is one of the most extraordinary that ever was witnessed upon earth. If it has any parallel at all, that parallel can be found only in the history of the same divine Redeemer. The lowly man of Nazareth had just emerged from the darkness of the grave, to which the malice of His enemies had consigned him, and as they fondly hoped had consigned Him and his cause forever; but He now appears with all the majesty of a king, having offered Himself once for all a sacrifice to satisfy Justice for His people, and having thereby acquired the right to all dominion in heaven, earth and hell. Just before He rises to take His seat at the right hand of God, the Father Almighty, He assembles His servants in order to give them that commission in the accomplishment of which the whole world is to be subdued unto Himself. We find nothing here, my brethren, like that which we find in other conquerors—in the conquerors and heroes which this world has agreed to worship. We find in giving this commission to those who are to be His instruments in accomplishing the conquest of the world that He gives them no other weapons than these simply of the mortal—"Go preach the gospel to every creature;" and then, with all the absolute sovereignty that belongs to Him, He says that the eternal destinies of men shall depend upon the manner in which they receive this word. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be damned." What a strange commission this to give such a world as ours—a world which had so often quaked under the tread of armies, which had resounded for weary centuries with the noise of battle—a commission to conquer this world simply by preaching, simply by declaration of the Truth. Then, when we consider further, what was the burden of this preaching itself? It was no issuing of any merely royal edict or command—no command given to men all to bow the knee merely because the sovereign that gave the command was a sovereign that could not be resisted—but it was "glad tidings" which they were to proclaim—"good news" to themselves and all sinners and sufferers—and in the discharge of this commission we find that they were to be supported by the demonstration of the Spirit and the Power; and this, again, my brethren, accounts for the fact that our Saviour gives this commission notwithstanding all the ignorance, all the unbelief, all the confusion of mind and sluggishness of heart which He knew to exist even in His disciples themselves; for just before He is stated to have upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they did not believe those who had seen Him after he had risen from the dead. Stranger still, to give a commission to those who a little before seemed not to have any faith in their sovereign Himself, who a little while before had doubted whether he had risen from the dead, and whether, in attempting to conquer the world for Christ, they were not attempting a conquest in the name and for the glory of a dead Saviour; and I think no man can ponder these words without seeing at once that either Jesus of Nazareth was God over all and existed forever, or that he was a mere crack-brained enthusiast. In the next place I call your attention to the end of all this conquest which the disciples were to make. They are to go forth and preach, and these signs shall follow them that people may believe; they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues, and if they take up any deadly thing it shall not hurt them, and they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover. So that in all, the great end that is contemplated by the Son of God in giving this commission to His disciples is to vest in them authority for the entire and perpetual deliverance of all who trusted in Him from all evil, both moral and physical; so that when His glorious work shall have been accomplished, it shall be seen that not one solitary vestige of evil shall remain in the whole Church of His redeemed—there shall not be the slightest shadow of the awful calamities or series of calamities that have passed over them in this world. They shall not only be perfectly pure in spirit but perfectly sound in body—both soul and body, redeemed by the same blood and sanctified by the power of the Spirit, shall be presented before the presence of the Father without spot or wrinkle or blemish, or any such thing. But what I propose to call your attention to now particularly is this: The nature of this work—the grand end and aim of this commission which has been given by Christ to the Church itself and, in the end terminates upon the Church itself. In the first place, my brethren, I will say that I think we shall be greatly mistaken if we suppose that the signs the Savior here mentions are merely designed as credentials of His divine delegation, or, with respect to the apostles themselves, are designed to attest the reality of their commission from the hands of Him. It is undoubtedly true that these miracles were designed for this purpose. Our Saviour himself says—"Now they have no cloak for their sins;" but the principle which is so clearly set forth by Nicodemus to our Saviour in his interview at night is undoubtedly a principle sanctioned by God's word everywhere—that no man can do the miracles that Jesus Christ did unless God be with him; and I enter my protest against that doctrine that teaches that miracles in themselves are not valid arguments for a divine commission on the part of those who work them; but, my brethren, I think it is very important to notice that the miracles are not only this, and perhaps it would not be going too far to say that they are not chiefly this. In other words, that the miracles were designed not merely to attest the presence of God and the approval of God, but they were designed to reveal God. They were designed to reveal the nature of that commission which these miracles were used to authenticate. They not only show that God has sent a message, but they indicate the purport of that message itself. It is perfectly plain that if nothing more had been aimed at by investing the disciples with miraculous power than merely the demonstration that they were messengers from God—that end could just as well have been subserved by enabling them to do miracles contrary in character to those that were actually performed. We do not find that our Saviour in a single instance wrought a miracle that was not for some beneficent purpose, and we do not find among the apostles many miracles of the contrary sort were performed—He opened the eyes of the blind, unstopped the ears of the deaf, He cleansed lepers and He raised the dead. If His only purpose had been to show His power—His presence as a God—it might have done just as well by smiting men who could see with instantaneous blindness, as some of the old prophets of the law did by sending overwhelming calamities upon whole communities, as was done by Moses when he brought the Israelites out of Egypt, or by spreading a man in sound health with leprous spots, as was done with the servant of Elijah, or by smiting men suddenly with the stroke of death, as was done in numerous instances in the Old Testament. Now, you do not find that many miracles of that sort were performed. Our Saviour went everywhere doing good, relieving the distresses of men, leading them to believe that He was filled with compassion, and came not to destroy men's lives but to save them. This view of the miracles, as revealing the nature of the mission as well as that there was a mission from God, must be apparent to any man who properly understands this passage. Now, my brethren, I go futher and contend that the miracles of the Lord and, to a great extent, the miracles of the Apostles that were wrought in His name, were not only to reveal the fact of a full manifestation in the flesh, but they were themselves instances and specimens of redemption. They were not pledges and earnests of redemption, but they were instances of redemption itself. Whenever there was the case of a blind man who had his eyes opened, or a deaf man who had his ears opened, or a leper who was cleansed, or a dead man raised from the dead, we have an instance, I say, of the actual exercise of the power of the Redeemer. You remember that famous instance, which was recorded apparently for the express purpose of bringing out this great truth, of the palsied man who was led down to the Saviour in order to be restored from his paralysis. Now what does our Saviour do to him in the first instance. He says, "My son, thy sins be forgiven thee;" and it was only when the Pharisees or bystanders expressed their surprise that any mortal man should undertake to forgive sins that he replied to them. "Whether is it easier to say thy sins be forgiven thee or to say Arise, take up thy bed and walk?" No doubt both sets of words were as easily uttered—it was as easy to say the one as the other; but that very expression was adopted by our Saviour for this reason, that in the one case no man could tell whether the effect of the forgiveness of sins followed or not, because it was a sentence that passed in the court of heaven, and it was a sentence that seemed to pass by the instrumentality of mere man as he walked upon earth. Whereas, in the other case, if the power was real—if the effect was actually accomplished—then it would be palpable to the eyes of all, and, hence He turns to the man, and says, "Arise, take up thy bed and walk." When the Saviour said, "Thy sins be forgiven thee," He used a form of words which carried along with them a very large degree of antecedent improbability with regard to them. When He used the form of words, "Arise, take up thy bed and walk," there was a very high degree of improbability that that could be done; but now, when in one case the thing is done beyond the possibility of a doubt no reasonable man could question that that which they could not see had been also really accomplished. I think this is a principle of immense consequence in the interpretation of God's word, and it is a principle which gives us immense advantage in contending with those who doubt, or who profess to doubt, the divine legation of Jesus Christ. Our religion is not a religion of fact—not a religion of doctrines merely—not an abstract intellectual system which is capable of being logically expounded and logically defended, which, from the very nature of the case, could be understood only by the trained and disciplined intellect. It is essentially a popular religion—not in the sense of a religion which men naturally like, but in the sense of a religion which is adapted to the people—a religion which they can understand, at least as to its evidences, if not as to its substance. It is a religion for any one who is capable of weighing historical evidence; for he who is capable of appreciating the real value of historical truth in any department, is also capable of appreciating the historical evidence by which the great history of Christianity is established. When the Apostle Paul, you recollect, was reminding the Corinthian church of what his Gospel had been—when he was summing up what he had preached to the Corinthians, he sums up after this fashion: "I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures.

"And that He was buried, and that He arose again the third day, according to the Scriptures."

So according to Paul's account of the Gospel he preached, it consisted substantially in these two things—in these two great facts—it was Christ and the resurrection of Christ; and when our Lord instituted two of the ordinances of the Church—the only two ordinances which are to commemorate events in His career—we find the two events which He wishes to commemorate are His death and resurrection. Every time we celebrate the Lord's Supper we commemorate the death of Christ, and every time the light of the Sabbath morning shines upon our eyes it reminds us of the resurrection of Christ. And now, my brethren, do you not see the great advantage this gives us in our controversies with the Infidel? We point him to facts which cannot be denied without denying with logical consistency all the facts of human history whatever; for we have no greater fact—we have no greater ground—for our belief in any historical fact than we have for the death of Jesus of Nazareth under Pontius Pilate. So with regard to the resurrection. All the circumstances of the case seem to have been ordered for the special purpose of leaving no rational doubt as to the reality of that great fact. Now if these facts have occurred, they have occurred once for all. If the death of Jesus Christ is a fact, it is a fact forever; if the resurrection of Jesus Christ is a fact it is a fact forever, and let the advancement of so-called science and of real science be what it may, it never can be changed. No conclusion at which science may hereafter arrive can in the smallest degree, affect the reality of the facts of the death and resurrection of the Son of God. You recollect how Peter argues against the Infidels of his time, and in our times it is precisely the same way. When they say there is no possibility or probability of the manifestations of the Lord, the apostle refers them to the fact that there has been in times past the coming of the Lord; that there have been judgments in which the Lord has discriminated between the righteous and the wicked; there have been times when He has poured his vengeance upon the wicked and has delivered the righteous, and all such dispensations—the dispensation of the flood and the destruction of the cities of the plain, and it may be that it had been after Peter's time—the destruction of Jerusalem itself—all instances in which there was a judicial discrimination necessarily employed under the Government of God. He argues that there must be hereafter, therefore, a judicial discrimination between the righteous and the wicked—one that will leave no righteous man without the favor of God and the blessing of God resting visibly upon him, and one that will leave no wicked man branded and blasted by the thunderbolts of God. Now, this being the view we ought to take of these miracles, then, my brethren, what an influence this view is bound to give us of the nature of the work which Christ came to perform, and which He honors His Church by allowing her to share with Him in performing!

These miracles, says the Saviour, are signs—not mere prodigies, not mere powers—but they are signs, and signs not merely of the presence of God, but the signs of a God present and ready to save, and one who will save; and it appears to me, therefore, that our Saviour here fortifies the faith of His apostles in a way precisely similar to that by which John the Baptist's faith, or the faith of his disciples, which ever view we may take of that passage—by which their faith was fortified when the question came, a startling question, a question prompted by the obscuration of somebody's faith, "Art thou he who was to come, or was followed, "Look we for another?" Go and tell John what you have seen; that you have seen—the lepers are cleansed, the blind see, the deaf have their ears unstopped, the dead are raised and the poor have the Gospel preached to them.

Go tell John this and then he can not fail to believe; or if it is you, his disciples, and not John, whose faith has been obscured, why should you look for another? Why should you doubt that it is He who came? Was He not to come as a Redeemer, according to the prophecies of the Old Testament, and did you not see works of redemption actually performed? Should we look for another? Is it possible that there should be another who could give better evidence—stronger or more overwhelming evidence—if He should come, that he is truly the Messiah sent of God? We are not to look upon these signs our Saviour speaks of as limited in their meaning to the time of the apostles themselves. In that day it was not all believers who performed these works; these signs did not follow all of those that believed then. They were intended to be partial from the very first; either partial in the extent of space over which they were spread, or partail in the extent of time to which they would be prolonged, or both. It was not necessary that all these believers should do these things then; it it is not necessary that any of the believers should be able to do these things now in the way of miracles; in the way of works palpable to the sense, which no man in his proper mind could deny. It is only necessary for us to know that these things have been done in this fallen world of ours; it is only necessary for us to know that there has been a Healer of disease against whose power no malady could stand when He spoke the word; it is only necessary for us, who are heirs of death and the grave and the weeds of mourning, to know that there has been One who walked amongst men, and only spoke the word and the grave yielded up its prey. Oh, is it not something, brethren, to know that there is One mightier than death? Is it not something to know that there has been One who has actually conquered death? One who has actually gone down the sides of the pit to wrestle with the King of Terrors and triumphed over it? Is it not something to know that there has been One on earth, who was a man like ourselves, whom death could not possibly hold?

These were the signs that our Saviour gave His disciples of the nature of the work to be done; and now let me illustrate this subject a little. In the first place, the Saviour says they shall cast out devils. There is a special sign in that. For the purpose of showing that he was Christ, they are to destroy the works of the devil, and the first gleam of hope that is dotted upon fallen man was contained in that sentence denounced upon the serpent, that the woman's seed should bruise his head; and let me say, my brethren, that those who contend for the personal existence of Satan—those who support the teachings of the Scripture upon this point—are those who are defending human nature, and those who deny the existence of a personal devil are the greatest libelers of their kind. What! to say that sinners are what they are merely because they have committed sin themselves—that this monster Sin who has filled the world with lamentations of woe—that this monster Sin was a lingerer in the heart of man without any temptations, with no inducements from without! Why, my brethren, how could we libel human nature more than by saying that—saying that we are related, and the right doctrine of a personal devil, such as the Scripture describes, is by making the devil—by making all sin to originate with man, instead of originating with an archangel ruined. Now, the devil being the author, in one sense, of all the sins in the world, being the prime mover of all sin, our Saviour who came to destroy the devil's work, tells his disciples that one thing they shall do, and it is mentioned as the foremost, ——they shall cast out devils. The strong man's arm is taken possession of—a stronger spirit than man's has taken possession, and kept him in abeyance in numerous instances; but you shall cast out devils by my word—by my power—so it shall be known everywhere that the devil is the slave of Christ?

Is not this some comfort, my brethren, for us to know that there is One who in all our conflicts with Satan and the powers of darkness—that there is a Redeemer that is not only able to overcome them but has overcome them—these enemies are already conquered. The blessed Redeemer has made a show of them openly upon His cross, and by casting them out in numerous instances.

But I pass on to a consideration of the next question, which gives us the most positive side of what was to be done, and is this, the speaking of the new tongues.

Now, this wonderful miracle, which we call the gift of language, my brethren, we are not to take as bestowed upon the Church in order to enable the preacher of the gospel to preach among all nations. I question whether it was designed for the purpose at all. Certainly, so far as the field of operations of the original apostles was concerned, it did not seem needful that they should have such a gift, for, wherever within the bounds of the Empire these apostles went, they found the Greek language famililary spoken, and Paul, not only on Mars Hill, but everywhere he went, found himself intelligible in the Greek tongue, and Paul tells us that he spoke with more tongues than all. When a man speaks with a tongue he speaks to God, not in the sense, that God does not know what he himself intends to say, but that he uses the tongue in addressing God, and not man. The gift of tongues was bestowed upon man originally upon the day of Pentecost, in order to enable him to praise God—to set forth the wonderful works of God in praise instead of setting them forth in preaching. So when we look at it in this light this gift of tongues was intended to signify what would be the ultimate result of this gospel of Jesus Christ when it should have achieved its highest triumph, which should be that all men who should experience its power should praise God.

The personal characteristic of sinful man, as James the Apostle tells us, is that his tongue is set on fire of hell, and as the power of articulate speech is the proper expression of the reasonable nature of man—the reason of man by which he is distinguished from the brute—so when men are in their original sinful condition, tongue is the expression of a ruined reason, of a perverted reason, of a reason which is always collecting materials for the praise of self, for the praise of man, and the time shall come when the heart, being thoroughly sanctified being thoroughly terrified by the spirit of God, men shall praise God and not themselves.

Then shall be realized all those phrophecies in the Psalms; all those exhortations in the Psalms shall be promptly responded to, which grow and mutiply, as you have often observed, toward the end of the Book of Psalms; when all nations shall praise Him—when from the rising of the sun until the going down thereof, God's name shall be praised. That is the consummation which the Church is to seek. It is the highest and most exalted goal which human nature can ever reach.

My Brethren, I suppose you have not read that passage in the second chapter of Acts about the departure of spirits upon the day of Pentecost, and those tongues of fire, without thinking about that passage in the Old Testament as its counterpart, where the people of Babel came together for the purpose of making a name to the glory and renown of man, and there to take measures that it should never cease to be so.

They attempted to build a city and tower, in order to make themselves a name. It is the praise of man they are after—it is the appropriation of their resources of this pitiful world of man they are after. Individual man is weak—he is mortal. They will see to it by their constitution and by combining and organizing them thoroughly that the name of man shall be perpetual—that the name of the race and power of the community may be perpetuated whatever might become of the individual units which constituted it. That trick of the Babel builders has been the trick of man in all the ages. It is a trick that the Alexanders and Tamerlanes of the world attempted. It is a trick that above all others the iron monarchy of Rome attempted to realize, and almost did realize. Wherever that trick has occupied the minds of the great conquerors of men—wherever they have been able to realize the trick—you will find it has been a capital point to have but one language, and that the language of the conqueror. Now in this matter of Pentecost we have precisely the reverse of all this of the Babel builders. These disciples came together after the tongue from Heaven has been given them, and they praise God and not man, and that glorious scene on the day of Pentecost, my brethren, was designed to be a Prophecy—it was a prophecy—it is a prophecy this day—that the time shall come when men's tongues shall be set on fire of heaven instead of hell, because their hearts have been purified by the spirit from heaven instead of inflamed from the pit of darkness. The time will come when men shall be all holy, and when they shall be all holy, then not one wish, thought or impulse shall ever enter into their souls but the thoughts of the glory of God and the impulse to praise Him. That is the meaning of it, as I take it, and hence when our Saviour says: "They shall speak with new tongues," he does not mean merely that you shall witness this remarkable miracle of the speaking with tongues. He means to say that this is the sign of what your work is ultimately to be—its highest result is to be—the entire transformation of the human soul—the entire and absolute purification of the human heart—when there shall be no impulse but the impulse to glorify God. I have not time, my brethren, to notice these other particulars which our Saviour here insists on, although they are exceedingly interesting. I shall only mention the last, as it will form the subject of proper meditation: "They shall lay hand on the sick and they shall recover."

If there is any one feature of our condition in this world—a feature belonging to our physical condition—it is that of our liability to disease. There is not a soul in this congregation who is not liable to it. The probability is that the vast majority will die by disease. It is a thing which no man can deny that it is a calamity—a thing which no man can deny that in the long run it is irremediable by human skill. "Now," says the Saviour—and this prophecy of His I take it fell in which the old prophecy in regard to the same thing—"the time is come when you shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover," and this healing of the sick by the laying on of hands is a sign. How often in this short passage is it repeated? It is a sign that the time is coming when there shall be no sick in all the redeemed of the Church of God; there shall be no pain; there shall be no sorrow; there shall be no crime. God shall wipe away all tears off of all faces. A strange world that, my brethren, where there is no use for a physician; and yet this is the promise and prediction of this passage. But now I cannot delay any longer on these things. I just wish to say a word or two in reference to the work for which we have come together to-day, as explained by the principles upon which we have been meditating. We come here as the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. We come here to deliberate—to confer with one another in reference to the things which belong to Christ and which belong to the interests of this Church. There are a great many things which we have to do which are mostly of detail; there are arrangements; there is machinery, if you choose to call it so, which is necessary in order to accomplish our work; but, my brethren, what is the grand aim and design which we ought to have in view in all these things. We ought to keep our eyes steadily on the consummation—the absolute deliverance of the Church of God—of all that part of the human race that goes to constitute the Church of God, and it will be overwhelmingly large in the end—the absolute deliverance of the Church from all failure—from all moral failure—from all physical failure—from all pollution of sin—from all weakness of the soul—from all disease and temptations of the body—for evermore. If that is the true view of the matter, was there ever any body of men on the face of the earth who had a more beneficent mission than the Church to discharge? Was there ever a body of men existing on the earth whose mission of benevolence was more comprehensive, more all-embracing than the mission of the church?—to abolish all sickness, to abolish all dying, to abolish the grave as well as to abolish hell—is not this a commission which might nerve every arm and stimulate every heart. Brethren, ought we not to cry shame upon ourselves whenever our hands hang down or our knees become feeble in such a glorious work as this? And if it were nothing but the good of man; if it were nothing but the amelioration of man's condition; if it were nothing but the priceless boon we bestow upon the members of our race, who are bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, it is enough; but when we are glorifying Christ, the Redeemer of the world; when we are seeking to show forth His power as the Saviour of the world; when it is our highest aim to demonstrate the irresistible efficacy of Christ's compassion and Christ's arm—how can we refuse to make sacrifices? How can we refuse to do anything, to suffer anything, to be anything which the providence of Christ may call upon us to do or to suffer or to be? And it is a very simple thing, my brethren, the means by which we are to do it—nothing but preaching the Gospel. "Go preach to every creature the good tidings." That is the whole of our commission as a church. It is not we who are to cast out the devils; it is not we who are to give tongues to men with which they are to celebrate the praises of God; it is not we who are to lay hands on the sick that they shall recover. It is not we who are to do these things. It is the power of God only; it is the power of the Father only; it is the power of Christ only; it is the power of the Spirit only; and when this work shall have been done, there shall not be one note of praise but to the glory of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost; but then Christ has condescended to use us as instruments; and He uses not only the breath of one's mouth, but he uses the breath of the mouth of such worms as we—of such weak people as we—of such sinners as we—sinners saved by Christ, but sinners still. We are the instruments, but we have but one thing to do—a precious boon—and that is to preach the Gospel. Whatever you do, do that. In all your schemes, let it be your purpose to preach the glad tidings, that is the aim that is the thing you ought to do. Your committees and everything are intended to bring these glad tidings to human ears and human hearts. All our measures of government—all our measures of discipline—have but this one end in view ultimately, which is to preach the glad tidings to every creature. How can we think of such a commission as this without, my brethren, feeling that it is our duty to embrace the whole world in the arms of our faith and love—without feeling that they are all our fellow-men, whether they be Greek or Barbarian, whether they be wise or unwise, whether they be Chinese or Hottentots, so long as there is one soul on earth, be he in the midst of distant isles of the sea who has never heard of Jesus and his salvation; that we shall do all, and endure all, and sacrifice all that he may hear of Christ; and I think if our hearts were only impressed as they ought to be with these great truths, we soon should have the praises of God sounded from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same.

The report of the Agent of Sustentation was then presented by Rev. Dr. McIlwaine. It embraced as topics the collection, and general finance, and the causes of Sustentation proper, the Evangelistic Fund, for white and colored, and the Relief Fund.

Of non-co-operating churches only Augusta and Concord have reported. The former is not so far advanced as formerly, while Concord has made a decided advance. The report says further:

"The subject of wholly unsupplied churches is a very serious one in some of the Presbyteries. The Presbytery of South Alabama reports seventeen such churches now vacant, which must be aided if they are to enjoy a preached Gospel; the Presbytery of Red River ten; the Presbyteries of Central Mississippi and Knoxville nine each, &c. On the other hand, the Presbyteries of Transylvania, Upper Missouri, Concord, Fayetteville, Mecklenburg, Bethel, Harmony, Central Texas, Lexington and Maryland report that they have not a single vacant church dependent for help, and in most of them every church is regularly supplied. In the eight co-operating Presbyteries of the Synod of Virginia, there are only fourteen churches needing assistance which are not regularly supplied; in the Synod of South Carolina there are five such churches, and in the Synod of North Carolina (leaving out the Presbytery of Wilmington, not heard from) there are only two such churches.

"During the past year fifty-three Presbyteries have received appropriations from this fund for 145 ministers, amounting to $13,506 23, and for eight church buildings, amounting to $1,150. Had the means been at the disposal of the committee, fully three times these amounts might have been judiciously expended in advancing the interests of this branch of work, and it is respectfully recommended that the churches be urged to raise during the present year $40,000. With this amount the work can be prosecuted with vigor and success, whereas less than this will leave much undone which needs to be immediately attended to."

The Relief Fund is in a sound financial condition. Eighty three names are on the roll with premiums paid up, of which ten names have been added during the year. Annuities have been paid during the year to the extent of $1,800. The investments have reached $30,000 and are now worth more than face value.

The first part of the Sustentation report, which was the only part read by Dr. McIlwaine, was referred to the Standing Committee on Sustentation, and the latter part, consisting of a statistical report of receipts and payments, collections and a statement from the Treasurer of the committee, was referred to the Auditing Committee.

Hon. John A. Inglis, a member of the Executive Committee of Sustentation, was reported as having died, and Rev. Dr. J. G. Hamner, on account of infirm health, begged that he be not reappointed.

Dr. J. Leighton Wilson presented his report on Foreign Missions, reviewing the whole work, and giving accurate and complete details. At its conclusion he presented a memorial, in which he brings out prominently the truth that the constant cry of retrenchment, applied one-sidedly as it has been, has had the effect of furnishing the people a pretext for giving most sparingly or not doing it at all. "It is the easiest thing in the world to persuade men that it is not their duty to give, but to convince them that it is their duty to practice self-denial and make personal sacrifices, in order to have something to give, is altogether a different matter. The mischievous tendency of the policy under consideration, has already made itself manifest in the very bosom of our beloved Church, and nobody knows where it will end unless God is pleased to arrest it by baptizing our people afresh with the missionary spirit. * * *

What is needed in this most distressing crisis, is it not more retrenchment, not the changing or the readjusting of your machinery—but the stimulation of God's people to a higher standard of liberality. This is the point to which the attention of the church should be earnestly directed at the present moment. To try to relieve present embarrassment by future curtailment is simply to adopt "penny-wise and pound-foolish philosophy."

Dr. J. N. Waddell, Agent of Education, presented his report with the report of the Treasurer. It was referred to the Committee on Education.

The eighteenth annual report of Publication presented by Rev. J. K. Hazen was elaborate and full. It was duly referred.

In the afternoon first in order was an overture from the Presbytery of the Western District conveying charges of incompetency against the Executive Committee of Publication, and asking—

First—That the debt of the Publication cause resting upon the churches at large be faithfully brought before the people.

Second—That the nature of the obligations resting upon them be faithfully explained.

Third—That collections to meet it be earnestly recommended.

The overture was answered by the Committee of Publication, and the overture and answer were referred to the Committee of Publication.

The following overtures were presented and read:

An overture on the Diaconate.

An overture from the Presbytery of Abingdon requesting that the New Book be not bound up in hymn book or Confession of Faith for at least five years.

An overture from the Presbytery of Louisville concerning ordination (in China) of Mr. Painter.

An overture from Presbytery of Ebenezer to consolidate Committees on Publication and Education.

An overture from Presbytery of Orange to retrench expenses.

An overture from Presbytery of St. John's, (first) to substitute a submitted form for Presbyterial reports for that now in use; (second) to reduce one-half forms to one-half size; (third) to cease publication of forms of sessional benevolence on systematic benevolence.

An overture to transfer Committee of Education from Memphis to a city not liable to interruption by frequent epidemics.

To change boundary line between East Alabama and Florida Presbyteries.

An overture from the Synod of Kentucky to reconsider the minute of 1878 on complaint of S. Robinson et als., vs., Synod of Kentucky, in Canfield case.

A memorial from the Presbytery of Western District on publication.

At night the annual report of the Trustees and Faculty of Union Theological Seminary of Virginia, was read and referred to the Committee on Theological Seminaries.

A letter was received from Dr. Henry A. Boardman on behalf of the General Presbyterian Council, inviting the Assembly to make arrangements to take part in the coming council.

Dr. Murkland moved that a committee be appointed to take the letter into consideration, and nominate delegates to the coming council.

Several amendments or substitutes were offered to this motion. Rev. W. W. Honston moved the subject discussed. Rev. Dr. Krow moved reference to Committee on Foreign Correspondence, and Mr. E. H. Fay, of Louisiana, wanted it postponed to the next meeting. In favor of Dr. Murkland's motion were Rev. Ben. Helm, Dr. Grasty, Dr. Junkin, and Mr. Brown. All amendments were lost, and the motion was carried by a large majority.

A letter was received from Rev. Dr. Lacy, reporting the discharge of his duty as delegate to the Dutch Reformed Church at its meeting last year.

The committee to reinvest the Insler fund, reported the execution of that duty. The report was received and the diligence of the committee approved.

Dr. Junkin moved that the Executive Committee of Education be instructed to extend aid in future only to those students who are ready to enter the Theological Seminary, and moved its reference to the standing Committee on Education. Carried.

UNADULTERATED MILK.

In an article in the PRESBYTERIAN of May 7th there occurs a phrase, the erroneous sentiment of which, I doubt not, was overlooked by the person who selected the article for the paper.

A mother is represented as saying to her little daughter, "Now Rena when you say 'Now I lay me,' I want you to think in this way: 'Now I am going to bed, and to sleep, and I want the Lord to take care of me. If I am not a good child, and do not pray to God, might I to ask Him, or expect Him to take care of me." The words I have written in italics contain the sentiment which I object to. By such instruction the child is tanght to believe that she must be a good and praying child if she would have proper grounds to conclude that God will take care of her. On the other hand she should have been tanght the true doctrine of faith—that God will take care of her for Christ's sake, and notwithstanding the fact that she is not in His sight a good child. If she had been taught to believe that however kind and amiable, and obedient to her parents she might be, she was not a good child according to God's estimate of goodness, then she would not conclude that on account of her goodness God would hear her prayers and take care of her. If that child, under the instruction recorded, did conclude that her goodness was such as to warrant her to expect such a favor from God, she was evidently deceived, to her injury; and her parent assisted in fostering the deception. Such a religion of works, so often taught to children in their early years, is extremely injurious, is hard to be eradicated, and yet must be eradicated when the child is taught by the spirit that she is a lost, helpless sinner, and God must come, just as she is to the Saviour as a sinner. While it is right to teach a child the duty of being good, it is essential to its peace and salvation to learn the only way to become so.

Many a child has tried for years to be good in the way suggested by the carnal heart, and has at last, in despair, abandoned all efforts. It is eminently proper to teach a child in the very begining of his religious training the doctrine of faith in order to works, and to repudiate the doctrine of works in order to faith. The unadulterated milk of the word is as genuine Calvinism as the strong meat. Let every child be taught by believing parents that because God is the Lord and his God and Redeemer, therefore he is bound to keep His commandments; not that he must keep His commandments in order that God may be his God and Redeemer,

P. T. P.

[We thank "P. T. P." for the above criticism. The distinction between God's relation to sin and His relation to the sinner cannot be made too broad. He sent His Son to die because he hates sin; He sent His Son to die because he loves the sinner. God commendeth His love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.—Editor N. C. P.]

Feels Young Again.

"My mother was afflicted a long time with Neuralgia and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system; headache, nervous prostration, and was also very helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters, with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over 70 years old. We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—Lady, Providence, R. I.

During these five years the church has grown from 150 to 481 members, and the whole debt of the church practically wiped ont.

Several days before his death, Bishop Ames said to General John S. Berry: "I desire no display at my funeral. I would have a plain coffin made of live oak and trimmed plainly with trimmings of galvanized iron. Let there be no flowers placed on it. It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Cartoons.

BY THE REV. SAMUEL W. DUFFIELD.

Philip Melanchthon used to say
(Turning his sentence tenderly),
"We are but sketches of what one day,
After the hard lines pass away,
God the designer would have us be."

Only in charcoal, rude and rough
(The mere cartoons of His greater skill),
He draws his purposes—crude enough:
But one must think on the thankless stuff
Through which these purposes work His will.

Then with the hand of a constant love,
He deepens or heightens here and there,
And bends with sympathy from above,
Changing the lights in which we move
Between our destiny and our prayer;

Until when years perhaps have fled,
When beauty has grown from the bane of sin,
We hear the face of the holy dead,
And the pencil droops and we hear it said,
"Come, thou beloved, and enter in!"

Poor Jimmy.

One morning I was walking down C— street, which at that hour was full of finely dressed ladies and bright little children, when I came upon so doleful a sight that I stopped as though I was struck. A poor little white-faced boy, with a deformed back, no taller than a healthy child of four or five years old, but looking much older in his pinched and wan face, was sitting on the bare stones, his thin little legs drawn up with cold, and a basket containing half a dozen miserable apples beside him. He made not the least effort to attract the attention of the gay passers; but his white little hands were meekly clasped on his knee, and his eyes fixed on the crowd with a hopeless, staring look, as though his bewildered mind was struggling with the problem why so many were warm, well-fed and happy, and he was so wretched.

"Poor child!" I said, going up to him; for I could not help it, though I have not much sympathy with common street beggars. "Can I do anything for you?"

"You can buy an apple," he said quietly, hardly looking at me, though he took up his basket as he spoke.

"You shouldn't sit on the cold stones," said I, "It is very bad for you."

"I can't stand up," he said simply.

"But it's a shame you should be out this cold day, anyway," said I, warmly. "You don't look able to sit up."

He flushed up. "I have to. Jo can't leave baby, and somebody must."

"But where are your parents? Have you no one to care for you, poor child?"

His dark, sad eyes looked squarely at me now, and his poor little mouth quivered as he replied:

"Jo takes care of me. Father and mother are dead. Mrs. Wilson used to take care of us, but she's dead, too."

"And where do you live?" I asked next, for I could not bear the sight of that unfortunate child who ought to be in a hospital, sitting on the cold stones.

He told me where he lived, and, after giving him some pennies, I went directly there. With some trouble I found it—a wretched room so poor and uncomfortable that I shall not describe it to you. And I found Jo, a ragged, pleasant-faced girl, about twelve years old, taking loving care of the most wretched, puny, fretful boy you ever saw.

From Jo I learned their story. Their parents were respectable, well-to-do people, and they had always lived in comfort till these parents died, about three years ago, and left them a comfortable home and some other property. The man who took care of their property (their guardian) had given them into the hands of Mrs. Wilson, a kind friend, who had taken good care of them, and every few months, Jo said, Mrs. Wilson used to go and get money from the man who had the house.

But about a year ago their kind friend died, and left them in the hands of her husband, an idle, drink-loving man, who cared only for the money and nothing for them. He had sold most of the furniture, moved them into this wretched room, threatened to do something awful to them if they complained, and abandoned them. What they could pick up and what had been given to them by kind-hearted though very poor neighbors was all they had had since, now these many months.

"But who is your guardian?" I asked. Jo didn't know. She knew neither his name nor how to find him; and, besides, she was afraid of Mr. Wilson. She (Jo) couldn't leave the ailing babe, who, though three or four years old, looked not more than one, and could not stand yet; so poor, little, deformed Jimmy had to sit on the stones to get a few cents to keep them from starving.

When the baby slept Jo would steal out and pick up a few sticks, if she could, for a small fire. And she also had to carry Jimmy back and forth, for he could walk but a few steps at a time.

Oh! what a tale of misery! What did I do? Well, going down those rickety stairs I pondered what to do; how to find that careless or wicked guardian and bring him to an account.

I could think of but one way—the newspapers. So I hurried off to the office of a large daily, told my pitiful story, enlisted the sympathy of the kind-hearted editor, and the next paper brought out the whole story.

An hour or two after the paper was out a red faced, honest-looking workman walked into the office and asked to see the man who wrote about the starving children. He was taken into the editor's room, where he announced himself as the guardian of those children, and said he came, in to explain.

"I hope you can explain," said the editor, "for I must say it looks very strange, the poor little ones starving, and owning property enough, as I understand, to take care of them."

"'Deed, sir, and that's true. It's a tidy bit of property, and brings in about five hundred dollars a year. I have been paying four hundred of it to Mrs. Wilson to take care of them, and the other hundred I put in the bank for them, against they were old enough to need schooling, as was their father's wish. Mr. Wilson has come regularly for the money, and of course I thought they were all right, as usual."

"But it was very careless of you!" began the editor.

"I know it," he interrupted. "But Mrs. Wilson was a mother to them; and I'm so busy—a carpenter I am—and never get a moment to look after them. I never knew Mrs. Wilson was dead. That idle brute of a man, I suppose, didn't tell me, lest I should take the children away—as of course I shall to-day."

"Where shall you put them?" asked the editor. "That baby needs a doctor's care, besides good food and nursing; and the boy, too—if indeed it isn't too late."

"I'm monstrous sorry, mister," said the honest carpenter, his face growing even redder in his excitement. "I wouldn't a had John Walker's babies suffer for anything. It's my fault, and I know it. I was too easy like. But I'm going now to take them to my own house, though it's full and running over, till I can find the right place for them."

"Don't keep the poor things long in a house full of children," said the editor. "They're too weak and miserable."

"No, I won't," said the carpenter, "my old woman won't favor the plan a minute."

Well, the next day I hunted up those starving babies again, and where do you suppose I found them? The conscience-stricken guardian had found a woman who had been a house servant all her life, and who was a born nurse, besides a warm-hearted woman. The four hundred a year was a fortune to her, and there, in two pleasant rooms near the guardian's own house, where he could always see to them, I found the children comfortably established. Jimmy lay smiling happily on a little bed in the corner; the hungry babe, well fed, for once, sleeping quietly in a cradle, and Jo, in a new calico dress, helping the pleasant-faced old nurse spread an abundant though plain meal.

I wish you could have seen Jimmy's face when I gave him the flowers I had brought for him, and told him I hoped I should never again see him sitting on the bare stones.

"But I'm right glad I did that time," he said quietly, "for if it hadn't been for you and that editor man, I'd a been there yet."—Olive Thorne.

An Orator's Last Words.

Brilliant and eloquent, S. S. Prentiss was the idolized lawyer of the Southwest. A Maine boy, he made himself a place in the hearts of those who liked not the Yankees. His genius facinated, and his genial manners won them in spite of their prejudices.

He might have been their political leader, but a brief experience in Congress so disgusted him with practical politics that he refused its honors. A fortune awaited him, but he turned from it, because he would not abandon social pleasures, nor practice self-denial. At last he resolved to work himself out of debt, and provide for the education of his children.

"I must work!" he said to those who had advised rest, because they saw that his good resolution had come too late. The spirit was now willing, but the body, enfeebled by disease and dissipation, refused to obey its commands.

"Why, good sirs, a man cannot lie in bed and make his living," he answered to friends who bade him leave New Orleans and rest on a plantation.

Nerving himself, he appeared in a case which drew out the culture of the city to see him. Never was he more brilliant in wit and eloquence. He did not know, but his friends did, that it was the swan's death song. They shaded their eyes, for they saw that the vigor of the intellect made more apparent the decay of the body.

"Take me home," he whispered to a friend, when recovering from the prostration in which his eloquent plea had left him. He was borne home on a river boat—to die.

On the night of the arrival, the family smiled mournfully to see his old self return.

"Gather me a half bushel of roses with the dew on," he said to a relative. "Put them in a basin and stand it by my bed," was the remark, as the roses were brought in.

During his illness the thought that he was leaving his family destitute made him talk much about suits and raising money. Now and then the great orator became a boy again, and wandered to his Maine home.

"Dear mother, do you love me?" repeated again and again, showed that her teachings and prayers were in his mind.

In the hours of consciousness he was much distressed at the idea of death. Mary, his pious wife, urged him to trust in the Saviour.

"You do not know how wicked I have been. God will never forgive me," he replied.

"'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow,'" replied the wife, if you will turn to the Lord.

"Pray, dear. Won't you pray? Don't you remember the prayers your mother taught you?" she continued.

"Oh, yes! but I want you to pray with me."

She repeated the Lord's Prayer, he responding at each petition, "Amen!"

"O God, the Son!" she heard him whisper, as if striving to recall the petition of the Litany, "O God, the Son, Redeemer of the World, have mercy upon us miserable sinners!"

On a Sabbath evening the wife was busy in the room, his eyes wistfully following her. "Mary," she heard, and hastening to him, received an embrace and a kiss. It was the last word uttered on earth by the eloquent advocate.

One solemn thought is suggested. No words uttered by the orator in moments of highest inspiration, were so treasured as those whispered "Amens" and that sighed-out "O God, the Son!" They were words of penitence.

His imagination in its uttermost wanderings never brought back a scene which thrilled as did the "Dear, dear mother, do you love me?"

It revealed the boy at his mother's knee, and suggested the hope that at last he received the Saviour as a little child.—Youth's Companion.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Language of Insects.

An English scientist has made the surprising discovery that flies have a language of their own, inaudible to unaided human ears, though no doubt distinctly audible to the ears of insects. This is not the buzzing tone common to all flying insects, which is produced by the rapid movement of their wings, and is but a mere incidental effect, as meaningless as is the sound of our foot-falls while we are walking and conversing with a friend. But it consists of other tones made voluntarily, no doubt for the purposes of limited communication with one another.

This discovery was made by means of the newly invented microphone, while magnifying the tramp of a fly, walking on a table, till it sounded as loud as that of a horse passing over a wooden bridge. By close observation, during these experiments, other sounds were heard differing from those of its footfalls and wings, which proved to be its trumpeting calls, issuing from its proboscis, and resembling somewhat the distant whinnying of a horse. Such are some of the results of that marvellous instrument, which acts for the ear of man as the microscope does for the eye.

Before this discovery was made it was not supposed that there were such things as microphonical sounds, the same as there are microscopical sights, or that small creatures, such as insects, could make and hear sounds as much less in itensity compared to those audible to man as the insect is more diminutive in size. This, however, is now assured, and is every way reasonable if we had but reflected that animalcules, far beyond the reach of unaided human vision—hundreds in a single drop of water—see each other perfectly, as is proved by their pursuit of one another with all the accuracy of movement evinced by the gar fish in chasing its prey. If these microscopical animals can see objects, as they evidently do, a thousand times smaller than are visible to unaided human eyes, is it not reasonable to assume, as the microphone demonstrates, that they can also produce and hear sounds a thousand times less in intensity than are audible to the unassisted human ear?

The Sea of Gallilee.

Riding by the foot of Hattin, over the place where, 700 years ago, Saladin annihilated the Crusaders' power in Palestine, we at length reached a ridge where we looked out on the distant hills of Bashan, and down far below us upon a dark blue pear, or harp-shaped sheet of water, lying snugly in a deep inclosure of high brown hills. Though less than 13 miles long 7 miles broad, yet measured by the events it has witnessed, it is a kind of Pacific Ocean. It was the Sea of Galilee. As we moved over the long way downward to its level—650 feet below the Mediterranean Sea—we had time to grasp and fix its whole aspect and surroundings. It lacks boldness of outline, for its hills slope gradually back from the shore, or leave a narrow plain, as at Gennesaret and Butiha. But the lights and shadows lie sweetly on the hill-sides at night and morning; the northern end is broken into pleasant little bays, and Hermon looms grandly up beyond, far off, yet seemingly near. The whole aspect of the lake is one that suggests the thought and the lack of the beautiful homes. It was still a long ride to the lake. The region we were passing, once brimful of life and activity, was utterly forsaken now. The entire lake lay spread before us, and nearly the whole of its coast line, along or near which once lay the cities Tarichea, Tiberias, Hippo, Gamala, Gergesa, Bethsaida, Chorazin, Capernaum, Magdala, and Beth Arbel. Of these cities Tiberias once had its Senate of 600; Gamala was able to resist and defeat Vespasian at the head of three legions; and when captured by Vespasian and Titus it lost 4,000 in the fight, and 5,000 who hurled themselves or were pushed down the precipices; while Tarichea according to Josephus, was able to furnish 16,500 for slaughter in a sea fight with the Romans, 1,200 slain in cold blood in the tedium, 6,000 captive youth to dig for Nero in the Isthmus, and 30,400 to be sold into slavery. The only existing visible representatives of all this strength and activity were the wretched little clusters of huts called Mejdel (Magdala), and the shrunken Tiberias, with its 2,000 inhabitants. From our path not a vestige of the other places could be discerned. It was near sunset when we entered Tiberias. We followed the road through the gate, but could easily have passed through the rents in the walls. The now squalid city mentioned but once in the New Testament, has been a chief home of Jewish learning since the destruction of Jerusalem. Here the Jerusalem Talmud was completed, and here is now what may be called the present theological school of the Jews.—Prof. Bartlett.

The English Cottage Girl.

As a child the cottage girl "roughs" it in the road and in the fields. In winter she learns to slide, and to endure the cold and rain, till she often becomes what to any one accustomed to a more delicate life, seems positively impervious to weather. The servants in old-fashioned farm-houses really did not seem to know what it was to feel cold. Even now-a-days a servant fresh from an outlying hamlet, where her parents probably could procure but little fuel beyond what was necessary for cooking, at first cares not an atom whether there be a fire in the kitchen or not. Such girls are as hardy as the men of their native place. After a time hot rooms and a profusion of meat and good living generally saps and undermines this natural strength. Then they shiver like town-bred people. The cottage child is often locked out by her parents, who go to work and leave her in charge of her still smaller brothers and sisters. They play about the hedges and ditches, and very rarely come to any harm. In autumn their little fingers are employed in picking up the acorns fallen from the oaks, for which the farmers pay so much per bushel. In the spring is their happiest time. The joy of life, the warm sunshine and pleasant breeze of spring—is not wholly lost upon them, despite their hard fare and not very affectionate treatment they receive at home. Such a girl may then be seen sitting under the willow beside the brook, with her charges around her—the little brother that can just toddle, the baby that can but crawl and crow in the green fresh grass. Between them lies a whole pile of flowers—dandelion stems made into rings, and the rings joined together so as to form a chain; rushes plaited; blue bells; cowslips tied up in balls, and cowslips loose, their yellow petals scattered over the sward. The brook flows murmuring by, with an occasional splash as a water rat leaps in or a fish rises to an insect. The children weave their flowers and chant some old doggerel rhymes with little or no meaning. Long afterwards that girl will retain an unconscious memory of the scene, when wheeling her employer's children out on some suburban road, she seeks a green meadow and makes a cowslip ball for the delighted infants. In summer they go down to the hay field, but dare not meddle with the hay, which the baliff does not like to see disturbed; they remain under the shadow of the hedge. In autumn they search for the berries, like the birds, nibbling the hips and haws, tasting crabs and sloes, or feasting on the fruit of a hazel bush. Be it spring or summer, autumn or winter, wherever the child may be, her eyes are ever on the watch to find a dead stick or a broken branch, too heavy to lift, but which may be dragged behind, in order to feed the cottage fire at night. This is her first duty as a child; if she remains in the hamlet this will be her duty through life, and to the last as an aged woman. So in London, round the purlieus of buildings in the course of erection—even in the central thoroughfares, in busy Fleet street—children hang about the temporary hoardings, and pick up the chips and splinters of deal. But the latter have not the pleasure of the blue bells and cowslips, nor even of the hips and haws, nor does the fresh pure breeze play upon their foreheads. Rough though it be, the childhood of the cottage girl is not wholly without its recompenses, not the least of which is sturdy health. Now that good schools are open in every village, so soon as children are old enough to walk the distance, often considerable, they are sent off every morning. At all events, if it does nothing else, it causes the mothers to give them a daily washing and tidying up, which is in itself an advantage. They travel under the charge of the girl; often two or three such small parties join company, coming from as many cottages. In the warmer months the lanes and fields they cross form a long play ground for them, and picking flowers and searching for birds' nests pass away the time. In winter they have to face the mire and rain. —Standard.

Sunshine.

We wish that we could persuade every one who reads this to let more sunshine into their houses. Draw up the window shades, throw back the curtains, and admit the warm radiance to every room. It will do you good in more ways than one. Physically, the sunlight is a necessity, while to our souls it acts equally as a tonic. You can't be half so anxious and troubled when the bright sunshine falls about you, as when you sit in a dimly lighted room. Try it and see. Mark how your spirits will rise, your hopes revive, your very plans seem more easy of accomplishment, in the glowing sunlight. And then, when to the radiance of an earthly sun is added the brightness of the Sun of Righteousness, shining upon us day by day, we shall find it easy to be cheerful and happy, even though troubles assail.

Let us have sunshine in our homes, in our hearts, and in our lives.

Liebig's Cure for Intemperance.

The Scientific American contains an account of an experimental test of Liebig's theory for the cure of habitual drunkenness. The experiment consisted of a simple change of diet, and was tried upon twenty-seven persons, with satisfactory results. The diet proposed is farinaceous, and in the cases reported was composed of macaroni, haricot beans, dried peas and lentils. The dishes were made palatable by being thoroughly boiled and seasoned with butter or olive oil. Breads of a highly glutinous quality were used, care being taken to prevent their being soured in course of preparation. In this explanation of the theory, Liebig remarks that the disinclination for alchoholic stimulants, after partaking of such food, is due to the carbonaceous starch contained therein, which renders unnecessary and distasteful the carbons of the liquors.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did them no good. I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well, and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost—I know it. A WORKINGMAN."

RICHARD BAXTER.

MR. EDITOR:—The volume of Sir James Stephens, page 150, seq., of the modern British classics, contains an admirable essay on the "Life and Times of Richard Baxter," by Rev. William Orme. "This publication" of the Life and Times of Baxter, by Mr. Orme, as far back as 1830, "was, in the legal phrase, a demand for judgment, in the appeal of the great Nonconformist to the ultimate tribunal of posterity, from the censures of his own age, on himself and writings. We think that the decision was substantially right, and that, on the whole, it must be affirmed." Most heartily do we commend this essay of Sir James to those who may not find it so easy to procure the work of Mr. Orme for a pretty full elucidation of the "Times," rather than the "Life of Baxter," and they were stirring "Times" indeed. Having within a short time past refreshed our spirits and our memory by reading this essay, and which called up before us so vividly the impressions that Ormo's work made upon our mind years ago, we propose, in this paper to give to your readers a sketch of the "Life" and incidentally a little of the "Times" of this great man.

During those troubled times of the English Church there arose many individuals of eminent piety, vast intellectual resources and great moral courage. But in the galaxy there are few brighter stars than Richard Baxter. Few men, indeed, of any age, have exhibited a more holy and blameless life, or exerted upon the spiritual interests of the world a more effective and salutary influence than this oppressed and persecuted dissenter.

As a scholar Baxter must be ranked in the class of "self made men." When a youth his literary advantages were few; but he did not remain in ignorance. A strong thirst for knowledge, a vehement ardor in its pursuit, resolution and perseverance which lead to nothing but the will of God, bore him successfully forward in a course of acquisition, and his intellectual resources became various extensive and valuable.

In 1638, being twenty-three years old, he was set apart to the sacred ministry. At his ordination he subscribed to the bitterly disputed rites and canons of the Established Church—a step which he afterward deeply lamented. For, when he became acquainted on the one hand with the self-denying and self-sacrificing piety of his dissenting brethren, together with the reasons of their resistance, and on the other hand with the bad spirit, weak arguments and the exorbitant and oppressive claims of the prelates, he entirely changed his views, shifted his ground and commenced supporting the cause of the nonconformists, with the zeal of fresh conviction and with all the vehemence of his sanguine spirit.

Upon the opening of the Long Parliament he was chosen Vicar of Kidderminster. His labors in that place were eminently successful. These have been so often described and are so well known, I pass them by with a very brief summing up. When he went there iniquity, open and unblushing, prevailed, and the religion of the heart was scarcely known. He labored faithfully, and his efforts were not in vain. A powerful work of grace soon commenced and spread, and the aspect of the whole town was changed. The Sabbath was observed, riot and dissipation ceased, the tongue of blasphemy was silent, the voice of prayer and praise was heard in almost every house, and the silent influence of the Spirit felt in nearly every heart. The truths which he preached, and which were instrumental in producing this wonderful reformation, were the essential doctrines of the evangelical system. "The great fundamental principles," says Calamy, "contained in the baptismal covenant, even a right knowledge and belief of, and subjection and love to, God the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, were the things which he daily opened to them, and with the greatest importunity labored to imprint upon their minds." Indeed, Baxter was, in the best sense of the words, a revival preacher; and if he was living now, he would be found among the warmest friends and the most efficient supporters of revivals of religion.

During the civil war, which commenced in 1641, Baxter withdrew to Coventry, and preached to the garrison and the inhabitants. He avowed his decided disapprobation of the measures which Cromwell adopted to accomplish his ascendency; and went so far as even publicly to reprove him, when in the height of his power, for his ambitious usurpation. He preached before the Parliament the day before they voted the restoration of the King. Immediately on his return Charles appointed Baxter one of his chaplains in ordinary, and he was even allowed to preach before the King and his Court. He was one of the commissioners appointed to meet at Savoy to settle the long disputed points of worship. During the whole conference Baxter was earnest for accommodation. He was ready to meet his opponents on what was then called the middle-ground of "primitive Episcopacy." But the Bishops were unyielding and the conference was dissolved, having accomplished nothing but a wider and more irreconcilable separation.

In the beginning of 1662, the famous, or rather infamous Act of Uniformity was passed, which silenced, on pain of imprisonment and of the most cruel deprivations, all who would not subscribe to the ultra Episcopacy which then prevailed. By this act about two thousand ministers of the gospel, holy, faithful, laborious men were ejected from their respective fields of usefulness; torn from their affectionate and beloved flocks, and "at once buried alive in a common grave." Amongst these were such men as Owen, Bates, Baxter, Corbet, Woodbridge, Charnock, Fairfax, Poole and others, some of the richest minds and the noblest spirits of England. From this time till his death Baxter was often a sufferer. His faith and patience were sorely tried. But the gold shone the brighter for the furnace. His terrestrial sun passed behind a cloud, but the Sun of Righteousness beamed more clearly upon his spirit. "The love of Christ constrained him," and he dared to obey God in defiance of men. He continued to preach and toil to promote the glory of God and the salvation of the perishing about him. For his self denying efforts he was three times put into prison. But he rejoiced in the midst of his trials, and well he might, for they were fast ripening his soul for the communion and joys of heaven. The account of Baxter's trial before the notorious Jeffries has often reminded us of the trial of our Lord at the bar of Pilate. The resemblance would be more perfect except that, in insolence and abuse, the English Judge far exceeds the Roman Governor. In 1691 he was granted a peaceful release from sin and suffering and sorrow, and an abundant admission to that world where "the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." D. L.

THE INEXORABLE STREAM.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M. D.

There sported a child by a streamlet's side,
At noon on a summer's day,
And oft, as he turned to the rippled tide
He asked that its waters stay.

He plucked of the flowers that around him grew,
And plaited a garland fair,
And far on the gurgling waves he threw
The wreath he had twined him there.

Exultant he stood in his infant glee,
And looked that the ripples cease,
But onward they danced to their parent sea,
Nor aught for his boon decrease

Reclining anew on the flowery glade,
He gazed at his wreath and wept,
While afar on the crested foam it played,
And onward and onward leapt.

The sun was yet high, and in folded form
The clouds, as they loomed remote
Portended the might of the coming storm
By its harbingers muffled note.

Still louder it pealed, and the lightning's gleam
Shot chained from the blackened cloud;
Yet lingered that boy by the flowing stream,
And wept for its stay aloud.

The tempest uprisen now hustling swept
O'er meadows, and hill, and grove,
And madly the stream, where the sporter wept,
Immingled and onward drove.

His sporting was o'er and with swimming eye,
A moment he gazed again,
And thus to the waters that hurried by,
He uttered his plaintive strain:

Will ye go—will ye go?
And regard me not,
Though the noontide glow,
And the sun be hot?

Will ye on—will ye on?
Will ye never stay,
Though the sun be gone,
And the lightning's play?

Though the thunders are heard,
In their deafening call—
Will ye brave their ward,
And despise them all?

Is it naught—is it naught,
Though I throw beneath,
What I fondly wrought,
My own woven wreath?

Will ye stay—will ye stay,
If I plunge me there,
And demand away
Now the wreath ye bear?

I will go—I will go,
And from off your wake,
Till ye cease to flow,
Take the wreath I gave!

He spake, and extending his little hand,
He plunged in the foamy wave;
And struggling awhile for his flowery band,
He sank in a billowy grave.

That stream flowed on, and in angry tone,
Bore giver and wreath away;
Not infantine tears, nor a mother's moan,
Could bid it in aught delay.

Ah! vain is the effort by puny might,
To hinder the stream of time;
But on, with its course unchanged in spite,
It rolls in its flow sublime.

CHARACTERISTICS of CHRISTIAN WORSHIP

So long as human nature is not uniform, so long will men tend either to as much ceremonialism as is at all permissible or to as little of it as is at all practicable. The ritualist and the Puritan "will never cease out of the land." To either extreme there attaches a danger. A cultus overlaid with sensuous pomp tends to substitute forms for real devotion. On the other hand, a severely simple service, in which the expression of worship and the aids to it are reduced to a minimum, is apt to enfeeble devotion for lack of that support which all genuine feeling finds in its own healthy and appropriate utterance. The two dangers, however, are scarcely of equal gravity. The latter is a danger of defect; and the more robust and masculine the piety of the Church is, the less will it feel such a defect. The former is a danger of deterioration, devotional feeling degenerating either into formalism or into superstition; a danger this to which human nature is peculiarly exposed, and from which spiritual religion has frightfully suffered. Besides, a religion whose essence is most spiritual demands only the most simple expression. On the whole, therefore, safety seems to incline to the rule—rather less of the sensuous and outward in cultus than more. Rather a service bald of ornament, and severe in its expression of religious life, than one which even tends to any excessive cultivation of the outward form.—Catholic Presbyterian.

YOUR PASTOR'S WIFE.

Zion's Herald speaks this word for "Your Pastor's Wife:"

"Remember that your pastor's wife has a woman's heart. Do not be too frank and free in criticising her to her face. She may keep a calm countenance in your presence, but the flood gates will give way when you leave the house. Do not be too unjust or ungenerous. You have a small church and pay a very limited salary. You think your pastor's wife should do her work without the aid of a servant. Some of you have no such assistance. While she is struggling to do this, possibly without your robust health, do not lecture her because she visits so little, and does not attend all the social meetings. You can readily visit her, but there are fifty families in the congregation to whom she must pay equal attention. She heard your well-meant, but sharp criticism the other day, and tried faintly to pass it off with a smile and response like a Christian woman; but she sank under the weight of it when you left, and her husband found her utterly discouraged, exhausted by weeping and reclining upon the couch in quite a fever. Carry balm when you visit her, not an irritant."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From the London Weekly Review:

Lord Bury, Under Secretary of State for War, has been received into the Roman Catholic Church.

A German Priest, Father Haller, who as priest at Arquennes had violently attacked the Government from the pulpit, has been expelled from Belgium.

The Pope on Friday gave audience to 500 French pilgrims, and exhorted them to persevere in order to save their country, which would never lose its title of eldest daughter of the Church.

The approaching Consistory is confirmed. He has been named at the special request of the King of Portugal. There will thus be seven foreign and three Italian cardinal created on the 12th inst.

In the new volume of his enlarged History of England, Mr. Green declares that "if its government by ministers give it the outer look of an ecclesiastical despotism, no Church constitution has proved in practice so democratic as that of Scotland.

At Shipton, in England, the smallest living in the English Church is found. The rector gets $15 a year. A smaller one than this is reported from Massachusetts, where the minister receives $4 50 for a year's service.

The natives of South-East Cape, New Guinea, have poisoned six native teachers by placing a upas tree in the drinking water. Fifteen of the twenty men, wives and children, landed there by the John Williams are already dead from poison fever.

The Roman Catholic world of London has recently received a shock, the Rev. W. W. Roberts, a nephew of Cardinal Manning, and an Oblate of St. Charles Borromeo, Bayswater, having so far forgotten his vows as to have contracted matrimony—and in a Presbyterian place of worship! The Rev. Dr. Case, formerly a student of the Collegio Pio, at Rome, and until recently a priest of the Gloucester Mission and Canon of Clifton, has also left the bosom of the Roman Church, and is now living as a private gentleman.

In Belgium the religious battle is becoming more and more violent. At Tournai the absolution has been refused to pupils of the Athenee, and they were informed that they would not receive it so long as they continued at the establishment. The Belgian Constitution says that the State pays "the salaries and pensions" of the clergy. Already there exists a law depriving of the right of pension the numerous members of the clergy who have been condemned for immoral conduct. It is plain that the acceptance of salaries from the State implies on the part of the clergy the fulfilment of their duties towards the faithful, and that the State would eventually have the right to deprive of their salaries those members of the clergy who prove recusant.

An idea of the way in which some of the French country priests recommend the Republic from the pulpit may be formed from the following extract from a sermon delivered recently by the Abbe Denmenjon, curate of Port, a small commune in the Ariege: "You are a lot of ignorant persons; whither is your Republic leading you? To an abyss, to another sanguinary 1793. You are duped. You allow yourselves to be deceived by lying newspapers. I should be a Republican if your Government were a good one; but it seeks to destroy religion. However, the Mayor will not marry you unless you go to church; marriage without the church is not marriage. You must resist the laws that are being proposed. You must violate them and have the courage to come here and receive the Holy Sacrament. Your Republic wishes to establish absolute equality, and to deprive you of what you possess in order to give it to idlers and vagabonds." The authorities have resolved to take proceedings against the priest.

The literature of the Brahmo Somaj is becoming very lively since the disruption in the body caused by Baboo Chunder Sen allowing her daughter, a mere child, to be married to a native Prince. Lately the Baboo delivered a lecture entitled "Am I an Inspired Prophet?" In the course of his lecture he asserted that his life was "destined for asceticism and abstinence, for the simplicities of faith and life," and that he was to be debarred from the luxuries of the world." One of the party which has broken away from his leadership has published a pamphlet, in which he shows how Chunder Sen practices what he preaches. In the first place, though the leader of the Brahmo Somaj calls his house a cottage, in reality it is a palatial building with a noble garden around it. "That," says the critic, "is abstinence No. 1." On the railway he invariably travels first-class, and he is never seen on foot. This is abstinence No. 2. In the third place, he eats choice edibles, wears rich dresses, uses all sort of perfume, and keeps half-a-dozen servants. Fourthly, he exacts menial personal services from his missionaries. One fans him when he is tired, or stretched on bed for sleep; another pours rose-water on his head when he is a little giddy; and a third handles his feet slowly and softly for long hours to ease him of any little possible pain in them, or simply to make the approach of sleep sweeter and richer to him. Is not this abstinence par excellence?"

MISCELLANY.

At San Francisco, James O'Neil who acted the part of Christ in the recent Passion play, has been arrested, tried and convicted of a misdemeanor.

War balloons, one of them containing thirty-eight thousand cubic feet, are getting in readiness for transfer from London to the seat of the Zulu war. The practicability of sending up a fresh supply of gas to a balloon, while it is in the air has been demonstrated.

A somewhat interesting discovery has just been made in St. Giles' Cathedral, Edinburgh. On the floor of the south transept being raised, three leaden coffins were found, one of which has justly been supposed by antiquaries to contain the remains of the "Good Regent" Moray, Queen Mary's half-brother, who was buried there in February, 1570, John Knox preaching on the occasion.

Five years ago the Duke of Bedford presented a noble statue of John Bunyan to the town from which his Grace derives his name, and since then he gave to the church of which Bunyan was the pastor a magnificent door adorned with the scenes illustrative of the "Pilgrim's Progress." We now learn that the Duke and Mr. Boehm, the sculptor, are about to present a model of the statue to the Baptist College in Regent's Park, London, of which Dr. Angus is the Principal. In the library of the same institution a statue of Robert Hall has recently been erected.

Proceedings of the General Assembly.

THIRD DAY.

We take from Courier-Journal report.

The Assembly was called to order Saturday at 9 o'clock. A. M., by the Moderator.

COLUMBIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

The report of the faculty of this seminary was read, showing that there have been twenty-eight students in attendance and one resident graduate. A number of valuable pamphlets and a few bound volumes have been added during the year. The number of volumes at present is 18,956, besides a large collection of pamphlets suitable for binding. Rev. Charles P. Hemphill has resigned his position as Hebrew tutor, in order to prosecute his studies elsewhere, and Dr. Howe has discharged the duties of that place. The agency of Rev. C. E. Chichester was very successful until the yellow fever scourge brought his labors to a close. These will be resumed after a while. The larger part of the funds of the Perkins professorship has been lost through the failure of the institutions in which the funds were invested, and the aid of the Assembly is asked in the matter.

Dr. Parks the Stated Clerk, said another Commissioner, W. A. Nicholson, ruling elder of Enoree, had been enrolled.

THE SABBATH.

The committee appointed at the last Assembly to report upon the subject of Sabbath Observance, of which Rev. James Stacy, D. D., was Chairman made the following written report:

On account of the absence of the Chairman in Europe during the past summer, it was late in the fall before the committee were called together, and not until after the meeting of most of the larger and more important ecclesiastical bodies had taken place. Since that time, however, your committee have been endeavoring faithfully to obey the instructions given, as far, at least, as other engagements would allow. They have been in correspondence with the New York Sabbath Committee, the Sabbath Alliance and the International Association of Philadelphia, the New Jersey Association of Maryland. They have communicated with only two of the Synods of our Church for the reason above stated. They have addressed, however, a letter to all the Presbytories, asking them to place this subject upon their docket and consider the same at their spring session. They have also written to thirteen of the Conferences of the M. E. Church South. They have also been in correspondence with the Federation Internationale of Geneva, Switzerland. They have raised the necessary funds, procured and distributed over eleven hundred copies of the tract issued by our Committee of Publication styled "The Holy Sabbath," sending one to each minister in our entire Church, as far as their address was known. They have endeavored, also, to enlist the sympathies and services of the editors of several journals of the different denominations, asking them to make this one of the more prominent themes, both for their editorials and selections. They have also sent a communication to the Southern Baptist convention at Atlanta, to the Northern General Assembly now in session at Saratoga Springs, and to the Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in session in Memphis, asking them to take action in the matter; and in addition to all this they have been gathering statistics and all the information within their reach bearing upon the general subject and endeavoring as far as possible to spy out the land and see how it lies.

From a general survey of the field as far as we have been able to view it, we feel fully persuaded that the last Assembly has neither acted hastily, nor yet given undue prominence to this matter. Notwithstanding the grave doubt expressed by one of our ecclesiastical bodies to those who have closely inquired into the matter, it is obvious that there is a growing tendency to laxity in views on this whole question of Sabbath observance. The loose transatlantic ideas are coming over with every tide of immigration. And though we in distant portions of the South may not yet feel the influence to any great extent, it is nevertheless stealthily creeping in, and like leaven, is quietly but surely working. The recent movements in Cincinnati and Louisville, the growing disposition on the part of the secular press to make their Sunday issues specially interesting and attractive, the increasing patronage of Sunday trains by professing Christians and even ministers of the Gospel, many of whom do not hesitate to travel on Sunday trains to fill their appointments, the habitual silence of many pulpits on this subject, and last, though not least, the lamentable example so recently set in the halls of the country, when the supreme lawmaking power in the land openly, and in the eyes of the nation and of the world, desecrated the sanctity of the Lord's day by appropriating it to the transaction of Congressional business all furnish evidence of this laxity. And we may here remark that the present remoteness of the evil from us is no protection. Society, like the atmosphere above us, cannot be agitated in one direction without sending the influence in others. Any evil practice in one section, like the cold wave in the northwest, will soon begin to travel, and unless arrested will continue to spread, until the whole country is brought under its influence and feels its chilling power. Let the plague break out in any country, and how soon our authorities would be enforcing the law of quarantine. The action would be wise, the course commendable. Evil practices like the plague, when once established will soon begin to spread in every direction. The time to fight any contagion is in its incipiency.

Whilst our rulers are so ready to look after the physical health of the nation, it is greatly to be regretted that they are so slow in realizing its moral necessities. The question of the Sabbath has much more to do with our political and social systems than many are ready to admit. It has a political as well as religious outlook. Standing in close connection with the morals of the country, like any other question of morals, it must bear directly upon the question of national prosperity. The ordinance stands as the representative of the Lord, and cannot be disregarded, without to that extent disowning allegiance to the God of heaven.

The hebdominal division of time being the foundation of God's scheme of creation, and also of redemption, is also clearly the foundation of his projected scheme of providence, with reference both to Church and State. He has ordained that man shall within six days do all his work and rest the seventh; and every law or action that ignores this regulation is contravening His plan, and everything that contravenes any of His plans must in the end work disastrously to all concerned. It is clearly to the best interest of the race closely to scan and rigidly to observe all the rules and principles of the Creator, as revealed either in revelation or nature. In one word, to keep as near the divine plan as possible. It is only in this way that the great problems of human civilization and national reform can ever be solved. Real progress in mechanism has been attained only by a close observance and imitation of nature. When man departs from that scheme—when he sets his judgment against the Divine judgment, and his law against the Divine law—the scheme of the Great Architect is marred, the time of its completion delayed, and the interest of the whole jeopardized.

Our legislators and rulers have generally acted upon this principle, inasmuch as they have in the main based our constitution and laws upon the teaching of the Scripture. In this they have acted wisely. Queen Victoria uttered a great truth as well as a noble sentiment when, in response to the inquiry of the African king, she gave this answer, accompanying the gift of a Bible: "This book is the secret of England's greatness."

Whilst our constitution and laws profess conformity to the Word of God, there is one particular in which, in their practical workings at least, they are sadly in want of harmony with it. While the Scriptures say positively and unequivocally, "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. In it thou shalt not do any work, thou nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man servant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates," Railroad and other corporations are allowed to ply their vocations as on other days. In the language of one of our correspondents, "The Sunday freight business is enormous, bringing terrible oppression upon thousands of men." So in the postal service. The running of trains, the carrying and distributing of mails on the Lord's day on the thousands of roads, and the ten thousands of postoffices in this broad land is a great work, requiring a great number of employes and a vast outlay of physical labor. This robbing so large a portion of our citizens of their seventh day rest is a wrong done them, as they are unjustly deprived of a boon conferred by the Creator upon every creature. It is a wrong done the law of God, as it casts contempt upon its authority. It is a wrong done the Christian Church, as it weakens its testimony, and in many instances interferes with its services. It is a wrong done the whole country, as it places the entire nation in a position of antagonism to the divine law and the divine plan, which will necessitate chastisements and scourgings of various descriptions, if not final overthrow. Revolution must, of necessity, follow revolution, until the Governments of this world are fashioned after the principles and teachings of the Scriptures. And it would be well for the people of this country to remember that there is no new world—no inviting Eldorado in the distant West to which these principles may again be transplanted and begin the experiment anew. The struggle must be at home. The elimination, if ever effectual, must be wrought with our own hands, and here upon our own soil.

In this action of the Government it is impossible to see upon what principles of equity or righteousness its conduct is based. We are utterly at a loss to see with what consistency it can forbid in others what it allows in itself. How it can require individual citizens to cease from their daily toil whilst it is driving its own business and carrying on its own work on the seventh day as well as any other.

Nor can we see upon what principle of justice it can allow railroad and other corporations to carry on their traffic through the same period of seven days, while individual citizens are required to cease from theirs. That is a strange system of ethics, indeed which condemns an action in an individual while he stands in his isolation, but justifies the same when he merges in the constituency of the Government or becomes a stockholder in some legalized corporation. It is needless for us to declare that the word of God recognizes no such distinctions. If it be right for the Government and these corporations to violate the Sabbath, it is right for individuals to do the same. If it be wrong for individuals to do it, it is equally wrong for the Government and these corporations.

It is not enough to say that it is a work of necessity and mercy. The Master in his exposition of the law has clearly defined the only exceptions to the rule, and it is utterly impossible to see how, upon any known principles of interpretation, this wholesale and constant discharge of regular and servile work can be analogous to the few exceptional cases given. It is neither lifting the ox out of the ditch, nor leading the ass to water. It is purely a question of gain. It is the same unquenchable thirst for riches, that has influenced this people, as the ancient people of God, to believe that there is more profit in seven continuous days of toil than in six of labor, with the seventh as a day of rest.

Nor is it an answer to say that the Sabbath is a religious institution, and that the Government is a political organization, formed for temporal and political purposes solely, and therefore as such has nothing to do with religion. We most heartily indorse this sentiment, and most earnestly insist upon its rigid enforcement. As a Church, we are ready to affix our broadest seal to the doctrine of the eternal separation of Church and State. Let the things of Cæsar over be kept separate from the things of God. But this matter of a day of rest is something that concerns the kingdom of Cæsar, as well as the kingdom of Christ. There are two distinct questions here before us. The one a moral, the other a religious one; the one a State, the other a religious question. The one concerns us as citizens, the other as Christians. It is to the former of these that we are now speaking. It is to the question that concerns us as citizens—that concerns our temporal interests and welfare as individuals, and our temporal prosperity as a nation, that we are directing attention; and we insist upon it, that this is a question for legislative consideration, inasmuch as it involves the question of morals, and the question of morals bears directly upon the question of national prosperity. God has so constituted the world that the temporal rests upon the moral, and the moral upon the religious. The field of morals touches religion upon the one side, and human government on the other, and, like the ocean separating two continents, is the property alike of both. No government can flourish without good morals, and no good morals can exist without a clear recognition of the teachings of Scripture. The true interests of the country demand that the Sabbath be protected, as the marriage relation, or human life and property, and for the same reason. If the government has authority to forbid adultery, murder and theft, because these things are enemies to its material progress and stability, for the very same reason it has authority to forbid the outward violation of the Sabbath law. It has nothing to do with the anger that is in murder, the lust that is in adultery or the concupiscence that is in theft, for these things fall within the purview of religion. But it has the right to forbid the overt acts to which they lead, because hurtful to its interests. So it has no right to say that its citizens shall indulge in holy affections or attend religious exercises on the Sabbath, for those also fall within the scope of religion. But it has the right to require that its citizens shall abstain from all labor and every open and flagrant breach of the peace and order of the day.

As to the questions what can be done toward abating the evil, and what is our duty in the premises? we answer, that our duty is very clear in one direction, at least. "Ye are my witnesses," saith the Lord. It is the duty of the church to bear testimony to God's truth, and the teaching of the Scriptures on this subject, and as far as possible to train the public conscience aright. And not simply to bear testimony with the lip, but also with the life. Preaching, unsupported by practice, would be wholly ineffectual. A mere resolution without observance on the part of ministers, elders and members, would be utterly futile and vain. We hope, therefore, that the Assembly will first of all insist that ministers and elders and members of the church shall themselves set the example by rendering due respect in the observance of the day. For without this, any deliverance on the subject, no matter how admirable, would only provoke the taunting retort, "Physician, heal thyself."

Whether much can be done by way of petition will depend very much upon the style of the address, the zeal with which it is presented, but especially upon the number and character of the petitioners. Two of the Synods (Alabama and North Carolina) have, through their respective committees, petitioned their Legislatures. The petition of the first was too late to be fairly before the Legislature, and was defeated. That of the second was so far successful as to secure a law forbidding the running of "freight trains on the Sabbath." If all the Christians of the different denominations could only be aroused to unite in one grand effort, we feel fully assured that much could be done toward abating the evil, and preventing any further encroachments upon the sanctity of the day.

In several of the larger cities, and in few of the States, there are Sabbath Associations, composed of members of the different denominations, which have been doing a good deal, in a quiet way, toward promoting Sabbath observance. If such associations could be formed in every State, they could doubtless do much toward restraining the obvious tendency to Sabbath lawlessness and desecration.

An effort is being made to hold an international meeting of all the associations in this country and Canada, to meet some time in the fall, with a view to considering the whole subject, and devising, if possible, some measure for the arrest of this national evil. What the result will be remains to be seen. A similar meeting of the associations of Europe is also appointed to be held in the city of Berne, in September next, from which we hope great good will come.

In the meanwhile we urge upon the Assembly the importance of continued agitation. Let this venerable court continue to speak upon this subject, and speak in no uncertain way, but in a loud and emphatic manner. Let its voice be heard throughout the land, and even the world. Let its testimony be pointed, decided, unequivocal. Let her ministers be urged to present this subject to their respective congregations. For if this evil is ever reached, it must be through the agency of the Church; and even if not reached and corrected, it is only in this way that the Church can clear her skirts. Respectfully submitted,

JAMES STACY,
DONALD FRASER,
W. A. MOORE,
T. Q. CASSELS, } Committee.

Colonel Livingston moved that it be received and adopted, because it was the report of a special committee appointed by the General Assembly.

Dr. Peck moved that the report be docketed.

Mr. J. B. Smith moved that it be referred to a special committee, to take such action as might be necessary.

Dr. Woodrow said he wished to assign another reason for the postponement. They would be held responsible not only for the report as a whole, but also for all of the reasoning, and even expressions contained therein. There should be nothing in a report which all of the members of the church could not defend, and which could not be used authoritatively. While he saw nothing very objectionable in the report just presented, he was of opinion that there were certain parts to which he could not commit himself.

Col. Livingston said that Dr. Smith's motion was something unusual. To refer the report of a special committee to a special committee would not give the matter any greater indorsement.

Dr. Peck's motion was carried.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Dr. Junkin moved that the motion referring Dr. J. Leighton Wilson's memorial to the Committee on Systematic Benevolence be reconsidered. He contended in support of his motion, that the Foreign Mission work was in a critical condition, and that committee which shapes the action and general course of the Foreign Mission work should consider this matter. He therefore hoped that the vote would be reconsidered and the report turned over to the Committee on Foreign Missions. The motion was carried.

Dr. Nall moved that all papers touching retrenchment and reform be taken out of the hands of the Committee on Systematic Benevolence and turned over to the Committee on Bills and Overtures.

The committee to nominate delegates to the next Presbyterian Alliance is composed of Rev. W. U. Murkland, D. D., Rev. J. B. Adger, D. D., Alexander Sprunt, A. M. McPheeters, L. L. Holliday.

INSTITUTE FOR COLORED MINISTERS.

Rev. Dr. Stillman, president of the Tuskaloosa Institute, read his report: He referred to the great loss sustained in the death of Rev. A. F. Dickson, and announced the temporary employment of Rev. J. W. Kerr. It will be for the Assembly to elect, through the executive committee to be appointed by them, a successor to Mr. Dickson. Ten students are now connected with the institution, eight from Southern Presbyterian Church and two from the Methodist Church. Five others have been in the institution but transferred by their ecclesiastical authorities. Rev. B. T. Lacy, the Financial Agent, whose field for the soliciting aid has been the Reformed Church of this country and the churches in Canada has collected about six hundred volumes, most of them of great value and suited to the wants of the Institute. His collections in money amount to only enough to pay his salary and expenses, but he has, we believe, prepared the way for large collections when the financial condition of the country shall improve. He has been cordially received everywhere, and has no doubt strengthened the ties between the Reformed Church and our own. This agency will be continued unless otherwise ordered by the Assembly.

The report was referred to the Standing Committee on Theological Seminaries, and the Treasurer's report turned over to the Auditing Committee.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

Rev. D. K. McFarland of Savannah moved that the report of the Special Committee on Sabbath Observance be taken from the docket and referred to a special committee for suggestions.

The motion was carried, and a committee composed of Rev. D. K. McFarland, Rev. J. L. Rogers, Rev. F. H. Johnston, Elder W. G. Clark and Elder W. V. Chardavoyne was appointed.

NEXT MEETING.

Charleston, S. C., was nominated for the next meeting of the Assembly and unanimously chosen. A motion was made to change the fixed time of meeting, which is third Thursday in May, to two weeks earlier, but the motion failed.

TRUSTEES ANNUAL REPORT.

The trustees of the Assembly presented their annual report and the report of the President.

Rev. Dr. Adger chairman of the committee on Revision reported that the Book of Church Order had been adopted by the following vote (seven Presbyteries being not officially reported but information concerning them gathered from the newspapers).

"According to all this testimony, therefore, most of which is official, it appears that one Presbytery, namely Muhlenburg, declines to vote; in one Presbytery, namely Fayetteville, there is a tie vote; eight Presbyteries namely Columbia, Knoxville, Maryland, Mecklenburg, Nashville, North Alabama, Western District and Western Texas, vote to reject; and the remainder sixty-seven Presbyteries to adopt, some sixteen of them nearly or quite unanimously.

"The committee having had referred to them by the Assembly the overture from Abingdon Presbytery, respecting the not binding of the new book with the confession or the Hymn-book for five years, and the overture from Paducah Presbytery moving the Assembly to incorporate the old book's chapter on Preliminary Principles into the new book as a preface, recommend that a negative answer be returned to both overtures.

A very spirited debate occurred on the question of the effect which the adoption of the report of the Revision Committee would

PRINCETON NECROLOGICAL REPORT.

We have received from Rev. William E. Schenck, D. D., this annual report carefully prepared by him for the Alumni Association, which met April 29th at Princeton Theological Seminary. It is a valuable and interesting record in reference to the history of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. It will prove interesting also to those of us who here read sketches of the life work of those with whom we have had pleasant intercourse as friends, or have been fellow students in our college courses.

We would now emphasize two facts apparent here. First, of the forty-four names here received thirty-nine professed publicly their faith in Christ between their thirteenth and twenty-first years. Only four were twenty-one. Five were between twenty-two and twenty-seven years old. God seems, indeed, to bless those who give themselves to Him in their youth. They are His chosen instruments to proclaim officially and publicly His glorious Gospel message of salvation to dying men. Oh! how earnestly should every Christian parent pray God to draw their children in tender years into His blessed and secure fold. Our Church needs more faithful preachers. They pray for the conversion of the dear boys.

Second. Notice the long life enjoyed by these laborers, who began early in the morning to work for the Master. They were enabled to devote to the Lord a full day's service. What a blessing to the grateful soul to be able thus to show love and give honor to the Redeemer. The summary shows that of the forty-four eight died at an age beyond 80, nineteen beyond 70, thirty beyond 60, thirty-eight beyond 50, and six under 50. The average age at death is 65 years. Of the 181 alumni, noticed in this and the four preceding annual reports, the average age has been about 65 years. Dr. Charles Hodge—nomen venerabile—professed his faith in Christ at 18 years of age, and served him until he fell asleep at 81. Who will not pray for such a life of sweet laborious usefulness in the church militant for our children, that they may leave their memorable works behind them to praise the Lord, when they go to receive the welcome "Well done, good and faithful servant?"

COLPORTAGE.

Capt. W. J. Potter has been commissioned by the American Tract Society of New York as colporteur for Eastern North Carolina, the Bahama Islands and places adjacent. We are glad that this important work is to be renewed. The diffusion of religious literature is the only corrective, at least the most efficacious offset, to the spread of pernicious reading. The American Tract Society publishes no objectionable books, and many of its books ought to be in every family, Christian or otherwise. Very great good can be done in such work as Capt. Potter engages in, and we trust he will meet with every encouragement. Many years since Mr. J. N. Andrews engaged in similar work here, and did great good. He is remembered as the model colporteur. We believe Capt. Potter will prove a very worthy successor. Give him a helping hand.

THE PROOF! THE PROOF!!

We have found the following sentences in the Raleigh News of May 18th, and now respectfully ask for the names, times and places concerned in the outrages alluded to. These extracts are from an editorial review of Dr. O'Connell's "Catholicity in the Carolinas and Georgia." "During the early part of his career, (described by the editor as extending through the last forty years) Father O'Connell, like a good many others, had a rough time of it. Catholic priests were not, by any means, favorably looked upon by town folk or country folk in the Carolinas then, and where they escaped violence they were generally pretty sure of insult." "Naturally a great space is given to the life and labors of Bishop England, who against every opposition that the dislike of the cultured few and the brutal frenzy of the ignorant many, won for himself and his Church, &c., &c." It is the clauses in italics (which are ours) that require explanation. A more thoroughly Protestant population than that of the Carolinas and Georgia is not, perhaps, to be found in our country. The settlers of North Carolina evidently intended that it should be organically a Protestant community. In the name of the Episcopalians, Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians of North Carolina, that is, of all its Protestants, we demand from the News proofs for these wholesale accusations. How? When? Where? By whom? were these brutal imitations of Irish Catholicism perpetrated? X.

NEWS NOTES.

The installation of Rev. John W. Primrose as pastor of Littleton church has been postponed to fourth Sabbath in June.

Rev. Evander McNair, D. D., has returned from Arkansas, and is residing among his relatives and numerous friends in North Carolina.

The health of Rev. Dr. Drury Lacy is better now than for some time past. Rev. Dr. C. Phillips, of Chapel Hill, is recovering. These items will be gratifying to the friends of these brethren everywhere.

The pulpit of the First Presbyterian church of Wilmington, since Rev. Dr. Wilson's absence at the General Assembly, has been supplied by Rev. Alex. Sprunt, Rev. Dr. R. H. Chapman and Rev. Dr. J. M. Sprunt successively. Next Sabbath Rev. J. M. Atkinson, pastor of Second church, of Raleigh, will preach.

Rev. Roderick Henderson, a Presbyterian minister from Canada, en route home from Florida, where he had been sojourning during the winter, preached in the Presbyterian Church at Lexington, on Sabbath last. The congregation was much pleased with the sermons. The postoffice address of Rev. R. Henderson is Bradford, Ontario, Canada.

SECOND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The congregation of the Second Presbyterian Church in this city enjoyed their Spring Communion, which was celebrated the third Sabbath in this month. Rev. A. Sprunt, of Winchester, Va., assisted the pastor and preached at 11 A. M. Three persons were added on profession of faith, all past the meridian of life, and one was baptized. At 4 P. M. the quarterly meeting was held and the pastor addressed the Sabbath school, which has been steadily increasing of late, and is now much larger than it ever was before.

THYATIRA AND BACK CREEK.

ROWAN, Co., N. C., May 22.—Bro. McLaurin:—We have just gotten through our Communions at Thyatira and Back Creek. One of their most gratifying features connected with them was the unusually large attendance on Friday and Saturday preceding. Four were added to Thyatira and two to Back Creek. Bro. Penick was with us Friday and Saturday at Thyatira, and Bro. McLelland, from Texas, came upon me very unexpectedly and preached for me Saturday and Sabbath morning at Back Creek. Yours, &c.

J. A. R.

ASHPOLE CHURCH.

RED BANKS, ROBESON COUNTY, May 19.—The spring communion at Ashpole Church was celebrated on last Sabbath. Services commenced on Friday previous. The Rev. H. M. Brearley was assisted throughout the meeting by the Rev. J. A. Consar. The attendance, especially on the Sabbath, was unusually large, including many visitors from neighboring churches of both North and South Carolina. The Rev. Mr. Consar, on Sabbath, preached a very able, forcible, and impressive sermon, which was received by the audience with marked attention, and the good order and decorum observed by the entire assemblage to the close of the solemn service was remarkable, and deserving the highest commendation. We pray that the good seed sown may result in a bountiful harvest.

SPECTATOR.

CHURCH AT NEWTON, N. C.

NEWTON, N. C., May, 1879.—Mr. Editor: The Presbyterian church at this place was dedicated on Saturday, the 17th, Rev. A. W. Miller, D. D., preaching the sermon. His text was from Psalms lxxxiv: 1, "How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts!" The sermon was peculiarly impressive and eloquent, and marked by great earnestness. The Sunday following being our regular Communion Sabbath, made it doubly interesting to us. Dr. Miller preached for us again, and long will it be remembered by all who were so fortunate as to be present. Many were moved to tears as he so beautifully portrayed the preciousness of Jesus and His Word; and these words rang in our ears long after we had left the sanctuary, "Precious Saviour! Preciousness indeed." Rev. R. B. Anderson, our beloved pastor, was with us, and conducted the Communion service. The church was filled to its utmost capacity, and the different denominations of the place joined together and partook of the solemn feast. Two persons united with the church. The Presbyterians of Newton feel that they have been greatly blessed, and that last week was to them a comforting and refreshing season.

A. M. W.

HARMONY CHURCH, RICHMOND COUNTY.

MR. EDITOR:—Our last Communion service at this church was held on Sabbath, 18th instant, by Rev. S. C. Alexander, of Wadesboro, assisted by Rev. N. T. Bowden. It was a season of special religious enjoyment. The large congregation assembled at an early hour, and with marked quietness and solemnity listened to the pure Gospel truths which were clearly and ably presented for their consideration. There was an evident manifestation of the presence of the Holy Spirit, and though there were no accessions to the church, in numbers, the members were aroused and quickened by the earnest and touching appeals presented to them. We rejoice especially at these tokens of Divine favor, as the Church has been in a cold and lethargic state for some years past; it might indeed be regarded as one of the "waste places of Zion." We trust that he who has been called to this ministry may be the Nehemiah who has been sent to arouse the people to exertion, in order to rebuild the walls "that we be no longer be a reproach." Mr. Alexander has been supplying this church in connection with that of Mt. Carmel, since January last. At the latter church he is quite as acceptable as with us. He is under appointment of Mecklenburg Presbytery as Evangelist, to labor in the western part of the State; as the way is not open, he has not yet entered upon his duties in that field. Both this church and Mt. Carmel would sincerely regret his departure, and we trust that, in view of the good work that is going forward, he can be induced to remain in charge of these congregations.

Proceedings of the General Assembly.

FOURTH DAY.

We take from Courier-Journal report.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

have on judicial cases now pending. Dr. Adger contended that the New Book is the law and all old cases fall and must be begun anew, but recommended waiving rights in regard to present judicial cases.

Dr. Park thought an authoritative declaration by the Assembly was required to make the law operative.

Dr. Woodrow, Col. Livingston, Rev. Thomas E. Converse, Rev. J. L. Rogers, Maj. Thomas Sparrow, and others participated in the debate.

The following resolution was finally adopted:

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, sitting in Louisville, Ky., May, 1879, hereby declares that the new Book of Church Order has been adopted by a large majority of the Presbyteries, as shown in their official reports to this body, and said new Book of Church Order is therefore declared to be the law of the Church.

THE NORTHERN ASSEMBLY'S SALUTATION.

The following telegraphic communication was received and read, from the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America meeting at Saratoga:

TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, LOUISVILLE, KY.—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, now in session at Saratoga Springs, presents its cordial salutation to the General Assembly in session at Louisville, praying for them grace, mercy and peace through our Lord Jesus Christ. In behalf of the Assembly, and in the sympathies of a common faith and order, I am, etc.,
May 19, 1879. HENRY H. JESSUP, Moderator.

The following reply was sent:

The General Assembly at Louisville cordially reciprocates the kind Christian salutations of the General Assembly at Saratoga, and commends that body to the grace of our common Lord and Master, praying that His presence may overshadow it, and its deliberations be directed for His glory.

The chairman of the Standing Committee on Foreign Correspondence reported having sent fraternal answers to letters from the Reformed Episcopal Church, the Associate Reformed Synod of the South, and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

OVERTURE NUMBER ONE.

Dr. Peck, from the Committee on Overtures and Bills, offered the following report in regard to seamen and boatmen:

From the Presbytery of New Orleans, asking the Assembly "to take under its special consideration the matter of the religious instruction and conversion of seamen and boatmen."

The committee recommend the adoption of the following minute, to wit:

First—The Assembly commends the efforts of the Presbytery of New Orleans to bring seamen under Christian influence.

Second—The Assembly recommends to the several Presbyteries who have access to this class of people to do all they can for their evangelization.

Third—The Committee of Sustentation be, and is hereby, authorized to grant such aid as may be in its power to this enterprise, subject, however, to all the regulations which are given its committee in making similar appropriations.

Fourth—The Assembly affectionately commends to the prayers and alms of its people that class of men that go down to the sea in ships and do business in its great waters, and invites them to pray for the coming of that day when the above classes of the sea shall be converted unto the Lord, and mariners shall become missionaries to carry the Gospel to the distant parts of the earth.

Respectfully submitted. THOS. E. PECK, Ch'n.

Adopted.

OVERTURE NUMBER TWO,

from the Presbytery of Central Texas, asking the Assembly to say whether the action of the last Assembly, in tabling without discussion a paper offered by Dr. Dabney on the subject of the relations of our Church to the General Presbyterian Council, is to be understood as actually or virtually surrendering our former position, or yielding up any or all the testimony made by us touching the matter contained in said paper."

The committee recommend the adoption of the following minute:

"The action of our Assembly in sending delegates to the General Presbyterian Council, and in tabling the paper alluded to in the overture of the Presbytery of Central Texas, is not to be understood as implying any change in our position upon questions of difference between ourselves and other bodies, or any surrender of our testimony." T. E. PECK, Chairman.

Adopted.

OVERTURE NUMBER THREE,

from Presbytery of Mecklenburg, asking the Assembly to "raise a committee to prepare a paper upon the doctrine of the diaconate, with special reference to the agencies of the Church."

The committee recommended that the request be granted, and that this Assembly appoint such a committee to make a report to the next Assembly.

THOS. E. PECK, Chairman.

Adopted.

OVERTURE NUMBER FOUR,

from the Synod of Alabama, asking the Assembly "to declare lawful and valid the meeting of that body on the 28th of November last," which, in consequence of the prevalence of yellow fever, had been irregularly convened. The committee recommend that the request be granted, and that said meeting of the Synod of Alabama be declared lawful and valid. THOS. E. PECK, Ch'n.

On motion of Dr. Peck, ordered to be docketed.

JUDICIAL MATTERS.

The case of Mr. S. W. Painter from the Presbytery of Abingdon referred by a former order of the Assembly to the Judicial Committee was transferred to the Committee on Bills and Overtures.

Certain papers being informal, one without signature and neither properly addressed were taken from the hands of the Judicial Committee. The case of complaint J. H. Moore, Stuart Robinson and others against the Synod of Kentucky was withdrawn, (the Assembly consenting), by the complainants, as under the New Book of Church Order a like case cannot occur.

The case of J. E. White on appeal or complaint against the Synod of South Carolina was dismissed upon the ground that appellant failed to prosecute nor did he "make it appear that he was prevented from reasonably prosecuting his appeal by the providence of God."

FIFTH DAY.

Several reports on Synodical Records were made, and received and approved by the Assembly.

The report of the Synod of Georgia was, on motion of Dr. Woodrow, taken from the docket, and he read the minute in reference to the Block case and commented thereon at some length. J. G. Richards moved that the consideration of the matter be postponed until the report came in from the Committee on Bills and Overtures. Carried.

Rev. R. H. Caldwell having appeared as fraternal delegate from the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Dr. Adger offered a report setting forth the custom of the Southern Presbyterian Church to conduct its correspondence by writing but cordially welcoming Mr. Caldwell and inviting him to address the Assembly. Dr. Baird moved the rescinding the rule of 1877, referred to above. Quite a discussion ensued, Dr. Baird and Dr. Boude in favor of rescinding and Dr. Adger and Rev. J. L. Rogers opposed. The Assembly refused to rescind.

WORLDLY AMUSEMENTS.

Mr. Kennedy for Dr. Peck, Chairman of the Committee on Bills and Overtures, read the following report:

OVERTURE NO. 5,

from the Presbytery of Atlanta, asking the Assembly for definite instruction upon the following points, to-wit:

First—Are the deliverances of 1865, 1866 and 1877 on the subject of worldly amusements to be accepted and enforced as law by judicial process?

Second—Are all the offences named in them to be so dealt with, or are exceptions to be made?

Third—Are the deliverances of all our church courts of the same nature and authority, so far as the bounds of those respective courts extend?

In answer to these questions the committee recommend the adoption of the following minute:

First—This Assembly would answer the first question in the negative upon the following grounds:

First—That these deliverances do not require judicial prosecution expressly, and could not require it without violating the spirit of our law.

Second—That none of these deliverances were made by the Assembly in a strictly judicial capacity, but were all deliverances in thesi, and therefore can be considered as only didactic, advisory and monitory.

Third—That the Assembly has no power to issue orders to institute process, except according to the provisions of Book of Discipline, chapter VII., in the old, and chapter—in the revised book; and all these provisions imply that the court of remote jurisdiction is dealing with a particular court of original jurisdiction, and not with such courts in general. The injunction to us, therefore upon the sessions to exercise discipline in the matter of worldly amusements are to be understood only as utterances of the solemn testimony of these Assemblies against a great and growing evil in the church. The power to utter such a testimony will not be disputed since it is so expressly given to the Assembly in the Form of Government, chapter xii., section 5 of the old, and in the revised book of Church Order, chapter v., section 6; and this testimony this Assembly does hereby most solemnly and affectionately reiterate.

In thus defining the meaning and interest of the action of former Assemblies, this Assembly does not mean in the slightest degree to interfere with the power of discipline in any of its forms, which is given to the courts below by the constitution of the church; or to intimate that discipline, in its sternest form, may not be necessary, in some cases, in order to arrest the crisis in question. The occasion, the mode, the degree, and the kind of discipline must be left to the courts of original jurisdiction under the checks and restraints of the constitution. All that is designed is, to deny the power of the Assembly to make law for the church in the matter of "offences," or to give to its deliverances in these the force of judicial decisions.

Second—The second question, which is, "Are all the offenses named in the deliverances of 1865, 1869, and 1877, to be dealt with in the way of judicial process, or are exceptions to be made?" needs no answer after what has been said in answer to the first.

Third—In answer to the third question relative to the nature and authority of our different church courts, this Assembly would say that the nature and authority of all our church courts are the same, so far as the bounds of these respective courts extend, subject, of course, to the provisions for review and control of the lower courts by the higher. The power of the whole is in every part, but the power of the whole is over the power of every part.

The perplexity about the nature of the deliverances in question has arisen from confounding two senses in which the word discipline is used in our constitution. One is that of "judicial process," the other is that of inspection, inquest, remonstrance, rebuke and private admonition. The one is strictly judicial or forensic; the other is that general oversight of the flock which belongs to the officers of the Church, as charged by the Holy Ghost with the duty of watching for souls. The one cannot be administered at all except by a court of the Church; the other, while it is a function of that charity which all the members of the Church are bound to possess and cherish for each other, is yet the special and official function of the rulers, to be exercised with authority toward those who are committed to their care. In the judgment of this Assembly great harm is done by the custom of identifying, in popular speech, these two forms of discipline, or, rather, by forgetting that there is some other discipline than that of judicial process. Many an erring sheep might be restored to a place of safety within the fold by kind and tender, yet firm and faithful efforts, in private, who might be driven farther away by the immediate resort to discipline in its sterner and more terrifying forms. The distinction here asserted is recognized in the Word of God, and in our constitution, for substance at least, in the directions given for the conduct of church members in the case of personal and private injuries. (See chapter 2, article 3, of the old Book of Discipline, and chapter 1, paragraph 4, of the revised; also Matthew xviii., 15, 16.) If scandal can be removed or prevented in such cases more effectually, oftentimes by faithful dealing in private with offenders, than by judicial process, it does not appear why similar good results may not follow from the like dealing in the matter of worldly amusements.

Respectfully submitted.

DISCUSSING DANCING.

Mr. James P. Smith moved, and it was seconded, that the report be considered seriatim.

Dr. Rogers made the point that the word "dancing" used in the report did not occur in the overture at all. The report was therefore amended by substituting the words "worldly amusements" for "dancing."

The first question and the answer to it were read, and on motion of Dr. Reed, it was almost unanimously adopted. The second question was read and adopted. The third question was read, and on motion of Dr. Adger it was adopted. That part of the report setting forth the principles on which the report was grounded was read and offered for adoption.

Dr. Woodrow said that the whole paper was so admirable that he hesitated to object to it. The paper, however, pointed out two kinds of church discipline as is also set forth in the Book of Order. It, however, was inconsistent with the book. The Assembly could not exercise the humblest power over any member of the church without first trying him. It was certain that the minister had a right to admonish against wrong-doing; but he had no right to admonish a particular wrong-doer. That was left entirely to the courts. He therefore, hoped that the report would be recommitted as to that point.

Dr. Peck—I am little surprised to hear the distinction denied.

Dr. Adger—I did not deny it. On the contrary, I distinctly asserted it.

Dr. Peck—The brother admits that there is a distinction between discipline in the narrow and in the broad sense. I contend that some things are binding on all Christians by the law of charity. It is the duty of all Christians to help one another. It becomes the special duty of deacons to attend to those duties. God requires us to love all men, and to say to all men "Come." But it is the special duty of the minister to preach, and make it real. It is the duty of every Christian man to rebuke any man in his church when he sees sin upon him. All ministers have the special official function, as pastors, to do this very thing, and to rebuke any of their flock going astray, to visit them as pastors, and to warn and rebuke them for their bad ways. It is also the duty of elders to do the same. I have no doubt that there are many ministers here who have visited and rebuked their children for going out of the right path. I believe that if this kind of authority were exercised more frequently there would be less grief and less scandal in the Church.

Dr. Woodrow moved an amendment to the committee's report, by which the exact language of the Book of Order was to be used instead of that employed by Dr. Peck.

Dr. Woodrow—My object is not to increase the number of deliverances. My object in presenting this is that the language of this Assembly shall be uniform, and that we shall not be guilty of using technical terms in a popular sense. The Book of Order specially defines the word admonition, and now the paper uses it in a popular sense. I therefore hope that we will most carefully avoid committing ourselves, not because I differ from its intention, but because it is not expressed in legal language.

Dr. Peck called attention to Form of Government, section three, which draws the distinction between the joint and several exercise of jurisdiction.

Dr. Woodrow—I thought I was pointing out that exact distinction. Our acts should be uniform; we should not use language at one time in a popular sense and at another in a technical sense. After having built a barrier against evil, we turn around and use language in one sense and the next moment in another. I do not object to the intent of the report but the language. Why should we repeat the law in a looser and more inaccurate form? There is no need in repeating. The Church as a whole has done what we are attempting to do. It would be a mere piece of surplusage to adopt the report as it is. First, we say admonition is a reproof by a Church court, and then we say it is a reproof from a minister. Having said that admonition was one thing we cannot consistently maintain that it is another.

Dr. Adger—I may have seemed over anxious to hear the paper read again. I think Dr. Woodrow has mistaken the purport of the report. I don't see any inconsistency between the report and the constitution. In the book you have given the minister private admonition. I don't see that this conflicts with that other admonition belonging to a court. The preachers are shepherds, who are to admonish wrong doing and wrong doers. All those duties that private Christians are bound by, it does seem to me, should bind the ministers, who are the rulers of the Church. The objection I have to the substitute of Dr. Woodrow is that he aims to point you to the power the officers have to admonish wrong doers. I admit that it is dangerous to give reasons. You always get into trouble. I cannot feel like objecting to the report. Let us send this thing down almost unanimously.

Dr. Reed moved that the question be voted upon immediately. Carried.

The amendment of Dr. Woodrow was put to the house and lost.

Dr. Woodrow moved to amend by striking out the word "admonition."

General Johnson—I felt sensible that the report was not liable to the objection of Dr. Woodrow. This report expressly declares that these are merely expressions of the New Book. I do not think this report can be liable to the criticism of Dr. Woodrow. It disclaims to be a judicial interpretation.

Rev. Mr. Martin called attention to the fact that if the amendment of Dr. Woodrow should be adopted the Assembly would, as a court of the Lord Jesus Christ, abolish one of the great functions of the embassadors of the Lord. He believed it would strike a blow at the corporate body of the Church. The ministers were even prohibited from exercising the right of private Christians.

Dr. J. L. Rogers said he offered an additional amendment, with the consent of Dr. Woodrow, to the effect that the word "private" be introduced to qualify admonition. Carried.

The paper was then adopted as amended.

Dr. Adger said the hour had come for the hearing of Brother Caldwell, and he asked leave for the committee to meet him.

On motion the matter was made a special order for to-day at 11 a. m.

A motion was made that the minutes of the Synod of Georgia be adopted.

Dr. Nall of Georgia said he heartily concurred in the report of the Committee on Overtures just adopted, and hoped the minutes of the Georgia Synod would be approved.

The report was then put to the house and adopted.

REPORT ON THE NARRATIVE

was read by Dr. Junkin. A healthful spiritual condition is reported, exhibited not so much by extensive revivals as by increased appreciation of duty and consequent activity on part of officers of the Church, and on part of all the anxious looking forward to and expecting God's spiritual blessings. The neglect of family religion, that is family worship and religious instruction, and the great and increasing disregard of the Sabbath are noted as too general and calling for the earnest consideration of the Assembly.

A MAJORITY REPORT

of the Judicial Committee was presented, recommending the dismissal of the case of Isaac W. Canfield and W. Q. Canfield against the Synod of Kentucky, on the ground that the action complained of is not a subject matter of appeal or complaint.

The report was signed by J. A. Billups, chairman, W. V. Chardavoyne, James A. Hill, A. H. Holliday, James P. Smith, F. Patton, J. D. McClintock.

Quite a lengthy minority report was presented, signed by R. R. Howison, J. F. Latimer, J. L. H. Tomlin, Robert Morrison, J. J. Norton, S. T. Martin.

The minority report considers the complaint relevant and considers dismissal a denial of those rights, to which every individual is entitled.

Colonel Billups in discussing claimed that no decision was made in the Presbytery in which the case first appeared, the Presbytery having refused to consider, and there could be no appeal where there was no decision.

R. R. Howison dissented. Presbytery is not merely a grand jury. Unless a Presbytery can be rebuked there is nothing to prevent it from doing signal injustice with impunity.

Prof. J. F. Latimer—There are phases of this question which I feel constrained to review. It is true that the Presbytery has something of an inquisitorial aspect, still it is a court of the Lord Jesus Christ. The decision of the Presbytery is a judicial decision. The question is whether the Presbytery is merely an inquisitorial body. Shall we say that a man, when he feels himself aggrieved, cannot appeal from the Presbytery to the Synod? The burden of the majority report is that there is nothing to complain of. In the first place a case came before the Louisville Presbytery between I. W. Canfield and an elder of this church. The Presbytery determined that as I. W. Canfield was of unsound mind, he should be suspended without any judicial process. Another case was brought before the Presbytery between I. W. Canfield and Dr. Stuart Robinson. The charge was not received, and the Synod of Kentucky indorsed the action of the lower court.

Dr. Read thought that the Louisville Presbytery was composed of men who acted justly and intelligently, and that they tried to shut out unprofitable litigation. He doubted the propriety of the Assembly considering the matter.

Drs. Baird and Woodrow, Col. White, Mr. Glass and Col. Pogue discussed the question. Finally it was postponed to next day.

The night session was taken up in speeches by Drs. Grasty, McIlwaine, Boude and Rev. A. J. Witherspoon on Sustentation and Evangelization of seamen.

SIXTH DAY.

A fraternal salutation from the Cumberland Presbyterian Assembly was received and referred.

The Auditing Committee reported accounts of Rev. Dr. R. McIlwaine, as Treasurer of Foreign Missions and as Treasurer of Sustentation as in every respect satisfactory. The accounts of Dr. J. T. Searcy, Treasurer of Tuscaloosa Institute, were also declared to be correct and satisfactory.

The Judicial Committee reported complaint of E. E. Baker against Synod of Missouri and recommended the order for its issuance.

Committee on Bills and Overtures offered report containing the following minute in answer to overtures of Presbyteries of Abingdon and Louisville.

First—The ordination of G. W. Painter, by Rev. J. L. Stuart, both of the missions in China, is hereby declared to be valid.

Second—Inasmuch as that Mr. Painter was a candidate, at the time of his ordination, under the care of the Presbytery of Abingdon, he is hereby declared to be a member of that Presbytery.

A committee is hereby appointed to report on the whole subject of the office and powers of the evangelist, his relation to the General Assembly and the Presbytery at home, his relation to the Church gathered among the heathen, and his relation to his fellow-evangelists in the same missionary field, and the said committee shall report to the next General Assembly by a proposed additional chapter to our form of government or otherwise.

Respectfully submitted, THOMAS E. PECK, Chairman.

It was received and docketed.

The discussion on adoption of report on the judicial case of the Canfields vs. Synod of Kentucky was continued. Col. Billups, Dr. Junkin, Dr. Adger, Mr. Howison and Rev. S. T. Martin discussed the matter. The decision was reached that the minority report should be adopted.

The delegate from the Cumberland Presbyterian Church was heard and his fraternal greeting appropriately responded to.

The Standing Committee on Publication made a report showing that the present condition of affairs is under all circumstances quite encouraging. The whole work has been reorganized and its complicated details partially adjusted. Fourteen thousand dollars have been paid on the debt, the circulation of the Earnest Worker has increased 2,000 copies, and the excess of assets over liabilities is computed to be $13,000. Ten cents, it is estimated, from each communicant would lift all the pecuniary burden from the work and secure its successful operation in the future.

The committee recommend,

First—That all the collections and other revenues of the committee, above its actual working expenses, be appropriated to the extinction of the debt, and that more liberal contributions be urged.

Second—That the instructions of the last Assembly, directing the sale of the publication house at Richmond, be carried out at the earliest day possible.

Third—That the efficient Secretary and Treasurer of Publication visit the Synods and Presbyteries to give information and to remove obstacles to the work.

Fourth—The Earnest Worker and the Children's Friend are recommended to the teachers and scholars of of all our Sunday schools as eminently fitted to supply them with a healthful, wise and thoroughly evangelical and Presbyterian periodical literature.

Fifth—The subject of colportage, with the suggestions of the Executive Committee is recommended to the Presbyteries.

Sixth—Rev. James K. Hazen, Secretary and Treasurer, and the old board by name, are recommended to constitute the Executive Committee for the ensuing year.

The committee made a further report vindicating the Publication Committee from the charges of the Presbytery of Western District. The report was received.

Rev. J. K. Hazen was then heard, and explained present business arrangements, dwelling particularly on Colportage, after which the report on Publication was made order for 10 o'clock next day.

Rev. Dr. C. H. Read read a report from the Standing Committee on Systematic Benevolence, which was adopted. The report says that in view of the financial stringency and in comparison with former years, the present state of affairs is not discouraging, and the future outlook is hopeful:

"In the judgment of your committee there is a demand and encouragement for an enlargement rather than a contraction of our aggressive operations in the whole field occupied by and open to our branch of the Church. If by appropriate instruction and appeals; if by the education of a true Christian conscience among our people, and especially among our youth and children, in the consecration of themselves and their substance to the service of God; if by the encouragement of a steady and growing habit of true Christian benevolence among all our people, we can strengthen and enlarge each and all of our agencies, it would be, as your committee believes, for the spiritual profit and enjoyment of the individual members of our churches, for the advancement of our prosperity as a branch of the Church of Christ, and for the glory of God.

"It is true that a well, fed by a feeble spring, may be pumped dry, and it is also true that the same well, seldom and sparingly drawn from, may become dead and foul with mephitic gases. A liberal heart, devising liberal things, is in a healthier state than a selfish, penurious heart studying retrenchment toward God and His cause. The beneficence of the Church—its contributions—should doubtless be wisely and economically appropriated; but that kind of retrenchment which excuses or encourages indolence or parsimoniousness will dwarf individual piety—if there can be true piety with such a disposition—and will spread mold and blight upon our individual members and churches. Those of our people—individuals and churches—from whom steady and generous contributions in larger or smaller sums, according to their means, are received; these, so far forth as your committee have observed, are not as a general rule inclined to criticise our plans and efforts as a Church, or the various agencies employed."

PRINTING BOOK OF CHURCH ORDER.

Rev. J. L. Rodgers offered a resolution directing the preparation of an index to the new Book of Church Order, and the publication of an edition of 3,000 copies, with the Confession of Faith. It was referred to the Committee on the Book of Church Order.

Rev. Dr. Boude moved that the Committee on Revision be directed to revise also the Directory of Worship and report to the next Assembly.

Dr. Markland moved that the Rev. Dr. J. A. Lefevre, of Baltimore, be added to the Committee of Revision. Carried.

An overture from Dr. Woodrow, asking the Assembly to define from whom overtures may be received, was referred to the Committee of Bills and Overtures.

OVERTURES EIGHT, NINE AND TEN.

The Committee on Bills and Overtures, through Dr. Thomas E. Peck, Chairman, presented the following report:

Overture No. 8, from the Presbytery of Concord: No. 10, from the Presbytery of Ouachita, and No 11, from the Presbytery of Montgomery, ask the Assembly to take measures to secure retrenchment of expenses in the management of its various schemes. Nos. 8 and 9 (the last named from the Presbytery of Ebenezer) ask particularly for the consolidation of the Committee of Education and Publication.

The committee recommended the adoption of the following, in answer to the foregoing overtures:

While this Assembly has not sufficient data before it to justify any important changes in the management of its various schemes of benevolence, or even to determine whether such changes are needed, yet, in deference to these overtures, hereby appoint a committee to investigate this whole subject and make a report to the next Assembly.

Second—The question of consolidation of the Committees of Education and Publication, referred to in overtures Nos. 8 and 9, is hereby referred to said committee.

The committee report further that in overture No. 8 from the Presbytery of Concord, there is a request that the Assembly will "consider and adopt the plan of biennial Assemblies alternative with biennial meetings of the several Synods."

They recommend that this request be answered in the negative. Respectfully submitted,

THOMAS E. PECK, Chairman.

The report of the Standing Committee on Education was read and adopted.

THE CANFIELD CASE

was declared to be the first thing in order.

Col. Livingston was called as counsel for the Canfields, and contended that I. W. Canfield was debarred from nothing except the right to preach the Gospel. His right as an individual remained and his complaint against the Presbytery for not receiving and adjudicating his charges against Stuart Robinson, ought to have been admitted by the Synod of Kentucky.

Mr. H. Glass, by appointment of the Moderator, defended the Synod, claiming that if courts may not decide not to issue a case under the circumstances, we are at the mercy of every idiosyncrasy and idiocy without any protection.

Rev. T. E. Converse also spoke in behalf of the Synod. Adjourned till night.

At the night session the report of the Committee on Sunday schools was made and was followed by a speech from Rev. J. K. Hazen:

It may be assumed that no agency of our Church is doing so much to mold the character of our children and youth as the Sabbath school. Many parents remit this work to the Sabbath-school. The pulpit does not reach them. In view of it, he laid down three propositions—first, this subject imperatively demands the attention of the courts of the Church; second, it should be kept constantly under the scrutiny and authority of our Church courts, and, third, the teaching of the Sabbath school teachers should be closely watched. In reference to these points, we find that many schools elect their own teachers; the sessions pay no attention to it; the books used—the hymn-books—some of them teach doctrines absolutely false; some of these hymns about death are much nearer to heathen mythology than Christian doctrine; some of the Sabbath school papers teach what is injurious. Ought not these agencies, then, all to be brought under the care of our Church courts?

Last year the Assembly committed the Sunday school work to the Committee of Publication. The committee recommends the appointment of a Sabbath school Superintendent in every Presbytery, to organize institutes and normal classes, and interest the churches in the work of training the teachers. We can see the necessity for some such work in our Church. We can co-operate, to a certain extent with other denominations, but we must have our teachers trained as Presbyterians. We do not want to send them off to summer institutes and conventions to be trained. We want them trained under our church. Some of our friends seem afraid of this plan; it tends to centralization. It has been successfully tried in the Synod of North Carolina, which presents encouraging statistics. But we want more than statistics—we want training.

The difference between a Sunday school convention and a Normal class is this: The former is designed to get up enthusiasm—the latter is a class of teachers of a school studying systematically under a competent teacher, pastor or elder. The Board of Publication in Philadelphia have prepared an excellent series of papers for this purpose.

Speeches were also made by Dr. Nall, Dr. Murkland, Dr. Read, Rev. J. P. Smith and Rev. F. H. Johnston. The last named said:

The grand work of the Sabbath school is of the greatest importance, and it is worth while to pause and look at the history of Sabbath schools in this country. A few years ago the Sabbath school was regarded in many quarters with a suspicious eye. Some opposed it on the ground that it superseded parental authority. In many places it was committed to any who chose to undertake it. What a change now. In many cases it is under the care of the session. It is the Church teaching her children, and a powerful agency for extending the work among those who are outside of its bounds. Now the Session selects as teachers those, and those only, who are qualified in some measure at least. Interest in the work has increased. Every Presbytery but one has sent up a report on this subject; the number of Sabbath schools has increased. All are waking up to the great importance of this Sabbath school work. Our Southern Church should take place in the line. We cannot fall behind. We may not use some means—the questionable agencies that are used by some—but we should press forward.

SEVENTH DAY.

Several reports on Synodical records were approved. The records of Synods of North Carolina and of Nashville were recommitted. Records of Synod of Missouri were docketed.

Dr. Waddell addressed the Assembly as Secretary of the Committee on Education, and made personal explanations to account for what called out remarks wounding to his feelings.

OVERTURES TWELVE AND THIRTEEN.

In answer to overtures No. 12 and 13 from Synod of Texas and Presbytery of Western Texas, asking repeal of the action of Assembly of 1869 authorizing exhorters, it was recommended that the act authorizing appointment of exhorters under Presbyterial control be repealed.

OVERTURE FOURTEEN,

From Presbytery of St. John's in reference to changes in sizes of blanks issued from the Publication Office was not agreed to. In reference to discontinuing issuance of present blanks for sessional reports and issuing in the stead blanks containing the topics for narratives as adopted by the Assembly of 1877, it was recommended that the committee be instructed to issue both.

THE CANFIELD CASE

Was resumed, and General Johnston made the closing speech for the appellants. After his speech the roll was called, and each person was entitled to five minutes in which to respond. A part of the forenoon and the whole of the night session were consumed in these answers to roll call.

THE VOTE.

After the roll call was concluded the Moderator said that if the appeal were sustained, the case would be remanded to the Synod of Kentucky.

The vote was taken by calling the names, and resulted in sixty-nine votes being cast against sustaining the complaint, and fifty-six for it.

In the afternoon there being no session the members many of them, on Dr. Stuart Robinson's invitation, visited Bellewood Seminary.

EIGHTH DAY.

A memorial from the Synod of Kentucky, asking the Assembly to reverse their minutes on the action of the Synod of Kentucky in the complaint against the Messrs. Canfield. The report was referred to the Standing Committee on Bills and Overtures.

Messrs. Yerger, Nall and Sprunt were appointed a committee to draft a minute expressing the sentiment of the Assembly in the Canfield case.

THE BACON CASE.

The complaint was read by the Clerk.

The record of the case, with the newspaper article, was read:

Mr. Bacon was a member and a former acting elder of the church at St. Joseph, Mo. The case grew out of the publication in a newspaper in St. Joseph, Mo., the Herald, of a paper described by the Session as an offense to the Church and an injury to the brethren. The Session of the Church charged that this publication was not only offensive but was in violation of a covenant previously agreed upon. The article stated that Rev. R. S. Campbell had been charged with crookedness in getting a revivalist to preach in the church, and with lying on general principles, by a Mr. Landis. Mr. Bacon claimed that a very large number of persons be cited as witnesses. The Session felt it impossible that all these persons could (in the nature of the case) have any knowledge of the case, and declined to cite them, yet holding themselves ready to receive any one whose testimony should, in the progress of the case, become necessary. Mr. Bacon also offered, after the court had been constituted, to challenge one member of the session, but this was refused. He was found guilty and admonished of the offence.

From this he appealed to the Presbytery on seventeen grounds, such as the failure to specify accuser, the failure to call for a plea, prejudice on the part of members of the court, and inconsistency of the verdict with the evidence. The Presbytery took up the appeal, and reversed the decision of the Session upon these grounds. Whilst convinced that the decision of the Presbytery reached was necessitated by the evidence before them, yet there was no reason to censure the Session against this action. Mr. Sanders, of St. Joseph's church, protested because papers other than the record were read, and because too wide a range was allowed in the decision of the case. To this protest the Presbytery made answer. Mr. Sanders and Rev. S. S. Willis gave notice of complaint against the decision.

The complaint is that Presbytery proceeded to trial at a pro-re-nata meeting, with a very small attendance, when the pastor of the church was absent in Europe; and in allowing matters extraneous to the testimony and to the records to be heard before the Presbytery; and in allowing charges against Dr Campbell to be made in the presence of the Presbytery; also because the testimony shows that Mr. Bacon did spread the knowledge of an offense, otherwise than is necessary to its prosecution. See Disc., ch. 2, sec. 5. And because the evidence does show that there was a compact and a breach of that compact. The complaint asserts that the original charges were regularly made, and that the accuser was named, viz: the Session.

The Synod reversed the action of Presbytery and sustained the verdict of the Session, not, however, approving the refusal to cite witnesses. From this Mr. Bacon complains to the General Assembly, upon the ground that injustice has been done to him.

Mr. Bacon was allowed to state his case.

His complaint was based on grounds of irregularity of procedure in the Session and injustice in the composition of the court and the action thereof.

In the afternoon Mr. W. B. Cheney was called upon to defend the Synod, and succeeding him Rev. J. G. Fackler on the same side.

Dr. Woodrow replied for appellant, and set forth very concisely but clearly, the irregularities of original procedure and the great injustice thereby done to the appellant.

On taking the vote it was found that sixty-five were for dismissing the complaint and forty-three for sustaining it.

A committee was appointed to draft a minute expressive of the Assembly's action on the question.

A subscriber to the Christian Observer writes to that paper: I will take the privilege of informing you that sister Milligan, deceased, has left to your Southern Boards of Foreign and Home Missions five hundred dollars each. Also her late husband, John W. Milligan, after certain bequests, has left the balance of his estate to the Southern General Assembly, or as I think the will reads, to a committee of the Assembly, duly authorized to distribute it among the different Boards of the Church. The amount of John W. Milligan's estate, after his special bequests, will probably be about two thousand. I thought as your Assembly would be in session soon I would inform you of the fact so that if you thought best you could inform the Assembly.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

This body assembled at Saratoga on 15th inst. Rev. H. H. Jessup, D. D., of the Syrian Mission was elected Moderator. Five hundred and thirty-four delegates are in attendance. On second day among the first business was the sending a fraternal salutation to the Southern Assembly at Louisville. Judge Drake, of Missouri, offered a strong resolution against theatrical performances, which was referred after discussion to the Committee on Bills and overtures. A report was made that the work of revising the Form of Government had not been completed, whereupon a long debate calling out many speakers arose. It was finally resolved that the committee be continued and that both the Book of Government and that of Discipline be referred to them. Dr. E. R. Craven, of New Jersey, is chairman of the committee. The subject of reduced representation came up and a special committee of seventy, one minister and one elder from each Synod, was appointed to take this matter into consideration and report. The report on Ministerial Relief shows that there are 420 beneficiaries, viz: 163 ministers, 235 widows of ministers and 22 orphan familes, representing between 7,000 and 2,000 individuals. Total receipts $64,376.46 in cash and 59 boxes estimated at $6,000. Cash disbursements amount to $59,167.88. Total expense of administration less than 7 per cent.

The Foreign Mission report shows a total indebtedness of $62,532.58; this, notwithstanding expenses during the last year, were lessened over $25,000. Home Missions report 1,202 persons commissioned, 264 Sabbath schools organized, with 111,881 children in charge, 136 churches organized, 10,872 added in membership—4,693 by letter and 6,179 on profession. The receipts were $17,666 in excess of last year. The aggregate of congregations under control of the Board is 10,778 and the total membership 66,415.

SPARKLING CATAWBA SPRINGS.—It will be seen from our advertising columns that these Springs are again open to the public. They have been extensively patronized in the past, and we have no doubt that on the part of the proprietor every effort will be made to please.

Attention is called to the advertisement of B. We will put parties in direct communication if desired. B. can give unexceptionable references.

Prof. Quackenbush of Bingham school desires to locate and establish a preparatory school of high grade. See his advertisement. He needs no higher recommendation than having been teacher in Bingham school for six years past.

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED NEW EDITION.—It is surprising how rapidly new words are coined in the English language. But a few years ago Webster's Dictionary was issued and contained all the words that could then be found in the language proper; now a new edition is out with 4,600 new words and meanings. Of course words are also constantly falling into disuse and becoming obsolete, hence the necessity for such enterprise as G. & C. Merriam display in bringing out these new editions of Webster. The latest is remarkable for other improvements. A new biographical dictionary is attached containing 9,700 names of persons of renown, ancient and modern, nationality, place of birth, profession or occupation, and date of death, if known, of each. This is an exceedingly valuable addition. The value of the pictures in Webster's dictionary as illustrations of the meanings of words is shown by the following examples: The pictures of ships on two pages define more accurately than can be done by any words, 110 articles or terms, and these twelve words, Beef, Boiler, Castle, Column, Eye, Horse, Moldings, Phrenology, Ravelin, Ships, Steam Engine, Timbers, define 343. The whole work is an extraordinary compend of varied and indispensable information.

Died suddenly, at the residence of F. G. Robinson, Esq., in Wilmington, on Saturday evening, May 10th, MAGGIE TOON, daughter of the late Col. Wm. H. Toon; so suddenly that neither physician, nor mother, could reach her before she breathed her last.

What a shock this announcement brought to a large circle of loving friends, and with what emphasis comes the lesson to all of them, "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." Happily for her, and happily for her loved ones, she had not postponed her preparation till Death should warn her of his approach; and her blameless Christian life attests that though she was taken without warning she was ready.

Of all the young women I ever knew, no one has impressed me as having at her age so well balanced a character. Buoyant in spirits, full of fun, ardent to enthusiasm in her demonstrations of affection towards those she loved, she was singularly discreet in conduct and conversation, wisely keeping silent when speech might make mischief, controlling herself and thereby exerting a powerful control over others. A child in years, and full of the influences of childhood, she was a marvel of womanly sedateness and self-control and conscientious devotion and duty. I have seen her, a girl of eighteen, manage the affairs of a large household, providentially in her charge, with a steadiness and skill that maintained order where there might have been chaos, and that might well put to the blush the incompetence of many practiced housekeepers. And with it all, she seemed unconscious that she was doing anything meritorious or self-sacrificing.

With exuberant health, and with such a character, it would seem that the Master might have found abundant use for her during a long life. But He knows His own business; "His thoughts are not as our thoughts." "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

May the Lord Jesus comfort that stricken mother and that bereaved household.

April, 1879, at his father's residence, NETTLETON GILBERT CRAIG, in the thirtieth year of his age.

Mr. Craig joined the New Hope church in the fall of 1866, was elected and ordained an elder in May, 1877. He was the last surviving son of his aged parents and was greatly loved by all who knew him as a noble young man and devoted Christian.

In Rowan county, May 10th, 1879, Mrs. BARBARA BARR, in the 68th year of her age.

She was many years a consistent member of Back Creek church; and was a daughter in law of John Barr, who was one of the first ruling elders of the church. Thus has passed away the last one of a number by that name who have been members of this church since its organization. Of seven children, only one daughter was left to weep at her grave.

At her home at Swann's Station, on the 29th of April 1879, Mrs. SARAH SHAW, aged about 87 years.

She was a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church for fifty years; her end was peace.

In Yanceyville, N. C., on May 6th 1879, Mrs. ELLA A. ROAN, daughter of Col. Robert B. Watt. Mrs Roan had been ill for several months before her death. Naturally of an ardent and impulsive temperament, it might have been expected that she would bear suffering with some degree of impatience, but it was far otherwise. Though called to suffer most severely, no murmur, no expression of impatience escaped her. She seemed at once to submit herself to the Divine will, and when her recovery became doubtful, fully aware of her condition, would sweetly and quietly say, "God knows best." Indeed from the very beginning, her whole nature seemed to yield itself to God, and exhibited under the influence of sanctifying grace, a daily increasing gentleness, patience and humble resignation, that drew her nearer than ever to the many friends who loved her and gathered round her bed-side in all her sickness and her death. After Sunday the 4th, inst., she sank into a deep stupor from which she could only occasionally be aroused, but it was the writer's pleasure to receive from her on that day, before the mind was at all clouded, the most gratifying assurance of her preparedness for death. Her whole trust was in the merit of her crucified Redeemer, expressed with a wish to be entirely submissive to his will. On Tuesday evening about 3 o'clock, she gently breathed her last and fell asleep in Christ. She leaves behind her a sorrowing father and mother, of whom she was the last child; a devoted husband, and three bright and interesting children, the youngest of which a babe, was dedicated to God, by its grandparents over her remains, on the day of her burial.

Near Scotland church, in Union county, Ark., April 13th 1879, Mr. DANIEL SMITH, aged 69 years.

The deceased was born in Robeson county, N. C., where he spent his youth, and learned the tailor's trade, which was then both respectable and profitable. Having mastered his trade he set out with high hopes and bright prospects to acquire a living by honest and honorable means.

Turning his face westward he stopped first in Tennessee, where he practiced his profession for a time. He next repaired to Monticello, Ark., where after short stay he removed to Union county, Ark.; there he spent the remainder of his days.

In September 1858, he made a profession of his faith in Christ and attached himself to Scotland Presbyterian church, where he remained a consistent member until his death.

He was not only a pious and exemplary Christian gentleman, but a quiet, peaceable and law-abiding citizen.

He won by his daily walk and dealings with men, many good friends and made few enemies.

For some cause known only to himself he never married. He had no wife to comfort him in his long protracted illness, to wipe the cold sweat from his brow in death, and to weep and mourn on account of his departure. The greatest kindness and attention were shown to him by his friends and relatives with whom he spent his last days.

Feels Young Again.

"My mother was afflicted a long time with Neuralgia and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system; headache, nervous prostration, and was almost helpless. No physicians or medicines did her any good. Three months ago she began to use Hop Bitters, with such good effect that she seems and feels young again, although over 70 years old. We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—A lady, Providence, R. I.

TALBOTT'S PATENT SPARK ARRESTER
The Invention of the Age.

It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

GREAT INDUCEMENTS.
Special Offer to Ladies
Look at my Prices on Elegant Grass Linen Suits, Ready Made.

Special Offer. Having completed arrangements with one of the largest linen factories in the United States for an unlimited supply of elegant Grass Linen, at the extremely low prices reached during the prevailing business stagnation, and having largely increased my facilities for the manufacture of Ladies' and Misses' Linen Suits, I have decided to make an important departure from the course usually adopted by similar establishments, and to place myself directly in communication with the consumer, thus avoiding the enormous profits required by middlemen and the retail trade, and enabling me to make the following unprecedented offer: I will send to every person, FREE OF ANY EXTRA CHARGE, one of my elegantly trimmed Two-Piece Linen Suits, wholesale price, $2.50, on receipt of the following Certificate and $2.00; or one of my Three-Piece Suits, wholesale value $3.50, for the Certificate and $2.50.—These Suits are elegantly and tastefully trimmed with black or brown, beautifully stitched. The making alone would cost you from $3.50 to $5.00 at any dressmaker's. Then add the cost of the material, at 50 cents per yard, the regular retail price, and you see what a BARGAIN I offer. These Suits are no old style, shelf-worn goods, but are made to my order and under my supervision. I have ladies' and misses' sizes. Send bust measure, and I can fit you nicely. Cut out the following Certificate and send to PETER WILLIAMS 18 & 20 Third Avenue, Chicago. It is good for half a dollar in part payment for one of my Linen Suits. Only one Certificate will be received toward each Suit. Ladies acting as Agents, and sending in Clubs of Ten, will be allowed One Suit FREE. Send money by registered letter or post-office money order; either way is safe. Remember, this price covers all packing, shipping and express charges on Suits. I will fill all orders received before the 15th of September at these prices. Give plain shipping directions—name, postoffice, county and State.

This Certificate Good for FIFTY CENTS with PETER W. WILLIAMS.
Cut this out and inclose with it $2.00, and we will send you one of our Two-Piece Linen Suits, elegantly trimmed, Free of extra charge.
PETER W. WILLIAMS, 18 & 20 Third Ave., Chicago.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS,
For Malarial Poisoning, Especially Hepatic Diseases and Malarial Fevers.
Testimony of Distinguished Medical Men:
MALARIOUS FEVERS.

Extract from Letter of Dr. Wm. T. Howard, of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, of August 1st, 1873.

Dr. Howard compares these waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

"The Greenbrier White Sulphur Waters will be recognized by all informed upon such subjects as one of the most noted Mineral Fountains of the World.

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases: and more especially to the cachexia and sequels incident to MALARIOUS FEVERS IN ALL THEIR GRADES AND VARIETIES."

* * * * * * In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the BUFFALO SPRINGS, in Mecklenburg county, Virginia."

Extract from Letter of the late Dr Thos P. Atkinson, of Danville, Va., Ex-President State Medical Society, dated August 15th, 1874.

"The Buffalo Lithia Waters have unquestionably displayed great power in the peculiar diseases of the warm, miasmatic regions of the South, which may be grouped together under the general head of Malarial Cachexia, covering Hepatic Engorgements, Enlargements of the Spleen, Jaundice, &c."

"It is not pretended that these Waters possess any anti-periodic properties, such as belong to Quinine—At the same time, however, it is unquestionably true, that in the intermittent and remittent fevers in a chronic form, they have in numerous instances, given relief in cases which had obstinately resisted all the anti-periodic drugs of the shops. From my experience with them, I feel fully warranted in saying that, with rare exceptions, whenever disease is found originating under malarial influence, a potent remedy may be found in this water."

Extract from a Letter of Dr. John C. Coleman, of Halifax county, Va., (prior to the War a surgeon of the U. S. Navy, now retired) dated near Scottsburg, Va., January 1st, 1879.

"Perhaps no claim made for the Buffalo Lithia Waters is more thoroughly established than that they are a powerful antidote to malarial poison in all its forms and varieties. In that large class of disorders, included in term Malarial Cachexia, embracing Engorgement of the Liver and Spleen, Jaundice, Indigestion, Dropsies and Neuralgias, of which the warm malarious districts of the South are so prolific, the action of these waters as a general rule is most decided and happy, and oftentimes astonishing. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, they are especially efficacious. I presume there is no season at these Springs in which some cases of this character do not find relief from these Waters, which have before baffled the healing art."

Extract from Letter of Dr. Alfred Plumber, of Manson, N. C., dated March 16, 1874.

"I have known the Buffalo Springs of Mecklenburg county, Va., for twenty-five years, and have sent many patients to them. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fever, and in all diseases originating in malarial poison, I have found their action almost that of a charm. I have sent young ladies to these Springs so enfeebled from this influence as to be scarcely able to walk across a floor, and in a few weeks they would become so invigorated as to be able to dance half of every night."

These springs open for guests the 1st day of June. The water in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00 per case at the springs. Springs pamphlets sent to any address.

Beatrice De Cenci

Was the daughter of Count Nicola Cenci, a Roman noble of the sixteenth century. He was a man so utterly depraved and guilty of so many and such enormous crimes, that he feared even his own family. He caused the death of two of his sons, and subjected Beatrice to imprisonment and torture; but at length he was assassinated. It was as clear as day that the gentle and beautiful Beatrice had no knowledge of the plot, but she was accused of parricide, arrested, tried, cruelly tortured and condemned. The most illustrious families of Rome interceded in her behalf, and the life of many a gallant Roman youth was sacrificed in the endeavor to liberate her. All without avail. She was executed September 11, 1599. When the executioner bound her hands, Beatrice said, "You bind my body for destruction, but my soul for immortality." There is an indescribable sweetness and fascinating charm in the tender face of this loveliest woman of history. We have had prepared for us by the best artists a faithful portrait of this beautiful woman, in 30 oil colors, 15x21 in. in size, which is a copy of the celebrated painting by Guido, which hangs in the Barberini Palace, Rome, and has been one of the chief attractions of that Imperial City for a century. We give one copy of this picture, FREE, Postpaid, to any person who will send Thirty Cents for a 3 months' subscription to LEISURE HOURS, the best illustrated Magazine of choice Literature published at $1.00 per year; 30 cents for three months. FOR THE FAMILY.

A Song of Thanks.

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Thank God for the dear ones safe to-day,
Safe at home on the happy shore,
Where the smiles of the Father beams for aye,
And the shadow of pain shall fall no more.
Thank God for the hearts that have done with sin,
For the eyes that shall never be blind with tears,
Thank God for the beautiful, entered in
To the perfect rest of the deathless years.

Thank God to-day for the pilgrim feet
Which have trodden the last of the toilsome way,
For the strong, for the frail, for the babes so sweet
Who have left forever this crumbling clay,
Who have changed earth's trial and loss and moan,
For the victor's palm, and the voice of praise,
Who dwell in the sight of the great white throne,
And join in the songs which the ransomed raise.

Thank God to-day for the hope sublime
Which fills our souls in the darkest hours,
Thank God that the transient cares of time,
Are wreathed in the glory of fadeless flowers.
Thank God, for the rift in the desolate grave,
'Tis the soldier's couch, not the captive's prison;
He hallowed its portal, who died to save,
And we write o'er its arch, "The Lord is risen!"

Robbie's Bed-Time Story.

BY HOPE LEDYARD.

"Ah, mamma, please let Allen stay in my bed! we'll be so good!"

"But I never like you to play and carry on after your prayers. It isn't as if you had not romped enough, you have been running about in your night dresses for nearly an hour," and mamma looked at her watch.

"Oh, we don't want to carry on. I wants to tell Allen nice stories—good stories."

It was very hard to refuse the loving little fellow; so Allen—fat, roly-poly Allen—who had not said a word, but watched the two faces with his bright brown eyes, was lifted into Robbie's bed and mamma went off to "dress for papa." But, truth to tell, her dressing that night was very hurried, for she longed to hear what Robbie was talking about; so in a few moments she slipped round to the side door of the nursery, where, as it stood a little ajar, she could hear every word.

"His name was Nehemiah," Robbie was saying, "can you say that?"

"Hermiah," repeated Allen sleepily.

"Well, that's pretty good. Now, you see, baby, Nehemiah used to hand the King his wine—I 'spose folk's didn't know about the pledge in those days; you see they used to have lots of wives, and wine ain't worse than that! Don't you know a man's put in prison for havin' more'n one wife, and so he is for getting drunk. You see, Jesus hadn't come and teached 'em. Well! Nehemiah poured a leetle drop of the wine in his hand and tasted it first."

"Naughty!" said Baby, who knew that wasn't good manners.

"Oh, no, it was all right—everything was different then."

"I wish mamma was like the king, 'cause I does like to pour out a little of her doffee."

"Now you can't hear my story if you int'rupt so. One day Nehemiah looked awful sad"—

"'Haps his little boy was cross," said Allen. The suspicion was too personal, and Robbie's voice sounded decidedly vexed for a minute.

"Now, Baby, you mustn't guess—just listen. He was sad 'cause his beautiful city, Jerusalem, was burned up—the wall was broken down. And he looked so sad that the king said: 'What's the matter?' Then Nehemiah told him and the good king said, 'Don't you fret. I'll help you to build up the walls; how long will it take you?'"

"Quadrillion hours," said Baby, thinking the question addressed to him.

"Twelve years," said Nehemiah. So he went, and after a long journey he came to Jerusalem, and he went around among the folks and got 'em all worked up about the walls. Everybody said they'd help. But you see they had enemies all around and the enemies said they would kill 'em."

"Shoot 'em—bang! Oh, Robbie! don't you wish we'd been born there, to shoot back?"

"It wasn't very funny, I guess; for you see, with one hand every man had to hold a trowel or a load of bricks, and with the other he had to hold his sword. I guess that is why grandpa likes us to use both hands—not to be right-handed or left-handed, so's we can fight and work."

"Did the enemies come out and beat 'em?"

"No. Mamma says the reason they didn't beat 'em was 'cause the people was watching and praying, and she says we must do like that. Now, Baby, let's have a secret."

"Yes," said Allen, wide awake in a moment, for he delighted in a secret.

"Let's watch all the time—you and I—against our enemies. We pray lots, but sometimes we forget, and the enemies"——

"Aint got none!" said Allen stoutly.

"Oh, yes, you have! Don't you know? Satan and all his bad spirits that get in our hearts."

"Oh, that any fun," said Allen, sleepily. "I like shooting and banging. Tell me nudder story—not a good Sunday un."

Mamma, listening outside, expected to hear Robbie turn away and refuse his little brother, for he was very sensitive as to any criticism. But Robbie was on the watch. He cuddled the little one in his arms, and told him the old story of the Three Bears—an ever new tale to Allen.

The next morning, mamma, remembering the bed-room story, asked that God would help her little boys to watch against temptation. Things went pretty smoothly. They acted out all their favorite bible stories, and Robbie was careful to let Allen have all the favorite parts. It required some little sacrifice to be Goliath every time, and let the stout young David stand on him and cut off his head; and then, in the scene of Jonathan shooting the arrows in the field, to be the boy who was told that the arrow was beyond him; both children did so delight in shooting the arrows! But Robbie was watching; not one selfish spirit was allowed to overpower him, and the quick impatient temper was held in firm check.

After the early dinner came a hasty summons to Mrs. Grant, and, with hardly time to kiss the little ones, she had to leave them. Time passed pleasantly, for they played a new game that Robbie had invented, "The Jerry-merry Railroad." Allen perched himself on a high stool, with a bean bag held out at arm's length, while Robbie came rushing by (he was the "'spress,") snatching the bean bag and throwing down another.

Back and forth he ran, Allen screaming "All on board for the Jerry-merry Railroad," enjoying the noise, but at last both were tired, and having found an old "Harper" for Allen, Rob went upstairs to look for some string. He was gone quite a long time, for he happened to see his mother's dressing case, and grew absorbed in taking out and replacing the various articles.

Meanwhile, Allen had tired of the "picker-book," and looked around for some new amusement. "Chirp! chirp!" said little Chris, the canary, which reminded Allen that "may be" mamma hadn' filled the seed-cup. To be sure, mamma never had forgotten it, but he'd just climb up and see. Standing on the sewing machine, he could just reach the pretty cage and talk to Chris, and here Robbie found him.

Now, Chris was Robbie's special treasure, and as the little bird had been nearly killed by a cat, Robbie was most anxious that no one should frighten him. Yet, there stood Allen, chattering to the bird and sticking his fat little fingers in the cage, while poor Chris fluttered wildly from side to side. With one jump Robbie was by the machine.

"You bad, naughty boy! Get down! get down, I say!"

Little Allen, frightened by the angry tones, started, lost his balance and, catching wildly at the cage, fell, carrying the bottom of the cage with him. Chris was out in a moment—ah, how sorry Robbie was!

He tried his best to quiet his little brother, who no doubt would have screamed for some time, though not badly hurt, but for the delight of watching Chris fly about the room. The little bird perched in front of the mirror and, seeing a mate, as he supposed, sang most lustily.

It was a pretty sight, and as the bird was not very wild there was no real cause for anxiety; but Robbie knew he had forgotten his secret—he had not been on the watch. The hot hasty, temper had stolen on him unawares and he would lose his little bird as a punishment. He was very, very sorry, yet he felt he deserved it. At first he sat down, and, while Allen ran about the room, chattering to Chris, big tears of penitence rolled down his cheeks. But suddenly he jumped up, and, climbing carefully, he unhooked the top of the cage and placed it on the table with the door open.

"Allen," he said, "I'm so very sorry I talked so cross. I ought to lose my dear little Chris; but Allen, let's ask God to make birdie go in his cage. Mamma read about God caring for the sparrows, this morning, and they aint bigger than canaries. Let's ask him."

"Oh, but I like him out in the room."

"But if the door is opened he'll fly out, and we'll never see him again."

Allen hadn't thought of that. Yes, he wanted the little bird safe in his cage; so down the children knelt, and Robbie, who is as accustomed to take any trouble to the Lord as to his mother, said, with tearful voice:

"Heavenly Father, I have been cross again. I tried watching, but I forgot, and I don't 'serve to have little bird. But please, for Allen's sake, and 'cause papa and mamma love little birdie, make him go in his cage. For Jesus' sake amen. Robbie."

Bye and bye, as the sun went down, the bird, with doubtful hops, came nearer and nearer his old home, and at last——

"Thank you, God," cried Robbie, for the bird was in, and mamma had shut the door.

Then, at the evening talk, as Robbie told of his discouragement, mamma cheered the little boy by telling him she thought he had really watched faithfully, and had not really let the enemy conquer him. "He only knocked you down for a moment, Robbie, and sometimes we are all the stronger for the fall."—Christian Union.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Nurse.

First, there must be physical health and strength sufficient for an arduous and trying work. This will include a soundness of all the organs of sense—good eyesight, hearing, touch, taste, and smell—a suitable age, and a stable nervous system—moderate muscular power and a fair amount of manual dexterity are also necessary. It will be sufficient to imagine a nurse deficient in any one of these qualities to see how essential each of them is. The work of nursing, especially in a hospital, is exceedingly trying to the health, and many faults of temper, or of apparent carelessness, may be due really to imperfect health. There are some persons with physical susceptibilities, not incompatible with ordinary good health, which yet render the air of a hospital instantly poisonous to them, and which completely debar them from hospital work. The writer has seen most persevering attempts to overcome these susceptibilities by a process of acclimatisation and other means, but without success. Instances are not wanting in which fatal mistakes have been made by nurses in consequence of imperfect eyesight or hearing; needless pain is often inflicted from a want of delicacy of touch, and there are some persons to whom throughout their lives manual dexterity is an impossibility. Certain mental qualities are also essential to the efficient nurse. She must be a good-tempered and cheerful, not easily depressed or disturbed, possessed of great patience, observant and accurate. Her moral character is also of importance; she must be sober and vigilant, trustful, trustworthy, and conscientious. It must be remembered also that the lack of some of these qualities is not compensated for by special excellence in others, nor by any amount of enthusiasm. It cannot be too clearly understood that nursing is by no means a poetical or sentimental occupation, but that it is often a very painful and disagreeable one. The professional nurse, moreover, has not the pleasure of looking forward to the society of the sick person when recovered, and when the fretfulness of illness has been replaced by the thankful calm of joyous gratitude of health; nor has she the interest given by a family relationship to, or a natural affection for, the patient. She has charge of a constant succession of sick persons of whom she has no previous knowledge, and of whom she loses sight as soon as recovery has taken place and who, moreover, frequently fail to exhibit the slightest sense of gratitude for her care. This is obviously neither the occupation of a delicate devotee who seeks relief from the monotony of fashionable frivolity, nor for a coarse and ignorant drudge as an alternative employment to scrubbing the floor. It needs not only a special capacity, but a special training.—Contemporary Review.

Dyspepsia of Bankers' Clerks.

Dr. Manouvrig has published in the Bulletin Medical du Nord some novel observations on this subject. It has been repeatedly noticed for years that bankers' clerks, after having handled for some days in succession large quantities of silver five-franc pieces, suffer from disorders of the respiratory and digestive organs. These have been ascribed to a dark-greenish metallic dust which is raised by taking the coins from the bags where they are generally kept, weighing them, and putting them back. This dust impregnates the atmosphere of the room, blackens the skin and penetrates into the respiratory and digestive tracts, together with the air and saliva. As a rule, this process is only gone through at rare intervals during the year, and only lasts a few days, so that the clerks soon recover their health, or do not feel much affected by this dust. But in the years 1872 and 1874, when the money which had been paid by France to Prussia as a tribute was returned to France through mercantile transactions, the clerks spent several weeks in handling the coins, which had not been taken out of their bags for some years, and the affection was now more marked than ever. The symptoms of this peculiar disease are—frequent sneezing, coryza, and angina; the expectorations are black. There are a disagreeable metallic taste in the mouth, which spoils the flavor of the food, loss of appetite, colic, nausea, and violent thirst. The bowels are mostly constipated; diarrhœa seldom prevails. The blue line along the gums, which is often noticed in patients who have been subject to treatment by silver, is absent. There is a great feeling of prostration, and frequent headaches. Owing to the peculiar circumstances under which this affection has been first observed, there can be no doubt as to its being due partly to the copper (verdigris), and partly to the oxydised state of the silver: both metals are used in the coinage of the five-franc pieces, in the proportion of nine-tenths of silver and one-tenth of copper. The constipation seems to be caused by the silver, because copper invariably causes diarrhœa. It is also said that silversmiths often suffer from colic, which is caused by their work. The patients were treated with purgatives and a milk diet, and the disorder soon ceased.—British Medical Journal.

Spectacles.

A controversy has lately been going on in the columns of a German paper as to the proper person to whom a statue is due as the "Inventor of Spectacles." There can be little doubt that the public and universal honouring of this benefactor of our kind, whosoever he may be, is richly deserved, and it is possible that many shortsighted and dimsighted persons will be ready, so soon as he is discovered, to contribute their offering towards his memorial. As early as the eleventh century the Arabian optician mentions the existence of magnifying glasses; but he certainly cannot claim the statue, for he was not their inventor, but merely the chronicler of their invention. We may add that our own Roger Bacon, two centuries later, wrote at large on this invention. It appears that the first pair of actual spectacles, so far as present research has discovered, occurred between the years 1280 and 1310. A monument and inscription upon a tomb in Florence, of the year 1327, names a certain Salvino degli Armati as the inventor of spectacles, or double eye-glasses for weak sight. Pisa, in the defiant spirit of the rival Italian cities during the Middle Ages, denies that the glory is due to a Florentine, and claims it for the Pisan Monk Alexander da Spina, who is said to have "helped and blessed many needy and suffering persons by his beneficial invention." If Italy may claim the inventor of spectacles as one of her sons, the most extensive manufacture of the article was carried on in Germany, and particularly at Nuremburg, whose "Britten macher" dispatched their handiwork to all parts of Europe. Until the end of the seventeenth century spectacles were simply objects of utility; but at that epoch they began to be adopted in Spain and Portugal as articles of fashion, certain courtiers employing them to improve their characterless physiognomy. The trick passed over the Pyrenees into France, where the pair of spectacles was improved into the monocle, or eye-glass, which served much the same purposes in the hand of the Versailles beau as the fan in the hands of the belle. The pince-nez, a nose-pincher, is an invention of our own century.

Wedding Gifts.

Wedding presents, now so common in the first stage of matrimony, have come down from the feudal system. In almost all parts of the civilized world such things are given and received, and, we might add, expected. In a start in married life certain necessaries in the way of furniture, crockery, and so on, were always acceptable. Rich people and feudal lords would not object, on the bridal of their daughters, to receive presents from their vassals. In different countries different modes prevail. The penny weddings in Scotland are peculiar. Invited guests make contributions in money. One shilling is the general tribute, and half a crown is the princely offering. Out of the sum thus collected the not very costly expenses of the feast were paid, and the surplus went towards buying the furniture. In the weddings of the poorer classes in Ireland these contributions never take place. There is a collection, however, to raise a sum for liberally compensating the clerical gentleman who "has tied the knot," and in the house of a rich farmer this swells up to a good round sum. In Wales, among the small farmers and traders, the custom prevails to this day of "bidding," not single guests, but whole families, to a wedding. That such an event is to come off, with the whore and when, is duly advertised in the local newspaper, with a request that all persons who, in times past, have been similarly obliged in that manner, will attend, bringing presents for the bride and groom. Besides this, particular and almost peremptory invitations, in writing, are sent to each household on whom the to-be-wedded folks may have some especial claim for former generosity under like circumstances. Presents of all sorts—food, furniture, flour, fuel, table and chamber linen, even sheep, lambs, calves, goats and ponies—are among the gifts.

CELEBRATED
LIVER PILLS,
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

RICHARD BAXTER.

Our article last week closed with the death of Baxter in 1691. He then entered on his rest.

On many accounts Baxter was an extraordinary character. The visits of such spirits to these abodes of sin are few and infrequent. He was esteemed and admired not only by his friends, but by many of those who differed from him in the then existing points of acrimonious dispute. Lords and Bishops have given him the meed of their praise. "His practical writings," says Barrow, "were never mended and his controversial seldom confuted." "He was a man," says Granger, "famous for weakness of body and strength of mind; for having the strongest sense of religion himself, and exciting a sense of it in the thoughtless and profligate."

The spring of Baxter's energy and usefulness was a deep, vivid operative piety. He was well acquainted "with the inside of religion." The Spirit of God had performed a thorough work in his heart, and under the continued teaching of the Heavenly Messenger, he became well qualified to guide others in the way of life. High in holy attainment and faithful in the discharge of duty, he shed around him a strong and reproving light upon an ignorant and profligate generation. The following sententious aspiration expressed the deep desires and established principles of his heart. "Let the Eternal God be the portion of my soul; let heaven be my inheritance and hope; let faith be my wisdom, and love be my very heart and will, and patient, persevering obedience be my life;" then I can spare the wisdom of the world and all the trifles it seeks."

Baxter's piety, received the nourishment of sorrows and severe afflictions. Within his own breast he had many hard conflicts; storms of temptations which at times well nigh swept away the foundation of his hope. In the early stages of his Christian course he was much disturbed with strength and occasional prevalence of , and consequently with agonizing doubts of his own sincerity. At a later period his most distressing temptations were to question the truth of Scripture, and the reality of the life to come. So powerful were the onsets of the adversary, he says, that sometimes he hardly knew whether he was a Christian or an infidel. But his trust was in the Redeemer, and in His strength he came off a conqueror. His house was on the Rock, and Satan could not undermine it, or shake it down.

Baxter lived, as every Christian ought to live, with the future world clearly and steadily in view. He ever looked to things unseen and eternal. He walked by faith. His best thoughts and affections were upon the life to come. The infirmities of his body seemed to augment the energies of his spirit and the efficiency of his piety; for he ever prayed and spoke and acted under the rousing impression that death and eternity were very near him. Some of his most searching practical writings are the sentiments and urgencies of a soul deeply imbued with the love of Christ, and attained at the very entrance of heaven.

Baxter possessed, in no ordinary degree, the spirit of a missionary. "He gave in one year a hundred pounds"—five hundred dollars of our money—"to buy Bibles for the poor." From his own account, we learn that he intensely felt and prayed for the perishing heathen. "There is nothing in the world," he says in his "Life and Times," that lieth so heavy upon my heart "as the thought of the miserable nations of the earth." Again, "I cannot be affected so much with the calamities of my own relations or the land of my nativity, as with the case of the heathen, Mahometan and ignorant nations of the earth. No part of my prayer is so keeply serions as that for the infidel and ungodly world, that God's name may be sanctified and his 'kingdom come and His will be done on earth as it is heaven.'" If Baxter had such thoughts and aspirations in the seventeenth century, how would he have prayed and pleaded and labored had his lot been cast in this nineteenth century—in a day like the present, where so much light is shed upon the moral condition of the world, and the facilities for its conversion are so much increased, and the efforts and sacrifices made for its welfare are so signally blessed of God!

Baxter is an example worthy of study and imitation, in seasons of high controversial excitement. His lot was cast in times of violence, oppression and bitter contention, not about the foundation or the corner stone of the gospel, but the mere appendages of the Christian edifice. When he lived a man was condemned and anathematized for the slightest singularity in the mode of his worship, or as it has been rather strongly expressed, "his very brains were knocked out to kill a fly on his forehead." But in this conflict of bitter feelings, hard speeches and unchristian actions, Baxter exhibited, with some exceptions (which are to be attributed to the times rather than to his disposition) he exhibited, we say, the charity and meekness of the Gospel. Grace had thoroughly penetrated and calmed his nature; and not unfrequently would he throw the oil of his own quiet spirit upon the turbulent elements about him, in hope of assuaging the violence of the storm. But he was determined in the course which he believed to be right. The truth of God he would maintain at any sacrifice or any hazard. The terrors of a dungeon and the allurements of a diocese were alike insignificant to draw him into any compromise with error in principle or in practice.

Baxter is a bright example of faithfulness, as a preacher of the Gospel. He is a model worthy of particular regard at the present time, when with many, who are reputed to preach the truth, there is too manifest a disposition to paraphrase some of its plain, sententious epithets, round off its most cutting points and soften some of its uncivil asperities. Baxter did not so preach the Gospel. No matter whom he was addressing—kings or beggars—we hear the same direct, fearless disclosure of the counsel of God. The sermon delivered before the dissolute Charles II is a masterly specimen, not only of grand, impressive eloquence, but also of a plain, pointed dealing with the conscience of his princely auditors. Will you persuade us that the man is wise that can climb a little higher than his neighbor, that he may have the greater fall? that is attended in his way to hell with greater pomp and state than others? That can sin more syllogistically and rhetorically than the vulgar, and more prudently and gravely run into damnation, and can learnedly defend his madness and prove that he is safe at the brink of hell? Would you persuade us that he is wise that contradicts the law of God and the rule of wisdom—that parts with heaven for a few merry hours, and hath not wit to save his soul?" Again, "Can you forget that death is ready to undress you and tell you that your sport and mirth is done, and that now you have had all that the world can do for those that serve it and take it for their portion? How quickly can a fever, or the choice of a hundred messengers of death, bereave you of all that can afford you pleasure, and turn your sweetest pleasures into gall, and turn a Lord into a lump of clay." "Princes and nobles live not always." You are not the rulers of the unmoveable kingdom, but of a boat which is on a hasty stream, or a ship under sail, that shall speed both pilots and passengers to the shore. The inexorable leveller is ready at your backs to convince you by irresistible arguments, that "dust you are and unto dust you must return." Heaven should be as desirable and hell as terrible to you as to others. No man will fear you after death, much less will Christ be afraid to judge you." Do we find any chaplain now who dare speak in this faithful and fearless manner to those high in authority?

The same style of plain, earnest dealing runs through all the practical writings of Baxter. Of these, however, it is scarcely necessary to speak. Their record is in the hearts of thousands, some on earth and some in heaven. "To allure our desires," says Baxter, "he unveils the sanctuary above and discovers the glory and joys of the blessed in the Divine presence, by a light so strong and lively, that all the glittering vanities of this world vanishes in that comparison, and a sincere believer will despise them, as one of mature age does the toys and baubles of children. To excite our fear he removes the screen and makes the everlasting fire of hell so visible, and represents the tormenting passions of the damned in those dreadful colors, which, if duly considered, would check and control the unbridled licentiousness of the most sensual wretches. His call to the unconverted, how small in bulk, but how powerful in virtue! Truth speaks in it with that authority and efficacy that it makes the reader to lay his hand on his heart, and find that he has a soul and a conscience, though he lived before as if he had none."

Let no individual who values his salvation, no Christian who would grow in grace, fail to be familiar with the descriptions, counsels and warnings of the "Saint's Rest." Let the "Reformed Pastor" lie upon every minister's table or be written on his heart. Let the vehement and searching pages of this godly man be more and more circulated and read, and it will not be in vain. God has blessed them, and he will bless them again, to the welfare of immortal souls; and the glorified spirit of their author will shine with still increasing lustre in the heavenly firmament.

MILK FOR BABES.

MILK FOR BABES AS WELL AS STRONG MEAT FOR GROWN FOLKS.

How should a Christian minister use water when he baptizes any one?

He should do with water what Christ Jesus, our Lord, did with the Holy Ghost, and with fire, when he baptized.

Why do you say so?

Because some say baptism has no modes, but is itself a mode which is unchangeable.

What did our Saviour do when He baptized with the Holy Ghost?

He "poured it out" and "shed it forth" so that it "fell on" and "came upon" the baptized.

What did Christ do with fire when he used it in baptism?

He caused it "to sit" on each of the baptized.

Won't you allow that immersion is a scriptural baptism?

No; I won't as long as folks say baptism is always a mode, and so can't have modes.

But ain't you neglecting the meaning of the word for baptism in the original languages of the Bible?

I am not. I am only showing what is that meaning in the Bible.

Haven't you got dictionaries, and commentaries and histories against you?

What if I have? I have also dictionaries, and commentaries and histories for me. Besides, the question is not, What do preachers and other expositors say is in the Bible? But what does the Bible tell and common sense repeat?

Y.

CARDINAL WISEMAN.

The London Weekly Review has this to say about Cardinal Wiseman and the ceremony of raising him to the cardinalate:

On the morning of the 12th of May Dr. Newman went to the residence of Cardinal Howard, to receive the messenger from the Vatican bearing the biglietto from the Cardinal Secretary of State; that at mid-day the messenger arrived, and handed the biglietto to Dr. Newman, who broke the seal and handed it to Dr. Clifford, Bishop of Clifton, who read the contents. The messenger informed the newly created Cardinal that his Holiness would receive him next day at the Vatican to confer the biretta on him. We have no doubt it was an imposing ceremony, for Popery is skilled in devising and arranging imposing ceremonies. The performance was witnessed by a crowd of English and American Roman Catholics, and "of clergy of the Church of England there were present the Rev. Mr. Wagner, of Brighton, the Rev. Mr. Edwards, of Prestbury, the Rev. Dr. Luard, Registrar of Cambridge." Chacun a son gout, but we must express our opinion that it was a ceremony at which clergy of the Church of England ought not to have assisted. Cardinal Newman is a man of great intellectual power, though, by the way, his secession to Rome did not leave Protestantism without intellectual power. Some of the panegyrists of the new Cardinal seem to imagine that his Eminence is the only British subject of very superior mental capacity, and who can write plain English. We appreciate the cleverness of "Tract Ninety," and we admire the chaste diction of the "Apologia Pro Vita Sua," but his Eminence is not without a host of compeers in ability and eloquence. We do not doubt the high personal character of Cardinal Newman, though his conduct is to us inexplicable. He was a greatly honored and much trusted minister of the Church of England, yet he was the hardest worker in the Oxford Movement, of which the results are the development of Romanism in the Church of England and the secession of many members of that Church to Rome. Whilst engaged in the work of Rome Mr. Newman again and again protested against Popery. Even after the publication of "Tract Ninety" he denied that he was trying to Romanise the Church of England. But he did, in fact, do more to Romanise the Church of England than any other man has done, and after retiring from Oxford he followed to Rome the friends he had Romanised. Nolens Volens he has been an enemy of the Church of England, and yet the clergy of that Church were present to see him receive the formal announcement of being appointed to the "sublime rank" of Cardinal.

His Eminence made a speech, in which he said the Pope had told him that among other reasons for making him a Cardinal, "he (the Pope) judged it would give pleasure to English Catholics, and even to Protestant England, if he received some mark of his favour." We do not know if the Pope ever consciously indulges in joking, but assuredly the idea of Protestant England being pleased because the Pope makes an apostate from Protestantism a Cardinal is very humorous. Protestant England is not displeased, for it does not matter to Protestants what the Pope does in respect to bestowing honors; and if there be any nominal Protestants who will go over to Rome in the hope that they may some day be raised to the "sublime rank," the sooner they leave the Protestant fold the better, for such self-seeking persons are no good to any community. But surely his Holiness was poking fun when he suggested that Protestant England would not be indifferent but pleased, positively pleased, by the Pope conferring an honor on an apostate from Protestantism.

THE BISHOP BIT A POD OF PEPPER.

The recent accessor to the Bishopric of Richmond, in the Catholic Church has had sorry luck. His zeal got the better of his wits, and he came to "apostolic blows and knocks" with a colored brother. The champions "tried conclusions" with each other in the columns of a paper conducted by the black people. The negro trounced Brother Keane, and the Bishop lost the fight and his temper, too.

His most ill-starred expedition after a Protestant fleece was the effort to get a clip of Presbyterian wool.— Surely Bishop Keane ought to have known that a Roman priest was a sweet morsel to the palate of the Scotch-Irish covenanter.

We like the enterprise, but must discount the caution of the Bishop.

Our readers may have seen a neighbor bring a lively little terrier home. The nimble fellow instead of attending to his own business and the big rats, must first dart down the street and pick a quarrel with all the fine old tom-cats, quietly dozing on the door-mats. He perks his ears and barks. The bunch of fur on the porch just opens an eye. The terrier thinks to give it a shake. Before he can wink, two fore feet, keen with claws, are slapping his jaws, while his nose is nipping by teeth sharp as a needle. As he rolls and screams down the steps that old cat, now very wide awake, improves the occasion to impart a lesson that no terrier need to learn but once.

When Bishop Keane gets away from Dr. Wm. Brown he will be "sore all over" but too wise to wake up another Calvinist editor. —Richmond Christian Advocate.

WILL HE SUCCEED?

In nine cases out of ten a man's life will not be a success if he does not bear burdens in his childhood. If the fondness or the vanity of father or mother has kept him from hard work; if another always helped him out at the end of his row; if instead of taking his turn at pitching off he stowed away all the time—in short, if what was light fell to him, and what was heavy about the work to some one else; if he has been permitted to shirk, until shirking has become a habit, unless a miracle has been wrought, his life will be a failure, and the blame will not be half so much his as that of the weak and foolish parents.

On the other hand, if a boy has been brought up to do his part, never allowed to shirk his responsibility, or to dodge work whether or not it made his head ache, or soiled his hands, until bearing burdens has become a matter of pride, the heavy end of the wood his choice, parents as they bid him good-by may dismiss their fear. The elements of success are his, and at some time and in some way the world will recognize his capacity.—Young Folks' World.

A SWEDISH POEM.

It matters little where I was born,
Or if my parents were rich or poor;
Whether they shrank at the cold world's scorn,
Or walked in the pride of wealth secure;
But whether I live an honest man,
And hold my integrity firm in my clutch,
I tell you, brother, plain as I am,
It matters much!

It matters little how long I stay
In a world of sorrow, sin and care;
Whether in youth I am called away
Or live till my bones and pate are bare;
But whether I do the best I can
To soften the weight of adversity's touch
On the faded cheek of my fellow-man.
It matters much!

It matters little where be my grave,
Or on the land or on the sea;
By purling brook or 'neath stormy wave,
It matters little or naught to me;
But whether the angel Death comes down
And marks my brow with his loving touch,
As one that shall wear the victor's crown,
It matters much!

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Gleaned from Exchanges:

Cardinal Manning has opened a new Roman Catholic church in Quex Road, Kilburn.

There has been an accession of 500 converts at Mandapaslai, in the Madura Mission of the American Board.

The receipts of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Church this year amount to over $80,000.

At Eversley, near London, where Charles Kingsley labored so long and well, a chapel for Methodist worship has recently been opened.

Rev. Dr. Henry C. Riley and Hernandez are to be consecrated Protestant Episcopal Bishops to Mexico on the 24th of June in Pittsburgh, Bishops Lee of Delaware and Coxe of Western New York officiating.

A decision has been made by the Edinburgh United Presbyterian Presbytery that hereafter the laying on of hands of the Moderator of Presbytery is sufficient to the ordination of a minister.

The receipts of the London Missionary Society the last year were larger than ever before, $546,740. It is supported chiefly by Congregationalists, and has under its care 101,928 church members, with 142 English and 353 native missionaries.

A Roman Catholic Church, built by Lady Stapleton Bretherton at a cost of £16,000, besides a theological college in connection with it for the use of exiled German Jesuits, has been opened at Ditton, Lancashire, by the Roman Catholic Bishop of Liverpool, with great ceremony.

The petitioners to the Bishop of Chester, complaining of illegal ritualistic practices at St. Margaret's, Toxteth, Liverpool, have just written to the Bishop, informing him that having found an appeal to his Lordship of no avail they will have recourse to a prosecution by law.

A pastoral letter from the Bishop of London was read in most of the metropolitan Episcopal churches on Sabbath with reference to the fund established for providing new churches and additional clergy, to meet the demand occasioned by the yearly increasing population of London. The Bishop says at least twenty new churches are required; and, while the fund has not during the past year increased, the demands upon it continually grow larger.

The Rev. J. H. Shedd, who has lately returned to his mission field in Persia, under the Presbyterians, writes home of great progress, and says the intelligent native Christians have already attained such a position and such a self-respect, as would have been impossible a few years ago. There are about twenty native pastors, and as many preaching deacons, some of them men of real learning joined to ardent piety.

The London Society for promoting Christianity amongst the Jews has received a telegraphic announcement of the death of Bishop Gobat on Sunday last at Jerusalem. The patronage of the bishopric rests alternately with the Queen of Great Britain and the King of Prussia, now Emperor of Germany. As Bishop Gobat was nominated by the late King of Prussia, the present vacancy must be filled by her Majesty. The episcopal salary amounts to £1200 a year, of which one moiety consists of an investment of £600 a year arising out of contributions obtained by the Earl of Shaftesbury and the Jews' Society, of which he is president.

A Montreal mother, Dame Sophie Cavallier, has sued the minister who united her son, who is a minor, to the object of his affections, laying the damages at $500. Her affidavit states that her son "was on the day of his marriage nineteen years of age, and a Catholic, whilst the marriage was solemnized according to the right of the First French Methodist Church." The minister, Mr. Beaudry, replies that the parents of the young girl approved the attachment, and when the couple presented themselves for marriage he questioned the bridegroom, who stated that his mother had told him to leave home and to get married if he chose. The banns of matrimony were regularly published, a fact of which the mother was aware.

Proceedings of the General Assembly.

NINTH DAY.

We take from Courier-Journal report.

Overture number sixteen from churches in the bounds of the Presbytery of Florida asking to be transferred to the Presbytery of East Alabama will be granted when Synods of Georgia and Alabama consent.

The Assembly declined overture No 17, asking that an official reporter for this Assembly be dispensed with.

Overture No. 18, from Dr. James Park, asking the Assembly:

First—Is it competent for a Presbytery to adjourn to meet in the bounds of another Presbytery, either within or beyond the territorial limits of the Synod of which it is a consistent part?

Second—At a meeting of a Synod, if another Presbytery than that within which the Synod is sitting, desires to hold a session to complete unfinished business, or to transact new business, can it be done orderly and constitutionally over the motion of its Presbytery itself? or must it be by special dispensation of the Synod?

Third—Is it competent for one Presbytery to interdict the meeting of another Presbytery in its bounds, without the dispensation of the Synod?

The answer recommended is important, viz:

Such questions can only be answered by reference to general rules or principles. A Presbytery consists of all the ministers and one ruling elder from each congregation within a certain district, and is, therefore, bounded by strictly geographical limits. In the judgment of this Assembly no Presbytery ought to meet beyond its own bounds without strong reasons or without the consent, expressed or implied, of the Presbytery within whose bounds it proposes to meet, and, if the Presbytery be within the bounds of another Synod, without the consent of that Synod also. The Assembly would recommend its Presbyteries not to hold meetings during the sessions of Synod, unless such session be necessary, or be ordered to be held by the Synod. Docketed. (Afterwards laid on the table.)

"From whom is it proper for the General Assembly to receive overtures, according to the constitution?"

The following answer was adopted: In the judgment of this Assembly, all overtures to the highest court of the Church ought to come from the lower courts, and not from individuals; and further, that the highest court ought not to be asked for advice and instruction (Form of Government, chap. v: sec. 6, art. 5) in any case in which the said "advice" or "instruction" may be given with equal edification to the Church by a lower court.

Overture No. 20 was docketed. It is as follows:

The Synod of Kentucky asks the General Assembly to reconsider the action of the General Assembly of 1878 approving the action of the Presbytery of Louisville "in restraining from the exercise of the functions of the ministry a minister deemed irresponsible for his words and acts by reason of unsoundness of mind, without the usual judicial process." And the Synod furthermore asks the Assembly to make such a deliverance on the subject, as shall obviate any liability to misinterpretation or danger of the introduction of principles or usages at variance with the regulation of our standards, and threatening to the rights and liberties of our ministers and people."

The committee recommended that the Assembly make the following answer:

"While it might be competent for one General Assembly under such rules as the constitution provides to grant a new hearing of a case which has been judicially decided by a previous General Assembly, yet, inasmuch as this memorial simply asks for a deliverance in a case adjudicated by the Assembly of 1878, this declines to grant the request of the memorial for the reason that no deliverance 'in thesi' can modify or set aside a judicial sentence."

THE CANFIELD CASE.

Your committee appointed to prepare a minute on the action of the General Assembly in the matter of the complaint of I. W. and W. Q. Canfield against the Synod of Kentucky, would respectfully report the following:

The General Assembly, in refusing to sustain the complaint, while recognizing the right of every member of the Presbyterian Church to bring before the courts any matter of personal grievance or affecting the honor of religion, yet we are to affirm on the other hand the competency of the court to exercise a sound discretion as to the propriety of considering any such matter brought before them; and, so far as appears from the facts before the Assembly in this case, the Synod of Kentucky and the Presbytery of Louisville did not exercise this discretion improperly.

Postponed for the time, but afterwards Dr. Woodrow offered an amendment by adding the following words:

"But, though the General Assembly approves of the decision of the Synod in dismissing the complaint, it is not to be understood as approving of all the reasons assigned by the Synod for that decision."

The amendment was adopted, and the report as amended was also adopted.

The Auditing Committee reported books and accounts of the Treasurer of Education and of the Treasurer of Publication as correct and satisfactory. Adopted.

THE BACON CASE.

The following is the minute reported on this case:

Your committee appointed to bring in a minute expressing the mind of the Assembly touching the complaint of Mr. E. E. Bacon against the action of the Synod of Missouri, would beg leave to report the following: The vote of the Assembly in not sustaining the complaint is understood as confirming the sentence of the First church of St. Joseph, but is not to be construed as giving its sanction to the irregularities in the conduct of the trial, namely: in declining to cite all the witnesses nominated by the accused and in receiving as collateral testimony the letter of Rev. W. H. Clagett; but as expressing the sense of the Assembly as to the substantial justice of the sentence pronounced by the Session and confirmed by the Synod.

NORTH CAROLINA SYNOD.

The Committee to Examine the Records of the Synod of North Carolina reported, recommending their approval, with the following explanations, viz: That in the matter of the exception taken by the Synod, on page 89, with reference to the promise of a "commission," the Assembly is not to be understood as questioning the present law of the Church in regard to Commissioners.

The Special Committee on the Sabbath reported recommending continuance of the committee appointed by the last Assembly, and recommended systematic action, embracing appointment of Presbyterial committees to co-operate with the Assembly. Earnest attention of ministers, officers and members of the Church is called to the subject.

Records of Synod of Nashville were excepted to as showing that last session was not closed with prayer and the Synod has never adjourned.

Reports on Publication were taken up, principal and supplementary. They were adopted after reading of Rev. J. K. Hazen's letter, (as Secretary of the Executive Committee) to the Presbytery of Western District, and Rev. E. McNair's announcement that he considered the differences amicably settled. Dr. William Brown asked to be retired on account of failing eyesight. The request was granted the Assembly expressing its regrets.

THE SUSTENTATION REPORT

was made. The Secretaries have each voluntarily relinquished $250 of their salaries, of which honorable mention is made. The name Sustentation is changed to Home Missions. Presbyteries are again advised to group the churches so as to call for as little as possible from the fund. The fall meetings of Presbyteries looking to the collections of 1880 are called to consider what part of the $10,000, as a minimum asked for by the Executive Committee, their churches ought to raise and to devise means by which their proportionate part at least be furnished. And so in regard to the $20,000 needed for evangelistic fund, and for the invalid, likewise.

In connection with the subject of Sustentation quite a discussion was entered into about colored evangelization. A proposal to merge this branch of Sustentation so as to make it dependent upon the evangelistic fund was lost. The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That Presbyteries be requested to send up annually to the Committee of Home Missions an account of the work done within their bounds, in addition to the work of the committee for the colored people, and of the amounts contributed therefor.

The committee on Bills and overtures nominated the following as

to report to next Assembly:

Ministers—A. C. Hopkins, S. T. Martin, R. G. Brank, C. W. Lane.

Ruling Elders—D. A. Kennedy, W. D. Reynolds, W. T. Poague, James Hemphill, Henry Merrill.

The following resolution offered by Dr. Adger was taken up and passed:

Resolved, That where our Book says that an accused person may, if he desires it, be represented in the superior courts by "any member of the court" (or as the Old Book expressed it, "by any minister or elder belonging to the judicatory") the design, according to the judgment of this Assembly, is not to allow an array of counsel, but the privilege is to be limited to the aid which one advocate can give to him.

The committee on Theological Seminaries reported with regard to TUSKALOOSA INSTITUTE.

They note the growing usefulness of the institution, both in its relation to our own branch of the Church and in its bearings on other denominations; the expenses of the institution are still managed with due care and economy; the continuance of Rev. B. T. Lacy as soliciting agent is left to the Executive Committee; the course of study pursued is commended; it will devolve upon the Executive Committee elected, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Prof. Dickson, and very much depends upon the selection. First Sabbath in December recommended for collection in behalf of the Institute, and churches urged to contribute; the re-election of the following Executive committee recommended: Rev. C. A. Stillman, D. D., as Corresponding Secretary, and Rev. D. D. Sanderson, Mr. W. P. Webb, Dr. James T. Leary, Mr. Jonathan Bliss, Dr. R. D. Webb and H. M. Summerville to constitute the Executive Committee.

PRESBYTERIAN ALLIANCE.

Mr. A. M. McPheeters made the following report from the Committee on Presbyterian Alliance:

The committee appointed to nominate delegates to the Second General Council of the Presbyterian Alliance, to meet in Philadelphia on the 21st of September, 1880, respectfully report that, according to the rules adopted by the Edinburgh Council, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States is entitled to twenty-eight delegates, and the following names are reported to the Assembly:

A. M. McPheeters, Secretary.

Dr. Roberts moved that Dr. Adger's name be substituted for Dr. Lefevre.

Dr. Murkland asked that Dr. Adger's name be substituted for his own.

The report was adopted as first presented, as Dr. Adger was unwilling to have his name substituted for that of any one.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Dr. Woodrow then read the following report from the Standing Committee on Foreign Missions, which was discussed seriatim:

The Standing Committee on Foreign Missions begs leave to report that it has carefully examined the report of the Executive Committee, the report of the Treasurer, the minutes of the Executive Committee's meetings and accompanying papers, and it recommends that the diligence and fidelity of the committee in discharging the duties intrusted to it be approved. It recommends further that the following instructions be given to the Executive Committee:

First—That in all arrangements for the conduct of the work the greatest economy compatible with the highest efficiency be exercised. But we do not regard it as compatible with the highest efficiency that less than the whole time of one Secretary should be devoted to it. Furthermore, we are convinced that the Executive Committee has exercised as great economy in the foreign department of the work as is consistent with the good of the cause and the support of our missionaries. And though it may seem to some that the expenses of the committee are large when compared with the whole amount intrusted to it, yet it should be remembered that this results from the smallness of that amount, and that if the contributions received were very much larger the home expenses would be only slightly increased, and would be relatively greatly diminished.

Second—That vigorous efforts be made to extinguish the existing debt as soon as possible.

Third—That there be no further contraction of our present missions unless this should be absolutely necessary to secure the speedy extinction of the debt.

Fourth—That the Missionary be published as hitherto.

It recommends further that all the churches under our care be exhorted to contribute with increased liberality to the cause, so as to obviate the imminent danger of being compelled to abandon some part of the field, and to furnish the means needed to strengthen and extend our missions.

Also that our ministers and other officers be urged to do all in their power to increase the circulation of the Missionary among our people, in order that an intelligent interest in our foreign missionary work may be created and maintained. We still further recommend that the monthly concert of prayer for foreign missions be observed in all our churches, and that a collection be taken up at each concert meeting.

With regard to the memorial presented to the General Assembly by the Rev. J. Leighton Wilson, which was referred to this committee, it is recommended that it be published by the Executive Committee and circulated throughout the Church in such manner as it may deem best.

The Revised Book was referred to the Revision Committee, which is to prepare a revised Directory for Worship. The recommendation was made that 3,000 copies of the revised Book adopted by the Assembly be bound up with the Confession of Faith, and that the same committee be authorized to correct all errors in mechanical execution.

TRUSTEES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The Auditing Committee reported accounts correct and satisfactory. In answer to the question as to the responsibility of the Board for investment of the Relief Fund the answer was made that the sole responsibility rests on the Executive Committee of Sustentation.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

The report of Standing Committee on Sabbath Schools was taken up and discussed seriatim.

That section referring to the appointment of Superintendents, who were to have somewhat of a supervisory power over Sunday schools was discussed at length and was stricken out by order of the Assembly. The report was then adopted.

Thanks were returned to the citizens of Louisville, and to the railroad and steamboat companies.

It was moved that the Assembly adjourn sine die.

On this motion the following feeling remarks were made by

THE MODERATOR.

Brethren—I have put a good many motions since I have been honored with a seat as your presiding officer, and all the motions I have put—each of them—have been a step toward this one. And this is the only one that I am conscious, at least, of regretting to be compelled to put to the house. All other motions have been put out of a sense of duty: this motion is charged with something beside—the "dissolution" of the General Assembly! There is almost nothing that comes within the circle of our earthly experience more solemn, more calculated to impress and leave an impression. Dissolved into its elements! Which elements are never again to be gathered on earth, but yet may be, will be, regathered in Heaven; and it is in Heaven only that we shall look each other in the face as we have here done these last few pleasant days.

It has been pleasant. I have been acquainted with many General Assemblies; I have never known one more pleasant than this. I have looked over this body of influential men, and I have not yet looked upon any whom I did not regard as a thorough Christian gentleman. Your consideration for one another, your constant attitude of respect toward your presiding officer, show that it was not in vain that, at the outset of the Assembly, I cast myself upon the indulgence of my brethren. And I believe it was not in vain that your hearts and mine supplicated the Divine blessing to rest upon all our sessions and at last leave so pleasant a savor for our recollection.

I thank you, brethren, not so much for the honor you have conferred upon me, as for the kindness you have shown to me. If I have erred, it has not been because in any one instance I have ceased for any one moment to have a becoming respect for my brethren, each of whom I do esteem as better than myself. I love you all. And if I can say—as possibly in the greatness of your goodness and in the greatness of God's still greater goodness—if I can go away and say that my brethren have loved me, I will count it not as the highest honor merely of my life, but as the swetest joy. I am sure we will not forget one another wherever we go, whatever we do; and we will look back upon the scenes of this Assembly as upon scenes that brought us well nigh the borders of a better land, where a better light than that of earth has been upon our heads and a nearer arm than that of earthly love has sealed it on our hearts.

And this noble city in which we have convened, and where we have so pleasantly, aye, so luxuriantly tarried! What homes we have entered! What scenes of domestic peace we have here witnessed! What welcomes of generous, of Christian, of Christian Kentucky hospitality have we here experienced! So true is this that each commissioner, in reporting of the place of his abode to each other commissioner, has thought that his home was the best of all—so that we all had the best. And if we shall have left pleasing recollections behind, and if our prayers that have ascended from so many household altars shall return in blessings upon the heads of those who have been so kind and generous, how happy we ought to feel. But it has been a time in which we have every day had cause to thank God; and now, at the closing moment, I feel as if we ought to gather up all of these daily thanks and center them in one article of gratitude to God, that He has been so good, and that He has blessed us with such unmerited favor.

I can hardly close these desultory remarks—I ought not to close them, without referring to this particular church, and especially to him who has for so many years presided over it, who has a lodgment in the hearts of all his people and in the confidence of all this great city, and whose name is honored everywhere in all our Presbyteries and throughout our Church. I refer to the Rev. Dr. Stuart Robinson. He has given us that kind of a good old Irish welcome which only he knew how to give. We have all felt it around us like an atmosphere, and it has cheered us all day by day like a light not always visible, but always felt. Acting as your mouth-piece, I thank him for what we have here experienced. May his bow still abide in strength! May his great heart still beat to the music of the skies, and may his voice be still heard in the counsels of his Church, and in behalf of the great doctrines of our Christianity!

We must say fairly, brethren, that we have had a good deal of thunder here, but in all the air there has been no electricity. Much of the thunder—eloquence—has hurt nobody, and done a great deal of good to many!—thunder in a clear sky, with the sky still clearer higher up, that looks toward the throne of God! The best of men are but men at best. Some of us are good for nothing; but we have all ideas which have been good for something, as we have gathered together here and exchanged our voices and our counsels with one another. And the effect of what we have done will be felt to the end of time. We have enacted that which is at least of permanent history. If there be any fault to find—and in everything there is a little—it is that we have been too well fed, so that when we have come together in the afternoons, I have noticed that many of you were "too full for utterance," and that the emotions of your hearts were so profound and weighty that here and there a man whose avoirdupois was considerable went to sleep!

Again I thank you, and as your mouthpiece again I thank this good and great city, one of the most beautiful, I think in the world; and in our prayers we shall be able to thank God for all that we have here experienced, for all that we have here felt, for all that we have here done to one another, and had done to us, by those who a little while ago were strangers, but now friends and brothers and sisters all!

responded as follows:

Mr. Moderator—As you are about to dissolve, I suppose I am about as near being a member as most. I desire, as the representative of this church and the Christian people of Louisville, to say that we have been greatly delighted that now, for the second time within ten years, we have persuaded you brethren from the distant East, and South, and Southeast, to come and visit us on the border, and to say to you, compare what you saw nine years ago with what you see now around you, and you have a type of what has occurred in those nine years; compare the cause of Presbyterianism, with all its troubles and sorrows, with its present condition. We met in this lecture room in 1870. You saw what we had begun—what we had undertaken in this church. You see our churches all reorganized, and what our fight gained. It has been hinted that we have not always been amiable. You see our Presbyteries perhaps more amiable now. You found us then on the border. We have had on the border a good deal of a struggle. You men in the South didn't know anything about it. Now we have the kindliest feeling, and I am rejoiced to have you come. They talk about Presbyterianism declining. We have not declined, except in the imaginations of men. We stand in Louisville to-day greater in numbers in the Southern Church than we stood before the division, when we were altogether. We have grown, though the division cost us a large number. And, of course, we feel very happy to have our friends from distant parts of the Church to come and find us as we are. It is very pleasant, therefore, to have this visit from you, brethren.

Allow me to return our thanks, also, and to give expression to our gratitude for this meeting of the General Assembly. You, Moderator, have said that it is one of the pleasantest you ever attended. Will you allow me, as one getting on now toward old age, and having seen a great many General Assemblies, with no intent to flatter, to say that I fully concur with you in its being the most pleasant Assembly. I go further and say that it is one of the most "level-headed" General Assemblies I ever knew anything of or can remember. We always say the Assemblies we were members of were the greatest, but you will take my testimony as one who is not a member. I am obliged to bear witness of this Assembly as greatly ahead of most of the General Assemblies I have attended.

Let me say to you as we part, like your Moderator, that it is a solemn thing to come together to consider the affairs of the Church. And remember that, when the word "dissolved" is pronounced here again after spending these pleasant ten days, we shall never be gathered here again, but we shall all speedily, when the work is done, be gathered up there in the great "General Assembly of the Church of the First Born, whose names are written in heaven!"

I will take the liberty of saying to you, brethren, that I never knew a community so pleased. You say that every member thought he had got the best place. It is just so among our people. It is universally maintained by the families that they have had the pick of the delegates at their homes. So far as I have heard from the services you have rendered so kindly in all our churches, each congregation thought they had the best preachers and the best services of any rendered by the members of the Assembly. I take pleasure in saying these things—not in the way of flattery, but to make you feel that this Assembly has not had the cacoethes loquendi, of which you have heard so much in so many General Assemblies. I have heard no harangues, no spread-eagle. All was the language of men in earnest about the work of the Church. I speak this after having seen a great deal of such bodies. I am delighted to say this about you, for it is well to let men see themselves as others see them. We thank you for this meeting of the Assembly.

Before an Assembly will meet here again, many of us who are now in the harness and at work will have laid off their harness and gone to their graves. I speak not only in my own name, but particularly in the name of the Presbyteries and the Christian people of Louisville, that you depart with their highest regards and respect and best wishes for a safe return to your families. Like yourself, Mr Moderator, this motion we feel is the most objectionable we have heard in the Assembly, for we hoped you would be kept until the middle or end of next week. I am sorry to object to anything, but we hope the motion will be postponed, if not indefinitely, at least till the close of next week. I can now say in behalf of the Christian people of Louisville—I will not say Presbyterians merely, but all Christian people here (for we are all here alike impressed by the benefit the brethren have done by coming)—that you must come again. You have done great good. We on the border like to bring Assemblies among us. We like to have great Assemblies, remarkable Assemblies. I need not tell you that you have made a mark in the history of the Church in the United States in adopting the Book of Church Order and Discipline, which so truly represents our Presbyterianism—the Presbyterianism of the confession of faith. Brethren, I have longed for it the last ten or fifteen years, and I now feel that I could say Nunc, Domine, dimittis.

God bless you! I say it with all the Presbyterian churches and people of Louisville, the Christian people. Nay, Mr. Moderator, people who are not Christian as this community are interested in these things, and if they could pray at all, or with faith, they would say God bless you, and give you a safe journey home.

At the close of Dr. Robinson's remarks, the Moderator said: "Those in favor of dissolving the Assembly will say aye." The vote was unanimous.

Moderator—By virtue of the authority vested in me, let this Assembly be dissolved, and I hereby dissolve it; and by virtue of the same authority I command another General Assembly to convene at Charleston, S. C., on the third Thursday in May, 1880, at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Assembly sang "Blessed be the Tie," etc., and adjourned.

OFFICIAL REPORT.

The official reporter of the Assembly will send his verbatim report of the debates, &c., in pamphlet, for $1. Address, Rev. G. L. Wolfe, Charlottesville, Va.

The Presbyterian.

JOHN McLAURIN. - - - Editor.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4, 1879.

MR. MACRAE'S HERESY.

The Synod of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, met in Edinburgh on May 5th, and despatched much very important business. The Synod spent much time in discussing the Disestablishment question. A question which will never be remitted till disestablishment is accomplished. After some discussion, by no means sharp, on marrying a deceased wife's sister, the following resolution was adopted by a vote of 168 to 46: "That the Synod received the committee's report on returns from Presbyteries concerning the lawfulness of marriage with a deceased wife's sister; and taking into account the following considerations: (1) the liberty of opinion on this subject allowed in this church; (2) the great diversity of opinion indicated by the returns from Presbyteries as to the teaching of Scripture on the matter; and (3) the present state of the civil law in this country, the Synod, in accordance with the recommendation of the committee, agree to appoint a large committee to consider the whole question and report to next meeting of Synod."

Professor Cairns was by acclamation elected Principal of Theological Hall of Edinburgh to fill vacancy occasioned by death of Principal Harper. But by far the most important business was sprung upon the Synod by the conduct of Rev. David Macrae. The Synod had been discussing what was called the Declaratory Statement, which was, simply a revision of the Westminster Confession of Faith as reported by the Committee. Matters moved on smoothly and articles were adopted with little or no dissent until the seventh article was reached, when Rev. David Macrae said: There is a reference to the seventh article in it, which I propose to drop. It is, "Whereas the proposed Declaratory Act leaves the Church bound to identify the Scriptural doctrine of future punishment with the Westminster dogma of everlasting and unspeakable torment, move that the following article be introduced as No. 8, viz.: 'That in regard to the ultimate penalty of sin the Church does not bind herself to the Westminster interpretation of what the Scriptures say on the subject.'"

The proposition was seconded at the time, though after the speech of the mover and others the second was withdrawn.

Mr. Macrae made a speech of remarkable skill in which he set forth as his main point of opposition to the standards, that while the Scriptures teach that there is everlasting life for the good they nowhere refer to everlasting punishment for the evil. * * * *

Such words as "everlasting" and "for ever" are not used to express duration absolutely but relatively to the thing of which it is predicated." * * * * * * *

"When it is said that a servant in certain circumstances was to have his ear bored and to serve his master for ever, it meant during his life time, which might last for twenty years, or might terminate in two, or might, if there came sudden death, terminate in an hour. In one passage the hills are called "everlasting." Yet another passage tells us that they are to be burnt up and to vanish away. For ever" and "everlasting" must, therefore, be interpreted according to the nature and purpose of the thing to which the word is applied.

Prof. Calderwood and Dr. John Ker replied. The speech of the latter we give in full because so fine an agreement on the general subject.

Dr. John Ker said: I rise to second the motion made by Professor Calderwood in reference to this proposal of Mr. Macrae, and in doing so I must express the feeling which Dr. Calderwood has already so well done of the deep pain with which I have listened to Mr. Macrae's address. It has arisen from the fact that the question has either not been touched or touched in a way that has harrowed the feelings of those who are sitting here, with whom there should have been some sympathy, some ability to understand the view we take of this subject, which is poles asunder from that represented by Mr. Macrae. It is this inability to understand the minds of his brethren which leads, I believe, to such hard thoughts about them, and such hard words as "Jesuitical" and others applied to them. Our view of the punishment of sin is not that of a mere outward infliction of a dogma of torment and torture which he persists in forcing upon us. We believe that the deepest punishment of all lies in the sin itself, and in the consequences which it must bring under the government of a just and holy God. And that punishment is not an arbitrary outside infliction for an eternity on account of some offences committed within a brief time. It accompanies the sin all through and must accompany it while the sinner sins on. The real question is, will the sinner sin on? And looking at it in this way, sin gives tokens when persisted in of becoming a fixed part of the nature, showing no sign of opening to a higher life, but deepening and darkening till the man becomes, as the Bible says, "Twice dead plucked up by the roots." So we lose sight of it in the human point of view with a dark and terrible shadow which it casts into the future. I shall not stop to argue about the precise meaning of the words "everlasting" and "eternal," the force of which was sought to be weakened. It was surely very evident how these words were played with. When a slave is spoken of as a slave "for ever" it is as long as the slave lives. When we read of the "everlasting mountains it is surely meant as long as the earth which sustains the mountains continues to exist. The attribute is as long as the subject spoken of. And when "everlasting," "eternal" is applied to what concerns an immortal soul, what does it mean? But more than this, I confess I am impressed by the whole strain of the way in which the future, and the influence of the present on the future, is spoken in the Bible of the all-important crisis of the present life. The pressure of the whole of the New Testament and of the words of the Lord Jesus Christ is something from which I cannot free my spirit if I wished it. What means his weeping to agony over lost Jerusalem—"O that thou hadst known in this thy day!" and His words, "Good were it for that man that he had never been born." It is in this way that the Apostles preach, "We beseech you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled." "Knowing therefore the terrors of the Lord, we persuade men;" "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation? Shall we be helped to preach in this way by giving up the conviction of a momentous, all-important now? The whole preaching of the New Testament carries us to the conviction that sin casts its deep, terrible shadows into an eternal darkness, a second death, and we shall have to adopt an entirely different kind of preaching if we take another view. Universalism will give us another gospel which is not another—a gospel which may find some room in sentiment, but will fail in reaching and rousing the conscience. The natural conscience itself bears testimony to something terrible in the character of sin, and the gospel of the New Testament preachers meets it. We have to consider, moreover, the history of these views. They do not long stand there. Wherever you trace them—I do not say always in individuals, but in communities, and for any length of time—they go further. Look at the history of Churches going on to Universalism on the Continent of Europe, in America, among the old Presbyterians of England; it has never stopped there. It has gone on to Unitarianism or blank, bare Naturalism, and the road is easily understood. Universalism brings with it easier and lighter views of sin, and so the positive element in the Atonement is weakened. If the Atonement is weakend the necessity for the mission of the Son of God is taken away, and the dignity of His person falls, and salvation, if we keep the name, is a thing to be wrought out by man's own effort. This has been over and over again the downward history. We have been told that our views as a Church are against the progress of the gospel. How have we come thus far? Are the Churches in Germany, where Universalism prevails, crowded to overflowing, and is Christianity pervading the masses of the people? Are the Unitarians, who hold this view, so very numerous and prosperous, and the preachers who proclaim it, do they reclaim the multitudes? We have been told, also, that men who hold the view of a cruel God, as we do, must become like Him, and that the human character is debased by it; and in the same statement Samuel Rutherford and Jonathan Edwards had some of their hardest words quoted against them. Even to take it so, did their characters justify this? Would that all of us, or any of us, had that love to man which they had, that self-devoted zeal which they had to live, and labour, and die for the good of men! Those views make the evil of sin very dark, but they brighten the view of the love of God, of what He has done and is doing to save men, if they will be saved. We shall not limit Him in His ways here and now, but we must press them here and now, on all whom we can reach, and when we think of the terrible danger and infinite loss from which He saves through the gospel of His grace the song will have a deeper meaning, "Unto Him who loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood."

Mr. Macrae explaining that the word "jesuitical" was used on a former occasion reiterated the expression and declared it was used because expressing his meaning most happily. The term was objected to, and the Moderator requested that the term be withdrawn. After a long discussion engaged in by members, Mr. Macrae having declared he could not withdraw the expression, the Moderator in response to a vote of the Synod, called him to the front and formally censured him.

A committee appointed to confer with Mr. Macrae with regard to his speech and to report to Synod, sat fourteen hours, working diligently and endeavoring to deal fairly with Mr. Macrae. They at last reported as follows:

After three protracted meetings with Mr. Macrae, and full and frank conference with him, the committee are grieved to find he still adheres to the views expressed in his speech before the Synod in reference to which this committee was appointed. The committee find these views are irreconcilable with the teaching of Scripture as exhibited in the Standards of our Church, and with any reasonable amount of liberty that can be allowed to ministers of this Church in relation to its Standards. The committee therefore feel themselves shut up to recommend the Synod to suspend Mr. Macrae from the exercise of his ministry, and to appoint a commission to deal with him, with powers to issue the case as they shall see cause, and to report to next meeting of Synod.

The report was debated long and earnestly, not on account of any sympathy with Mr. Macrae, but in regard to the mode of procedure in his trial, and from sympathy for him personally.

A motion was made to remit the case to Greenock Presbytery, of which Mr. Macrae is a member, but different members declared that in the interest of Mr. Macrae himself that should not be done, as frequent collisions had already been had with him.

Finally a motion was presented "That this Synod appoint a commission to deal judicially with Mr. Macrae, with powers to issue the case, reserving the right of appeal to Mr. Macrae and members of the Commission, and to report to next meeting of Synod or to an in tunc effectum meeting of Synod, should they deem it expedient to call it."

Inasmuch as the word judicial implied suspension, an amendment was adopted substituting the phrase "to deal with Mr. Macrae with Presbyterial powers," to proceed in the case as they see cause, &c., leaving out the word judicially. The motion was then unanimously agreed to.

We have given the details of this case at some length because just such cases are sometimes referred to, not as indicating heresy of individuals who throw them out, but of the Church to which such persons belong. Not one word of sympathy was expressed by any member of Synod for the views of Mr. Macrae, though first to last there was a reluctance to apply the proper judicial penalty. In any American Presbyterian Church such views openly promulgated would have led to the prompt suspension of the party offending, but our Scotch friends move deliberately, but surely; Rev. David Macrae will, however, have a few months more in which, within the pale of the United Presbyterian Church, nominally under its authority, to spread broadcast this pestilent heresy. The speeches and answers of Mr. Macrae were adroit and skilful, and elicited applause from the galleries, to the occupants of which indeed, as much perhaps as to the Synod, they were addressed.

The gentleman who has made so great a stir is known in this country, in North Carolina perhaps particularly, as quite a young man of very fine abilities. He is very probably conscientious in the views he holds, though a desire for notoriety must be allowed as a very strong element in his character. Otherwise, that is not supposing a wish to be notorious, it is inexplicable how a man of honor could remain within the fold of a Church, and in the position of a believer in, and an exponent of the views of that Church, while holding views the most adverse to its standards.

We should regard such procedure as that adopted toward Mr. Macrae, if pursued by any Synod in this country as decidedly irregular. The case should, from our point of view, be issued in the Presbytery and come before the Synod by appeal or review.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

We give our readers the last of the General in this issue. On the whole this court of our Church may be said to have been distinguished by its close attention to its business. It was full of deeds, and although an occasional extra and unnecessary word must be allowed to have got off, there was no great waste of the article. An extraordinary number of overtures went to the proper committee, and came back with answers so formulated as in general to appeal directly to the common sense of the Assembly and to be adopted without discussion. The overture on dancing brought in an answer defining the powers and prerogatives of the Assembly, and was just the thing wanted by our Church. The capital sense of the Standing Committee on Publication, and of the entire body, saved a very unpleasant and unnecessary discussion on the overture from the Presbytery of the Western District, relative to the Executive Committee of Publication.

The reports on Foreign Missions and on Sustentation, Sabbath schools and on Education were such as to commend these causes, and Tuskaloosa Institute seemed to be in better favor than at last Assembly.

We feel proud of our Assembly and look back upon its work with pleasure.

THE HIGHER LIFE.

The Believers Hand-Book. On holiness; showing how to enter and how to dwell in the Canaan of Perfect Love. By Rev. E. Davies, Reading, Mass. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 40 cents.

This little book consists of eight chapters, giving the outlines of a series of sermons on the "Higher Life" theory, or doctrine of Holiness. It is devoutly written and contains many pious and profitable reflections joined to apt quotations of the Scriptures. It is a good book for any who wish a compendious and pleasant statement of this doctrine of Perfectionism, in a more moderate phase than the Oberlin theory. The theory itself is full of crudities and unsound interpretations of God's word. Sanctification seems to take the place at times of regeneration. The "act of consecration" is the grand channel for the "blessing," as perfect sanctification is called by this school of the prophets. Self is substantially constituted judge, jury and witness, and to believe that we believe; to have faith in an act of faith as the grand transferring power, is essential to being pure from all sin, and to entering into peace. This is the "short-cut" to the Delectable Land of Holiness, without the old-fashioned struggle that Christians have believed the Bible marked out. In this State of "blessing" we may violate the moral law, "yet, in Spirit keep it;" page 23. The author doubts whether that portion of the Church that do not "go on to perfection" before they die, will go on to heaven afterwards, page 31. On page 47 he tells how he completed his "act of consecration," and on a "Sacred Friday" resolutely continued in prayer until 11 P. M., "when the heavenly blessing came, and the direct witness of the Spirit, that he was fully saved." Other "well-meaning, but luke-warm professors," "weak brethren," who oppose this doctrine, he feels a love for and "will by no means cast them away." But alas! this perfect purity, "blessing," sanctification, with which God fills the soul, may be lost! Really the doctrine does not bring much comfort, or in any sense present an attractive substitute for the scriptural doctrine of sanctification. But the book is inexpensive and will give light to those not versed in this literature.

THE MODERATOR.

The Louisville Courier-Journal has this to say of the Moderator of the late General Assembly:

Rev. Dr. Joseph R. Wilson, the Moderator of the Presbyterian Assembly just dissolved, won laurels as a presiding officer. His large experience and thorough knowledge of all the practices and rules of General Assemblies enabled him to get through with business with wonderful facility. His rulings were prompt and were always decided in his favor, and the sting was taking from them by that inexhaustible fund of rich humor which was cropping out on all proper occasions. Dr. Wilson is in the prime of life and full of physical and intellectual vigor. He has barely turned the shady side of his half-century, although our reporter some days ago put his age at sixty-five years—no doubt supposing, from the dignity and promptness and efficiency with which he presided, that he had been engaged in such duties for quite forty or fifty years. He made friends and admirers of all who met him here, and he carries with him to his home the high regard and most cordial wishes of our people.

NEWS NOTES.

Rev. J. P. McPherson, on a visit to relatives, preached at St. Paul's on May 25th, ultimo.

Rev. W. E. McIlwain assisted Rev. R. A. Miller at the communion season of Monroe church at Sabbath last.

Rev. W. R. McLelland of Tyler, Texas, formerly of Iredell county, N. C., was married on 27th ult. to Miss L. J. Field of Warren county, N. C.

On last Sabbath two persons were received upon examination and two by certificate, into communion with Second Presbyterian church of Raleigh, of which Rev. Joseph M. Atkinson is pastor. Other accessions are confidently hoped for very soon.

The final examinations of the senior class at Davidson College closed on Friday, May 23d. The first distinction with the Valedictory was assigned to F. P. Ramsay of Alabama; the second distinction with the Salutatory to B. P. Reid of South Carolina; the third distinction with the Philosophical Oration to D. A. McGregor of North Carolina.

A writer to the Robesonian from St. Paul's says:

"A prayer meeting for several years past has been held weekly (on Wednesday nights) by Rev. Jos. Evans and others in the vicinity of his residence. Besides prayers, singing and exhortations, there are reading exercises, lessons to be recited, hymns to be repeated, &c. The writer regrets that he is not sufficiently acquainted with these exercises to give an account of them, and will only say that they are regarded by those who hear them as being fresh, varied and entertaining, and in the highest degree instructive. Close observers can notice that persons naturally headstrong, passionate, intemperate, or otherwise vicious, are always restrained more or less by the influence of those who attend prayer meetings and associate with them."

CRAB TREE, Haywood county, N. C., May 27.—Dear Bro.: I preached in Waynesville last Saturday, which was my regular appointment there, and had the pleasure of receiving three persons into our little church, one by certificate and two by examination. Two of them, a young man and his wife, also presented their two little children to the Lord in baptism.

Three years ago this little church was organized with eight members; now we have nineteen on our roll. There are others who are thinking of uniting with us, and I hope in the near future will cast their lot with us.

I also preached at Bethel, a small church. Next Sabbath will be our communion meeting there, the meeting beginning the day before. A short time ago two were received into this little church. Yours, in Christian affection, D. T. T.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

You do not feel assured of your personal salvation, and you regard this non-assurance as a mark of humility. Let us see. If you believe in the Lord Jesus Christ you are saved. He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life. John vi: 47. Christ says it, and to doubt His word is not humility. But your doubt is probably as to your believing. Certainly a doubt here does not indicate humility. It is your privilege—it is your duty to believe—and no Scripture, either by direct expression or by inference, justifies doubt on so vital a question. Do not rest until you are assured that you do believe in Christ. Place before yourself fearlessly a case, not of what may be, but what is, required of you in your daily duties; a case where pleasure, or any natural inclination, directly calls you to that which Christ disapproves, and ask yourself do you turn from it at any sacrifice to do His will—do you? Do you this willingly, cheerfully, gladly, for Christ sake? The unbelieving heart never leads to sacrifice for Christ. Do you love those who love Christ, because they love Him? No unbeliever does that. If you believe in Him you wrong yourself, you wrong Him, in not taking Him at His word, in not trusting Him, in not knowing that you are saved, not for what you have done, but because He has saved you. Settle this matter for your own peace of mind, and because knowing and realizing the infinity of His love for you, you can, you will, more loyally serve Him. Settle this matter that your energies of body, of mind, of soul, may not be tied to self, and concern for your own salvation, but may be directed henceforth to His loving service. Know that you are His—that He is yours, and then the command to you is no longer "Do this and live," but "Live and do this," even whatsoever He commands you.

Editor N. C. Presbyterian:—Dear Sir: Please acknowledge through the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN our having received $6 31 from friends in Goldsboro, through Rev. B. F. Marable, for which we return our sincere thanks. MRS. S. M. NADAL, Sec. Wilson Presbyterian Aid Society.

Egypt and all that pertains to its history, either ancient or modern, is matter of special interest, and we esteem ourselves to have been most fortunate in having heard the recent lecture of Gen. R. E. Colston, for six years Bey in the service, and on the general staff of the Khedive. The lecture was delivered a few days since in Wilmington, and was very thoroughly appreciated and enjoyed by those who heard it. The lecturer, an accomplished instructor, aided by the photographs he had procured, or drawings he had made on the spot, set forth various objects of interest and related many personal incidents, accompanied with sketches of individual character, so as to bring them vividly before his audience, and impress them in a manner, without these accessories not possible. The Khedive was represented, no doubt justly, as a man of distinguished abilities, not possessing indeed the genius of his father, but far excelling him in humanity and in general information. In comparison with reigning European potentates the lecturer placed Ismail Pasha as superior to three-fourths in administrative ability, and immeasurably superior to any Oriental ruler. An earnest desire to promote the welfare of his country characterized his rule and led to the extravagant outlays which resulted in his financial ruin. His honesty of purpose with regard to the payment of debts too wantonly incurred, led to the surrendering of his affairs to European Commissioners, who with no aim beyond securing payment of the indebtedness to bondholders, pursued a policy utterly ruinous to the country, and disastrously oppressive to the people, and the Khedive reasserting his authority deprived them of their power. So the matter stands. Neither England nor France will, nor of right ought to interpose to fasten upon the country those who can only rule by enslaving the people and reducing them to abject wretchedness.

Space does not permit our giving even a synopsis of this lecture, as presenting and describing the people, their manners and customs, their works of art, and the topographical features.

We are not advised that General Colston will deliver this lecture, or others for which he is prepared, elsewhere, but should he do so we commend him to those who would enjoy one of the richest of intellectual entertainments.

A MODEL SCHOOL.

Long acquaintance with its merits enables me to give this honorable appellation to the Finley High School, Lenoir, N. C. I regard it as one of the best—if not the best—in the South. This high character has been won for it by that remarkable educator of youth, E. W. Fancetto, Esq., and his accomplished associates. In this superficial age, this age of sham, and trumpet-blowing, it is refreshing to find a school that is resolved to stand upon its merits only, whose aim is thoroughness, the laying of a solid foundation, the assiduous culture of the moral as well as the intellectual man.

The society of Lenoir is most excellent and fewer temptations to students exist there than in any other town I know of. North Carolina has reason to be proud of Finley High School. A. W. M.

NOTES FROM LOUISVILLE, KY.

Traveling nearly one thousand miles to attend the General Assembly is certainly no trifle, and does need resolution and perseverance.

We went via Washington, D. C., and attended church there, having selected Rev. Dr. Pitzer's as the one in which we considered it our duty to worship. We had a good old fashioned orthodox discourse, and met also many of Dr. W.'s Southern friends, who seemed greatly delighted to shake hands with him. Next day we took the Baltimore and Ohio railroad cars for Cincinnati. This road is made up of short curves. You see no part straight for any distance, consequently unless you gird yourself up very tight you get to be very much "jumbled" and nauseated. We very much prefer the Chesapeake and Ohio road, by which we returned towards home. Yet, in coming down through the mountains of Virginia, you get "bumped" up and down at a great rate, and although you may have a Pullman to travel in you can hardly be a "sleeper" yourself.

On getting to Cincinnati, after twenty-four hours' running, we take the boat for Louisville, and here we are in the chief city of Kentucky, and a beautiful city it is! Magnificent streets, splendid dwellings, very fine private carriages carrying fashionable ladies and gentlemen, busy thoroughfares filled with merchants and their merchandize, tobacco hogsheads with the weed in all shapes, suited for the tastes of all nations, savage and civilized. This is a city of churches; they are unusually numerous for the population of 150,000, and really, as an old friend of the generation now passed said of the good folks of Wilmington, "they want to do right." Louisville is blessed with an unlimited supply of water from the Ohio, with which they sprinkle the flower beds and grass patches that every dwelling of any pretension is sure to have, and about sundown it is delightful to pass by and see whole families enjoying the cool of the evening without the trouble of going out any distance to secure such comfort.

But our business is with the General Assembly and its members. So to that subject I must address myself as briefly as may be.

The sermon, on the opening of this venerable court, was delivered by the Moderator of 1878, the Rev. Dr. T. E. Peck of Hampden-Sydney, Va. Many of your readers, if not all of them, have for themselves judged of its merits. All expect much from Dr. Peck, and he is not a man to disappoint them. This is saying much, seeing we are no flatterer.

The next business after the roll call was the election of a Moderator for this General Assembly. The choice was almost absolutely unanimous of Rev. J. R. Wilson, D. D., and a noble Moderator he was! The Rules, Forms and mode of conducting this ecclesiastical body he has long been familiar with, and therefore Dr. Wilson was at home in the chair. The Moderator was sustained by the Assembly in every one of his decisions, and appeals were taken in only two instances, I think. There is a great deal in human good nature, combined with grace, for disarming antagonism, and in this faculty and gift Dr. W. excels.

The impression derived by a beholder of the Assembly in session is that it is manifestly strong in intelligence, godliness and wisdom. The utmost care is given to everything that comes before them. Nothing is hurried over without due consideration; not the least impatience is manifested under even patience-trying circumstances. In short the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in these States is the most dignified, just and devout tribunal, we know of, in existence. That is our candid belief.

One of the most admirably constructed papers ever emitted by any Presbyterian General Assembly was that brought up by the chairman of the Committee on Bills and Overtures, Rev. Dr. T. E. Peck, on popular amusements and dancing. The two senses implied in the word "discipline," viz: first, judicial process, and second, private admonition, commended itself to the mind of the whole Assembly, and the paper was adopted at once, with very little discussion. The reports and addresses on Foreign and Home Missions, Publication, Education and Sabbath schools, were admirable, interesting and weighty.

The speech of the Moderator, at the close of the business of this court, was very solemn. No doubt you will furnish it separately to your readers with the speech of that noble old minister, Dr. Stuart Robinson.

The Assembly, after singing the hymn, "Blessed be the tie that binds," was then dissolved into its original elements, never to meet again in this world, but to be followed next year by another General Assembly elected in the prescribed manner, nearly all the members of which will be other men.

Thanks were cordially voted to the worthy friends of Louisville whose hospitality was unbounded, and who made our stay in their beautiful city so pleasant. It was good for us to be there. It was the house of God—the gate of Heaven, S.

BABY POUNDED.

The universal cry of hard times is constantly heard all around. Short crops, combined with short prices, necessarily make money very scarce. But amid these hard times how encouraging to know that an appreciative people are not forgetful of the wants and comforts of their hard worked pastor and family. Under such circumstances it is indeed pleasant and refreshing to be kindly treated, and and as pleasant to let people know that we appreciate their kindness. On last Friday the pastor of Pineville church was unexpectedly, though in a manner that evidently betrayed an anxious desire on the part of the part of the parties concerned, invited with his little family to dine at the house of an efficient deacon. And contrary to most invitations to dine there was a special request that the "baby" should be present. After the inner man was sumptuously supplied with both the substantials and dainties of life, the streets were soon alive with the fair representatives of Presbyterianism, wending their way to the deacon's. We were soon apprised of the object of their mission, when the little fellow was unceremoniously seized from the arms of his doting mother and amid much infantile resistance, borne off to another apartment, from whence he was soon returned to her fond embrace, cosily seated in a fine "baby carriage," purchased by the ladies for this special occasion. And now, when robed in his nice new dress, made and presented by these same fair hands, and seated in his little carriage, no one can imagine the unalloyed joy and pleasure which the little fellow seems to experience. And not only is it enjoyed by him, but his overworked mother can truly appreciate the kindness when she feels her burdens so much lightened. This severe pounding was given confessedly as a token of appreciation for both their pastor and his family, and they would thus publicly return their heartfelt thanks for the kindness and attention thus so greatfully bestowed on them, and may the Lord always give us grace to appreciate such kindness, and constantly crown the liberal donors with his richest spiritual blessings. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Friends of Rev. J. W. Lupton, of Clarkville, Tenn., have presented him with a gold watch.

Rev. S. R. Preston expects to enter upon his labors as pastor of Blackburg church, Va., on first Sabbath in July.

Rev. W. B. Y. Wilkie has received a unanimous call to become the pastor of the church at Sedalia, Mo.

Rev. Dr. Jacob Henry Smith, of Greensboro, N. C., will deliver the commencement address in June, before Farmville College in Virginia.

The postoffice address of Rev. R. S. Burwell has been changed from Dido, Texas, to Denton, Denton county, in the same State. No change in his field of labor.

At a recent meeting at Pleasant Grove church, Ky., Rev. Harry Keigwin of the Northern Church assisted Rev. Miles Saunders. The church was greatly revived, and sixteen persons were received on profession.

The First Presbyterian church, Paris, Texas, has called Rev. J. Dewitt Burkhead to the pastorate. He is now pastor of the Presbyterian church in Huntsville, Alabama, and has accepted the call.

Last Sunday afternoon, 25th ult., Rev. K. W. Bedinger was installed pastor of the church at Anchorage, Ky. Rev. E. O. Guerrant presided and preached, Rev. S. W. Blain gave the charge to the pastor, and Rev. T. E. Converse the charge to the people.—Christian Observer.

On Friday, June 6th, Rev. C. S. M. See will be installed pastor of Monterey church. Rev. Mr. Preston will preside, propound the constitutional questions, and deliver the charge to the pastor, and Rev. A. F. Laird will deliver the charge to the people.

At a session of Louisville Presbytery held on May 23d, Rev. J. K. Hitner returned the letter of dismission he had received to Ebenezer Presbytery. J. B. Wasson, of West Lexington Presbytery, and E. T. Hoke, of Dallas Presbytery, were enrolled as licentates. Mr. W. T. Davis was examined and received as a candidate for the ministry.

The Rev. John Rule has just closed an interesting meeting conducted at the two preaching points in his congregation, at Goshen, Ky., and which was in continuance about five weeks. At different stages of the meeting he shared the assistance of Rev. Messrs. T. E. Converse, R. O. Guerrant, J. J. Cooke, J. H. Moore and E. W. Bedinger, doing himself a large part of the preaching. The result has been that the church has been much revived and encouraged, and has had ten additions to its number, nine on profession and one by letter.—Christian Observer.

Rev. Joseph R. Wilson, D. D., of Wilmington, N. C., whom Rev. W. E. Baker succeeded as pastor of the Presbyterian church here, will preach there Sunday morning and night, June 22d, the sermon at night being the commencement sermon of the Augusta Female Seminary.

At the First Presbyterian church Sunday morning, fifteen members were added to the congregation on profession, and six on certificate.—Staunton Vindicator, May.

Rev. George T. Goetchius, pastor of the Presbyterian church in this city, has received a call to the pastorate of the Second Presbyterian church in Augusta. The Presbytery of Augusta will meet in a few days to decide the matter. It will be a source of much satisfaction to both church and congregation if Mr. Goetchius is permitted to remain in his present sphere of usefulness. Mr. Goetchius is deservedly popular with all classes and all denominations of Christians in the city, and his transfer to Augusta would be the cause of unfeigned regret, on their part at least.—Milledgeville (Ga.) Union and Recorder.

On Sunday, May 18th, a colored Presbyterian church was organized in Lynchburg, Va. Rev. J. M. Rawlings opened the exercises and preached a sermon, after which Rev. Dr. W. T. Hall stated that a petition from a number of colored people had sent to Montgomery Presbytery asking to be organized into a Presbyterian church, and that the petition had been favorably considered, and a committee appointed to constitute the church at the present time and place. The petition was signed by three men and four women. Five who were present were examined as to their religious experience, and were received by the committee into the communion of the Presbyterian church. They were then required to enter into covenant to live together in the fellowship of the gospel. By a vote of the members thus received, Z. A. Langley and W. T. B. Ellis were elected ruling elders, and W. R. Harrison deacon. These persons having signified their acceptance to these offices, they were ordained and installed by the laying on of hands of the Presbytery and by prayer; after which Dr. Hall delivered to them a solemn charge with reference to the nature and duties of their offices, and one to the newly organized church. With the close of these exercises it was declared that the church was duly organized after the order of the Presbyterian church.

The communion of the Lord's Supper was then administered, at the request of Rev. L. R. Johnson, (pastor) by Rev. Mr. Henry, colored Presbyterian minister of Amelia county.—Condensed from Lynchburg News.

GENERAL.

The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Virginia will celebrate its semi-centennial in the Lutheran church in Woodstock next August. This Synod was organized there August 10th and 11th, 1829. The convention will begin its sessions on the 25th of August prox.—Staunton Vindicator.

The Baptist General Association of Virginia is in session at Charlottesville, Va. It represents 60,000 white communicants. It is simply a body for conference and possesses no legislative powers, and each church can send a delegate for every $25 contributed to the benevolent objects of the Association—State Missions, Foreign Mission, Home and Indian Mission, Education Board, Sunday School and Bible Board and the Ministerial Relief Fund. Among the distinguished delegates to the Association are Attorney General Field and Rev. Geo. B. Taylor, Missionary to Rome.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. W. D. Snodgrass, over 80 years of age, was the oldest member of the late Northern Assembly.

A debt of $3,500 on their beautiful new church was raised by the congregation of the Presbyterian church of Bath, N. Y., recently.

There is a project on foot in Cincinnati to publish a new Presbyterian Review. A fund is to be raised sufficient to run on until the subscriptions shall give a support. The names of Rev. Dr. T. H. Skinner, E. P. Humphrey, N. West, F. L. Patton, Jonathan Edwards, S. J. Baird, of Richmond, Va., and others, are mentioned as conductors.—Presbyterian Journal.

METHODIST.

The Methodists of Newark, Ohio, are making vigorous efforts to save their fine church from being sold. There is a debt of $8,000 which must be raised before July.

LUTHERAN.

A new Lutheran church has recently been dedicated in Frostburg, Md.; also one at Lionville, Chester county, Pa. Both belong to the German Synod.

REFORMED (DUTCH.)

Professor E. B. Coe, of Yale College, has been called to the Collegiate Reformed church, New York, at a salary of $8,000. He has been preaching only a year.

Judge Packer, by his last will, bequeaths $30,000 to Muhlenburg College at Allentown, Pa., to found a professorship.

BAPTIST.

On Sunday, April 27th, the Rev. J. P. Hinkley, of the Methodist Protestant denomination, presented himself for baptism and membership in the Baptist church at Greenville, Ohio.

There are suspicions at North Adams, Mass., that the burning of the Baptist church was the work of an incendiary in retaliation for the church's prominence in opposing the granting of liquor licenses in that town.

CONGREGATIONAL.

It was at the Asylum Hill Cong. Church, Hartford, recently that Wong Shing, a Chinese, in full Chinese dress—a pig tail, cork shoes, cape, etc.,—officiated as deacon at the communion service. He was educated at Monson, Mass., at Dr. Brown's school. He was converted there, and in China joined a Christian church, and was a deacon of it for many years.

A church of twenty-one members was organized at Trenton, Mo., on April 21st. This movement is under the leadership of Rev. J. W. Crawford, formerley pastor of the Presbyterian church in Trenton, who has joined the Congregational Association, and now brings a large part of his flock with him.

EPISCOPAL.

The Rev. Dr. Parker, of Elizabeth, N. J., has been unanimously chosen president of Racine, Wis., College, to succeed the late Rev. Dr. De Koven.

Holy Trinity church, New York city, has built two churches, three chapels and a rectory, besides making numerous contributions to the building funds of other churches. There have been 1,289 persons baptized, and 1,866 have been confirmed. The church has raised in all $1,117,000 of which $369,300 have been given away. Several missions are sustained by the church.

GENERAL.

A striking illustration of the essential unity of Evangelical believers, notwithstanding minor denominational differences, was manifested in Philadelphia in connection with the special inaugural services of the Messiah Lutheran Church. Sermons were preached on different evenings by Revs. P. S. Henson, Baptist; Richard D. Allen, D. D., Presbyterian, and A. Rittenhouse, Methodist Episcopal. Each discourse was full of Christ and his salvation as the only hope of a fallen world.

The crypt under the Centre Church, on New Haven (Conn.) Green, has recently been repaired. There are 170 slabs in it and thirteen tablets. The oldest legible inscription is "Mrs. Sarah Rutherford Trowbridge, wife of Thomas Trowbridge," who died in 1687. The slab which bears the name of Mrs. Rebecca Hayes, great-great grandmother of President Hayes, is well preserved. In the crypt are also the remains of Mrs. Margaret, the first wife of Benedict Arnold, who died in 1775, before her husband's treason.

Messrs. Yeargan, Petty & Jones enjoy a reputation for furnishing the very best of goods at prices as low as can be obtained within the State, of North Carolina or beyond it. We trust our friends will give them hearty patronage.

SECULAR NEWS.

We regret to learn that a telegram has been received here announcing the death at Fayetteville, on Thursday night last, of Mrs. Yates, the aged mother of Mr. W. J. Yates, of the Charlotte Democrat, and Rev. E. A. Yates, Pastor of the Front Street M. E. Church, of this city.—Wilmington Star.

Yesterday a mandamus was served on Col. William L. Saunders, Secretary of State, by the State on relation of Thomas L. Kenan, Esq., Attorney General, and J. C. Scarboro, Esq., Superintendent of Public Instruction. The object of the mandamus is to require the Secretary of State to incorporate the school bill, as passed by the last General Assembly, among the laws of 1879.—Raleigh News.

Of the North Carolina Fish Culture Association, the following were chosen officers: Dr. James McKee, President, Col. Paul F. Faison, Vice President and Dr. R. H. Lewis Secretary and Treasurer. Gov. Jarvis, Col. J. McLeod Turner and Fish Commissioner Worth were elected as honorary members.

We think Mr. John M. Rose, of Fayetteville has a record of the North Carolinians who served in the war of 1812, having copied it from the Official Records long before the Confederate war. We know Mr. Rose to be reliable in every way, and if pensioners will write to him they can have their business well attended to. We think he can do more towards securing pensions than any man in the State, for we have been able to get more information from him than from any other source. Mr. Rose also has a record of the Mexican soldiers.—Charlotte Democrat: We have the printed pamphlet giving the roster, etc., of all Mexican soldiers from the South —Farmer and Mechanic.

Judge Faircloth has been appointed Receiver of the Goldsboro Building and Loan Association. —Messenger.

Geo K. Tate of the firm of Tate Bro's, of Mountain Island, Gaston County, has gone North to buy additional looms for their factory, the present number not being suffient to supply all the plaids they can sell. We are gratified at this evidence of prosperity.—Southern Home.

In Richmond county, on the 26th of April, Miss JANE WILKINSON departed this life in the 77th year of her age.

She was for a long while in delicate health, but some weeks previous to her dissolution she was stricken with paralysis which we suppose was the final cause of her death. She was for many years a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church and when the summons came it found her not only ready, but anxious to go; feeling that to depart and be with Jesus was far better. Thus in little over a year, four members of this family have passed from their labors on earth to their glorious reward in heaven; all having reached a good old age. Last February a year ago, a married sister Mrs. Campbell, died in the 85th year of her age. In November following Miss Christian, the oldest member of the family died in the 88th year of her age. In January a brother (Jno. Wilkinson, of Miss.) the youngest member of this family died at the age of 72, and in April following the subject of this notice as stated above, in her 77th year. So far as known two still survive; the younger of whom if spared for a few more days will enter upon her 80th year. Such longevity in one family is certainly remarkable.

PASSED OVER TO THE OTHER SIDE.

There is another side to our existence—a different state—a better life. The call of the Saviour, like his invitation to his disciples on the shores of the sea of Gallilee, is to the other side. When that call is heard and obeyed, the earnest disciple makes a careful observation, takes his course, cuts loose from his moorings, and tries to keep his windows open towards that better land. Still he finds it hard to start, and often loiters along the coast, slow to cut off all the shore lines that hold him to this side—hard it is to bid farewell to familiar pleasant associations. And when he gets off from the shore on the deep quiet waters, with favorable winds and a smooth surface, he is apt to become careless and forgetful of his Captain's orders, till he reaches the horrors of the middle-passage; he can't go back—he sees not the other shore—the waters are deep and stormy—the night is dark—his vessel is weak—his courage fails - he cries: "Save Lord, or I perish."

A bright happy companion on the voyage may get ahead and pass the storm-belts and reach the other shore, while the dear ones are left behind in the deep waters and the dark night. Then comes the bitter lamentation: "I have seen better days"—when attended, caressed and cheered by the noble cultured happy companions, who have gone before. Oh how he is prone to depend on those rather than on Him who gave them! But the best days after all, he learns by-and-by, are those in which he was lashed to the Rock that is higher than he, and clings to it with the firm belief that if he ever reaches the other side, it will be by this higher power.

These reflections are illustrated by the circumstances attending the death of Mrs. LUCY M. R. TIDDY, near Lincolnton on the 15th of May, 1879, aged 36 years.

In early life she enrolled her name with the followers and friends of Christ, and was a cheerful, happy, helpful member. She was often away from the quiet home of her childhood and was loved and remembered tenderly in many circles where she taught and served. In the summer of 1878 she returned home and was married to Mr. William Tiddy. She was a most happy bride and wife, and moved like a ray of light in a home that reflected so much of her bright and lovely character—assisting her husband and others in a Mission Sunday School, with all the fervor of her spirit.

Eleven months a wife, one month a mother—then the sudden shock, the congestive chill—and she passed on before—her light went out, her voice was silent, and all that was left was her precious memory, her babe, her grave.

How lonely, how distressed are many fond hearts, and how natural for them to say over this unstrung harp, this shattered vase of ointment, "To what purpose this waste!"

It is to lead to the Rock that is higher.

Fathers, brothers, sisters, husband! She has reached the other side and whispers back to you on the rough voyage, to love each other, help each other, cheer each other all you can; but depend only upon the Good Shepherd, whose rod and staff supported her. Read her message in the beautiful motto hung by her own hands over her chamber door:

"Rock of ages cleft for me.
Let me hide myself in thee."

R. Z. J.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS
FOR SUPPRESSION OF THE MENSES.

Astonishing Relief Given by
The Buffalo Lithia Waters.
After a Failure of all other Remedies, and when the Life of the Patient had been Despaired of.

Case of Mrs. R. P. W.. Stated by Dr. John T. Winfield, a well-known Physician of Broadway, Rockingham Co, Va.

"About the middle of May, 1878, I was called professionally to Mrs. R. P. W. I found her complaining of exeruciating pain in the head, back, and limbs, attended with nasea and vomiting. Her kidneys were torpid, and the urine—which had to be drawn by means of the catheter—scanty and charged with blood. She had passed EIGHT MONTHS WITHOUT EXPERIENCING THE MENSTRUAL FLOW. She informed me that several times in a period of ten years the failure of the monthly function for several consecutive months had been followed by a like train of symptoms, and that upon these occasions she was relieved by hemorrhages from the lungs or stomach. From the symptoms and history of the case it was evident that the kidneys had attempted to relieve the plethora incident to her condition, and that in the attempt they had seriously disturbed their own peculiar function. During an extreme illness of many weeks every remedy that seemed at all indicated in the case was faithfully tested; but without result, save an occasional slight alleviation of the distressing symptoms already described. The kidneys remained inactive; the average daily amount of fluid drawn from the bladder did not exceed two ounces, and more than half that quantity was blood. On one occasion four days passed without any secretion at all from the kidneys. It became evident that the patient must die unless some remedy could be found of much greater efficacy than any that had been tried in the case.

Looking outside of materia medica I could think of nothing that promised so much as BUFFALO LITHIA WATER, Spring No. 2, a supply of which was ordered with but a faint hope of keeping her alive until its arrival by making the skin and bowels perform the eliminating functions of the kidneys. So soon as the water was received the patient was put upon it, to the exclusion of all other treatment. The result was most astonishing. The first day's use of the water showed marked improvement in the action of the kidneys. The urine daily increased in quantity, while the proportion of blood in it rapidly diminished. The nausea, vomiting, and pain in the head and limbs, which had so obstinately resisted all treatment, soon disappeared. At the end of a week the catheter was dispensed with and the urine was voided naturally, with but a trace of blood, and in twenty days from the day she commenced the use of the water the menstrual flow appeared, and in a short time afterwards she was restored to perfect health, which remained undisturbed until the month of November, when after failing to have a "change," she again experienced the painful symptoms heretofore described. The use of the Lithia Water, however, for a short while, again afforded perfect relief, and she has continued well to the present time."

These waters, in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5 per case at the Spring. THOMAS F. GOODE,

EXTRACT FROM LETTER OF DR. WM. T. HOWARD,
Of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, dated August 1st, 1878:

Dr. Howard compares these Waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases; and more especially to the Cachexia and sequents incident to Malarious Fevers in all their grades and varieties, to certain forms of atonic dyspepsia, and all the affections peculiar to women that are remediable at all by mineral waters. In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the Buffalo Springs, in Mecklenburg County, Virginia."

EXTRACT FROM LETTER OF DR. HARVEY L. BYRD.
Of Baltimore, late Professor of Women and Children in the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Maryland. Dated Baltimore, September 21st, 1877.

"During my stay at the Buffalo Lithia Springs, as resident physician, for the season just closed, I had ample opportunities for observing the action of the waters of the several Springs on different constitutions and the two sexes, and I have no hesitation in expressing the opinion that, in the large majority of chronic Female Diseases, and especially those connected with the Uro-Gential Organs, they have no equal as a medical agent in the whole range of Therapeutic application. In Leuchorrhœa, Amenorrhœa, Dysmenorrhœa and Cystorrhœa, their action may be regarded as almost specific. From my experience with the action of those waters, I regard them as possessing a degree of curative power and an extent of adaptation in chronic diseases found in no other mineral water of which I have any knowledge, and I believe they might be used in almost all cases of chronic disease, with benefit."

EXTRACT FROM LETTER OF DR. JOEL WATKINS,
Of Charlotte Court House, Va., of April 1st, 1877.

"I have been acquainted with the Buffalo Springs, in Mecklenburg County, Va., for a number of years, and have frequently witnessed its healing powers. It is efficacious in as many different conditions of the human system as any mineral water or medical agent of which I have any knowlege, but its crowning glory is its efficacy in Female Diseases; and in the obstructions and irregularities to which young females are subject, particularly when connected with, or dependent upon indigestion, I consider it almost a specific."

It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable. as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape.)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.

FOR THE FAMILY.

The Dumb Spinner.

There lived a dumb spinner at Athelstane Lea,
A-spinning a magic web was she.

She spun and she twisted it strong and tight;
It was fair and delicate, smooth and white.

She built her a dwelling, arched and high;
Then the poor little spinner lay down to die.

The magic web was her winding-sheet,
It measured in length three fairy feet;

And the house she had built became her tomb,
She lay all alone in the twilight gloom;

But when morning had come and turned to noon,
Said the master: "Ah! 'tis a fine cocoon!"

Then they stripped from her body the robe so rare,
To deck the form of a princess fair.

Now the silk weaves over the palace floor,
And no one thinks of the spinner more.

—Kate Lawrence, in May Wide Awake.

She Could be Trusted.

BY M. THIERS.

"I can trust my little daughter; I know she tells me everything," said the mother, holding up the bright, gentle face, and looking down at it fondly.

"Yes, mamma," was on the little girl's lips, but her eyes dropped suddenly, and her cheeks were crimsoned in a moment. A kiss on the pretty lips, and the mother was turning away.

"Mamma," said the little husky voice, "let me whisper in your ear. Mamma, you trust me—I must tell you everything," and her voice was so low that only the mother heard it. As she bent over to catch the hurried words, she felt the little heart fluttering under her fingers, she saw the face flush and pale; she knew, too, by the quiver of the lips, the struggle of the moment.

She would have kissed the lips, the face, and hushed the heart; she would have stopped the trying story, but she knew that a fault confessed was a fault half-conquered, and so waited to the end.

It was a strange, new thought essness the little girl recounted, of a sad step aside from the narrow way of right. She knew better. She had been more than half unhappy on account of it for several days, especially as she could not gather courage to confess it—only the words of trust brought about the confession. Could she say, "Yes mama," knowing that at that very moment she was covering a little corner of the heart where she had hidden a fault she wished no eyes to see?

The mother, sorry for the child's trial, yet glad of her victory for right, was still sad in thinkiog of the fault Other children might have done the same thing—other children might have done worse—but her own fair faced child! she could have wept before her as she stood both in gladness and in sorrow—sorrow for the fault; gladness, that she was too true to receive praise unworthily, too strong for the right to allow the hardness of the confession to overcome her.

She stooped and folded her in her arms, saying: "Kiss me Kathrina; your fault would break my heart, but that I believe this hour you have conquered; you have done well—now I know, better than I knew before, that I can trust my little daughter."—Ex

Story of a Swallow.

Perhaps there is no bird more familiar to us all than the swallow, or the martin, as one variety is sometimes called, because this little creature seems to like the neighborhood of man; it builds its nest on our houses or barns, it is easily domesticated, and becomes quite tame. It cannot, however, bear our cold winters, and in the autumn it leaves us for a warmer climate; but it does so with the intention of returning again after the cruel winter has passed; and therefore the appearance of the swallow is always a joyful sight, for it tells us the winter has really gone, and that bright spring is returning with its blossoms and its flowers. This little bird seems to have a strong attachment to places, and, with a wonderful instinct, will find its way back, year after year, to the same house or barn, and occupy the same nest it had before. On this account the swallow becomes almost a member of the family, and is often cherished and protected as such.

Many years ago the Mediterranean Sea was much frequented by pirates or corsairs from Morocco, Algiers and Barbary, who made it very dangerous to travel thereon, for not only did they plunder the cargoes of vessels which they captured, but the unfortunate crews and passengers were carried off and sold as slaves to the Moors, where, as Christians, they suffered all kinds of misery from their cruel Mohammedan masters. Sometimes it was long before their families were able to ascertain what had become of these unfortunate captives, and then they were able to release them only by sending large sums of money to buy back their freedom.

This was what happened to Don Ramon Cevallos, a rich and respectable merchant of Murcia, who, in a voyage from Carthagena in Spain to a port in Italy, was captured by an Algerine corsair, and, after being stripped of all his property, was sold at Algiers to a rich Moor of the country. This man had a country seat about four leagues from the town; and here the unfortunate merchant, in company with many other Christian slaves, was forced to do work of the hardest kind in the fields. His cruel master, for some reason or other, would not allow him to write and inform his family of his fate, so that they might take measures to redeem him. At last he even forbade him to mention the subject of ransom to him.

Meanwhile Donna Rosalia, the wife of Don Ramon, and her two sons of twelve and ten years were in the greatest affliction at the news of his capture. For a whole year they kept on hoping to hear from him, so that they might know where to send the money for his ransom, but no news of any kind came. Two years past, and then eight more had gone, and yet, in all these long ten years, they had never been able to get the slightest intelligence of the place where he might be found. The sons at last became persuaded their poor father had perished, but their brave mother did not quite lose hope; she would say, "I am convinced your father is still alive, and that you will see him again one of these days, though, perhaps, I may not live to do so."

It was the 7th day af May, the tenth anniversary of the day on which Don Ramon had been captured, and Donna Rosalia and her sons were sadly commemorating the day at home, when their servant came in and said:

"Excuse me, Senora, if I interrupt you, but a lad from Huerta (a little town close by) has come in and says he must speak with you about something important."

The poor wife, as if conscious of good news, ordered the lad to be admitted, and the girl presently returned with a boy of about twelve years of age, dark in complexion, as Spanish children generally are, bright and intelligent.

"Are you, Senora," said he, "the wife of Don Ramon Cevallos, and are these his sons?"

"Yes," they all answered, with emotion.

"Very well, Senora," replied the boy very joyously, "you must know that I live with my parents and five brothers in a little cottage about half a league from here, at Huerta. In this cottage, on the roof, not much higher than my head, a swallow comes every spring to build its nest; there it stays among us till next September, like one of the family, when it goes away and does not return till the winter is past.

"This morning, while alone in the cottage and watching the swallow on its nest, I noticed that it had a tiny cord around its neck. It is so tame and familiar with us all that I had no difficulty in reaching it, and on taking it in my hand I found that there was a delicate cord of hair, from which was hanging something like a scapulary or small locket, and this was kept in its place by another little cord which passed round the body, but in such a manner as not to interfere with the bird's flying. Very carefully, so as not to hurt the little creature, I took off the collar, and with the scissors undid one side of this scapulary, where I found a small piece of paper all written over with very small characters. Seeing that it was directed to the wife and sons of Don Ramon Cevallos of Murc a I replaced it on the bird's neck and came as soon as I could get away to find you. Here," said he, "you have the little messenger," and he drew from his bosom the swallow, which he placed in Donna Rosalia's hands, so that she might be the first to read the contents of the paper; it was to this effect:

"In the name of the true God of Christians, I beg the one into whose hands this paper may fall, to seek in the city of Murcia for the wife or sons of Don Ramon Cevallos, a former merchant of that town, and tell them that this unfortunate man has been ten years in the bitterest slavery. His master, Mojamet Assan, a rich proprietor of Morocco, has him at his country place of Alcazaba, and will not allow him to be ransomed unless he is claimed by the Cadi of the city. May God guide the flight of my messenger."

You can easily imagine the joy of this Spanish family on thus ascertaining that Don Ramon was still alive, and where and how he was to be found. The boy who brought them the swallow was apparently as glad as they were; and you may be sure that Donna Rosalia and her sons did not fail to reward him handsomely. The elder son started off as soon as possible with the documents and money necessary to redeem his unfortunate father from his bitter slavery, which was happily accomplished in due time; and thus this affectionate husband and father was at last restored to the family from which he had been cruelly separated for so many years, and all by the means of a poor little swallow. This shows us what insignificant instruments are chosen sometimes to bring about the purposes of God—Churchman.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sundry Humbugs.

The American Agriculturist under this head devotes space each month to the above subject. Here are some extracts:

The small frauds are not practiced upon the poorer classes alone, but are perpetuated openly upon Broadway and other thoroughfares. We described last year the humbug with the

which was very successful that spring and the one before, but we have not seen it offered this season probably through fear of the police, who last year had orders to suppress the traffic, after we informed the Mayor of the city of the fraud The small branch s and young twigs of the common Sweet-gum tree or Bilsted (Liquidambar) are curiously winged with broad corky protuberances. The tree is quite common in the vicinity of New York, but as the majority of people go about the world without seeing what it contains it was an easy matter for street-venders to pass off these twigs, from the neighboring swamps, as Alligator Plants from Florida which "needed only to be kept in water for a few weeks when they would produce most beautiful flowers" Hundreds if not thousands of truncheons of this tree, a foot or two long, were sold last spring at 25c. each. Of course no flowers ever came.

THE WINE PLANT HUMBUG

This flourished about 20 years ago, and its history is a sad one, as its victims were most y farmers of moderate means, to whom it brought, if not absolute ruin, disaster from which they were long in recovering. Though the American Agriculturist opposed it steadily from the start, many did not see our warnings. The "California Wine Plant," as it was generally called, it was shown upon paper, would at once enrich any farmer who would invest in it. So many plants to the acre would yield so many gallons of juice; this, with so much sugar, would make so many gallons of wine, which at $3 (the price then named) per gallon would, you see, amount to the handsome sum—we have forgotten how much, but a small fortune per acre. The plant, it was said, while it looked like rhubarb, was quite different, would make a wine which could not be distinguished from Sherry, and all that, Farmers in various parts of the country invested. Such was the infatuation that some mortgaged their farms to get money to buy Wine Plants. The chaps engaged in selling it, bought rhubarb from the nearest nursery or elsewhere, made it into small cuttings of Wine Plant, and sold it at an enormous profit. The rhubarb grew, the wine was made, and—that was the end. It is sad now to remember the samples that came to us—small bottles and big bottles of the stuff, begging us to sell it for the sender, and the pathetic stories that came with the samples. There was no sale for the so-called "Wine," a rummy, vinegarish wash that no one would buy, and nothing but loss came of it. Now we hear of the wine plant in Virginia, and that some large sales have been made. We beg our friends there not only to let it alone themselves, but to prevent others from loss by informing them of the utter worthlessness of the stuff.

ANOTHER TRICK UPON FARMERS

has lately been played in Pennsylvania. The poultry speculator goes from house to house to buy fowls. He does business very systematically, and when he pays any one money he takes a receipt. Having made a purchase he takes out his receipt book and proceeds to write the receipt. He writes rapidly and vigorously, as becomes a man of business, but just as he gets to where the signature is to be added—away goes the point of the pencil—"never mind; here is one of those fountain pens," which he takes from his pocket—"Nothing like having two strings to your bow, you know—capital invention, these pens that carry their own ink." He hands the pen to the farmer, who signs the receipt. A receipt in pencil with the signature in ink, is easily converted into a promissory note for $150—or $200—as the farmer finds out when he gets a notice from the bank in the next town, that his note of a given date, discounted by the bank, will be due on such a day.

The Air as a Vehicle of Light and Heat.

The fact that pure dry air is freely and almost absolutely pervious to heat is an important and interesting feature in the arrangements of Nature. It is so important, indeed, that a word has been contrived to express this characteristic of air with the sharp precision of scientific definition. It is termed, "Diathermancy;" so that this name stands in relation to heat very much in the same position that transparency holds in reference to light. Diathermancy is sometimes familiarly spoken of as meaning "transparent to heat," and there is no objection to this familiar rendering of the term if it is clearly understood that the heat which has made its way through the permeable substance renders itself "apparent" in the end, by calling up the sensation of warmth in the skin, rather than by producing the sensation of sight in the eye. The transparency of the air allows luminous emanations from the external bodies of space to reach the solid surface of the invested sphere. It fits the atmosphere to act as a window to the earth, through which men can look upon the outside regions of Nature, and through which all the gorgeous effect of illumination and colour can come in to stamp terrestrial objects with visible and distinguished form. To arrive at a clear idea of what the earth would be without a transparent atmosphere, it is only necessary to think of the aspect of London in a thick November fog. So, also, if the air were not as freely permeable to heat-vibrations as it is to light, the earth could not possibly be vivified as it is through the influence of sunshine. It is the heat vibrations from the sun which stir up the molecules of terrestrial matter to marshal themselves into organized forms, and to carry on the structural transformations upon which vitality depends.

Professor Tyndall, by a series of delicate experiments, which he repeated in detail in his lectures at the Royal Institution in 1862, satisfied himself that pure air, and the elementary gases, oxygen and nitrogen, of which air is composed, allow heat-rays of even the feeblest character to traverse their substance without being deprived of any appreciable port on of their warming power. It is far otherwise, however, with moist air, even when of perfect transparency, and without any trace or taint of visible mist. Air saturated with moisture intercepts and absorbs large quantities of heat; in all cases as much at least as 5 per cent. and in some instances as much as 70 per cent. of that which is thrown in amidst its molecules. Moist air thus serves both to soften the scorching power of hot sunshine which comes in from without, and to prevent the warmth which has already made its way into the solid ground from being too readily and too lavishly scattered back again into outer space. It is for this reason that the sunshine on the tops of high mountains, which are above the chief mass of the vapor that is incorporated with the air, scorches and blisters the skin so much more than the sunshine of the low-lying and moist regions of even the torrid zone.

American Sumac.

Dr. William McMurtie, Chemist of the Department of Agriculture, has been making elaborate investigations as to the relative amount of tannic acid and coloring matter in American and Sicily sumac. He finds the American product, when properly gathered, to be fully equal to the foreign. Samples of Winchester, Va., sumac were collected in the months of June, July and August respectively. Of these samples those collected in June and July were mixed varieties, and of the product collected in August we secured samples of the leaves of Rhus glaba and Rhus copallina separately.

In reporting his experiments Dr. McMurtie states that in some of the tests the precipitates obtained by means of the solution of the June collections of Winchester mixed sumac were perfectly white and very much cleaner than any obtained with the Sicilian product. "The difference in the color of the precipitates obtained from the solution of the June collection and that obtained from samples of late collections, was sufficiently marked to prove that the great difficulty in the way of the universal employment of the American to the exclusion of the expensive Sicilian product may be obviated by making our collections early in the season—that is in the month of June. The percentage of tannic acid is not, it is true, quite as high as obtains in July, but it compares favorably with the Sicilian product, which, be it remembered, communicates a slightly yellowish tinge to the gelatine precipitate. The amount of coloring matter found in the July collection is sufficient to account for the difference of $50 a ton in the market values of the sumac of home and foreign growth, regardless of the proportion of tannic acid. We would therefore advise that, for the purpose of tanning white and delicately colored leather, the collection may be made in June, while for tanning dark colored leathers, and for dyeing and calico printing in dark colors, where the slightly yellow color will have no injurious effect, the collections be made in July. It appears that for all purposes the sumac collected after the 1st of August is inferior in quality. In view of the facts here presented, we cannot help urging upon manufacturers the importance of encouraging the home production—of insisting that the collections be made early in the season, in order thus to bring about such a change in this matter as to prevent the annual expenditure of over $600,000 in gold for the sumac of foreign growth.

BY REV. J. RUMPLE.

GRANVILLE COUNTY—No. 1.

Previous to the middle of the eighteenth century, the county of Granville embraced all the territory lying along the Virginia line, west of Bute county—now divided into Warren and Franklin—and was set off from Edgecombe in 1746. Five years later, 1751, Orange county was established, embracing parts of the territory of Granville, Bladen and Johnston counties. Caswell county was set off in 1777 from Orange county, and Person county in 1791 from Caswell. Guilford and Rockingham also occupy territory originally covered by Granville. This county is therefore the imperial mother of the northern cluster of counties, lying on the river Dan and its southern tributaries, and covering the head springs of the Tar, the Neuse and the Haw rivers. Lying thus on the northern frontier of the State, it was the first to receive into its ample bosom the pioneers of the great Scotch Irish army of settlers, that moved southward from Pennsylvania through Virginia, about the middle of the last century.

The careful reader will observe the singular fact that while there are few Presbyterians in Edgecombe, Wake, Warren and Person counties, lying in the immediate neighborhood of Granville, quite a number of churches of that denomination have existed in the latter county from the earliest times. The reason will be found in the fact that the neighboring counties drew their pioneer settlers from the Albemarle region of North Carolina and from the older settlements in Virginia, where the population was non-Presbyterian, while parts of Granville were settled by Presbyterian colonists from Hanover, New Kent, and King and Queen counties in Virginia. These people had come from the North of Ireland to America in large numbers about 1730. Coming to Pennsylvania, they moved back towards and across the Susquehanna and formed a frontier settlement toward the West, from which point the current moved southward through Maryland and Virginia, and formed a barrier between the older Virginia settlements and the Indians on the West. While the intolerant churchmen of East Virginia would not allow Quakers or Presbyterians to enjoy equal rights in the heart of the older settlements, they were quite willing that the Scotch-Irish should settle between themselves and the savages of the wilderness, and they were allowed the free exercise of their religion in their settlements. These frontier settlements in Virginia were visited in 1743 by the Rev. Wm. Robinson, who came preaching through Frederick, Prince Edward and Charlotte counties in Virginia, and from thence extended his journies into the Western and Irish settlements in North Carolina. On this journey Mr. Robinson was urged to receive money as a compensation for his labors, from the Presbyterians of Virginia. He refused at first, but at length agreed to take it and employ it in the education of some one to come and preach the Gospel to them. The young man who received this help was Samuel Davies, who was studying at Fagg's Manor, Pennsylvania, under the Rev. Samuel Blair. Four years later Mr. Davies, having been licensed, came and visited them, and the next year, 1748, he was settled amongst them. There he continued to labor until he was elected President of Princeton College in 1759, a period of ten years. A rich blessing followed his labors, and their influence is felt to this day. He was the only Presbyterian minister in all that region, and it was nearly one hundred miles between the extreme points of his field. He had seven regular preaching places—three in Hanover, one in Henrico, one in Goochland, one in Louisia and one in North Carolina, sweeping from York river to Dan. The southern extremity of this field was doubtless in old Granville county. There were two leading original points in this county, one in the north of the present county of Granville, embracing the churches of Grassy Creek and Nutbush, and the other higher up the Dan, in the region of Redhouse church, in Caswell county.

Grassy Creek and Nutbush were originally composed, as before stated, of emigrants from Virginia, converts under the preaching of Samuel Davies and his co-adjutors. As the labors of Davies extended from 1748 to 1759, these emigrants must have settled here between these dates.

GRASSY CREEK.

The leading persons in Grassy Creek in those days were Howel Lewis, Daniel Grant and Samuel Smith, and their church was organized according to the Manual of Orange Presbytery in 1753. On the 14th of August, 1755, Hugh McAden, on his journey southward, preached at Grassy Creek in a Baptist church, and the next day at Fishing Creek. If the Presbyterian church of Grassy Creek was organized at that date, it probably had no house of worship. On his return trip McAden preached again in the Baptist meeting house on Grassy Creek.

The next glimpse which we catch of this church is that Gilbert Tennant, Jr., of New Brunswick Presbytery, visited this region in 1763, and remained six months engaged in preaching the Gospel. Mr. Tennant administered the Lord's Supper for the first time, after the Presbyterian manner, in Granville county, during this visit. The place of celebration was an unoccupied house belonging to Howel Lewis, about a mile and a half from where Grassy Creek church now stands.

In 1764 James Creswell was licensed by Hanover Presbytery, and the same year he received calls from Grassy Creek, Nutbush and Lower Hyco, and having accepted these calls he was installed their pastor in 1765, after regular ordination. Mr. Creswell's death occurred in 1778, and it is probable that he labored in this field until his earthly work was done.

The Rev. Henry Patillo, who had been preaching at Hawfields, Eno and Little River ever since 1765, became pastor of Nutbush and Grassy Creek in 1780 and continued there until his death in 1801, a period of twenty-one years. In 1784 the two congregations purchased and gave to Mr. Patillo a tract of land containg 800 acres, and lying on Spnemarrow creek, on the express condition that he should continue their pastor till his death. He fulfilled the conditions and his family inherited a small patrimony in consequence of this arrangement. Mr. Patillo was a busy man. For about twelve years, in addition to his preaching, he taught a classical school in Granville. He also wrote and published a number of works. But he was always poor, having neither the opportunity nor the disposition to acquire wealth. At the ripe age of seventy-five he finished his career at Dinwiddie Courthouse, Va., about seventy-five miles from home, whither he had gone on ministerial duty. His remains, it is stated on right good authority, lie entombed in the bounds of Grassy Creek congregation.

After two years of vacancy Grassy Creek and Nutbush churches secured the services of the Rev. John Matthews, a native of Alamance congregation in Guilford. Mr. Matthews was a pupil of Rev. David Caldwell, D. D., and by him prepared for the ministry. He was licensed by Orange Presbytery in 1801, being then in his 30th year.

After doing some missionary work, he accepted calls from Nutbush and Grassy Creek in 1803, and was shortly afterwards installed. He served these churches till his removal to Martinsburg, Va., in 1806. His charges afterward were Shepherdstown and Charlestown Va. In 1830 Dr. Matthews became Professor of Theology in New Albany Seminary, where he died in 1848. Many of our people are familiar with a little work of Dr. Matthews' called "Letters on the Divine Purpose," though they may not have remembered that it was the work of a North Carolinian, born, educated and ordained in the bounds of Orange Presbytery. These "Letters are said to have been addressed to Thomas H. Willie, a Ruling Elder of the Oxford church.

After the removal of Dr. Matthews, the Rev. Leonard Prather, who had been received from the Methodist Church in 1802, served these churches for a short time, but was soon deposed for the sin of intemperance. From 1809 until 1819 the Rev. Ezekiel B. Currie served these churches in the Gospel. Mr. Currie was born, probably, in Alamance congregation, Guilford county, though his father resided in Haw River and several other congregations. Young Currie was awakened to a sense of his need of Christ by the remark of an old gentleman, after an evening spent in merriment. When the company was about leaving the old man said, "Young man, when will you turn to serious things?" It was a simple question, easily asked, that was thus made the means of awakening a careless sinner. He was afterwards hopefully converted under the preaching of the Rev. James McGready. A part of his education was also secured under Mr. McGready, who was conducting a classical school, three or four miles from High Rock, mid-way between Haw river and Stony Creek. But his principal instruction was received under Dr. David Caldwell, of Guilford. Mr. Currie was licensed to preach by Orange Presbytery, at Barbecue church, Cumberland, March, 1801, along with John Matthews, Duncan Brown, Murdoch McMillan, Malcolm McNair, Hugh Shaw and Murdoch Murphy. After licensure Mr. Currie spent about seven years in Bethany and Grier's churches, in Caswell, and from there he went to Grassy creek and Nutbush, in Granville, in 1809, as before mentioned. In this charge his labors were greatly blessed. The Sessional Records, at almost every meeting, show accessions to the church. He was an earnest, devout man, a zealous and faithful minister, and he expected sinners to be awakened and converted under his ministry.

After ten years of service here, in 1819 he removed to Orange county, and took charge of Hawfield's and Cross Roads churches. Here he labored with his customary zeal and success until 1843, a period of twenty-four years, when, on account of the infirmities of age, having been preaching the Gospel for over forty years, he resigned and retired from the active duties of the ministry. His name still appeared on the roll of Orange Presbytery until 1852, when the Good Shepherd called his faithful servant home. That same year also, Samuel L. Graham, Arch McQueen, Hugh Shaw and Archibald Alexander are reported as having closed their labors and entered into rest. Mr. Currie's remains lie interred in the Hawfield's grave yard, where lie also so many of his people whom "He allured to brighter worlds, and led the way."

The Rev. Samuel Lyle Graham took charge of Grassy creek in 1821. Mr. Graham was a native of Liberty, Va., and was born February 9, 1794. At fifteen years of age he began his classical studies, and it is recorded that he committed a Latin grammar to memory in five days. At the age of twenty he graduated from Washington College, Va., the best scholar in his class. For a short time after graduation he served as private tutor in the family of Judge Nash, of Hillsboro, N. C. From this place he went to Princeton, studied theology and was licensed by New Brunswick Presbytery, April 18th, 1821. Orange Presbytery ordained him September 7th, 1821, and he began preaching at Oxford and Grassy creek the same year. In 1828 he left Oxford and took charge of Nutbush with Grassy creek. Extensive revivals of religion prevailed in his congregation in 1830–'31, and more than eighty were added to the churches. The faithful pastor labored so hard that his strength was often exhausted, and he went from his bed to his pulpit, and thence to his bed again. The churches were greatly strengthed by this revival, and Dr. Graham always regarded this period as the most delightful part of his ministry. In 1833 Union College, New York, conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon him. The following year he left Grassy creek church. In 1832 Dr. Graham was elected to a professorship in Union Seminary, Virginia, which he declined, but upon his re-election in 1838, he accepted the position. Here he labored until he was called to his heavenly home in 1851. When he was nearing his end Dr. B. H. Rice said to him—alluding to news just received—"Dr. Alexander has got home before you." Raising himself on his bed, Dr. Graham cried in triumphant tones: O, is it possible! is it so! I had almost shouted glory. Heaven has seldom received from earth such an inhabitant. A great and good man! His society in heaven will be invaluable." A few hours after this he passed away calmly, peacefully. This was October 29th, 1851, and Dr. Graham was in the 58th year of his age.

Since the year 1834 Grassy creek has been vacant a portion of the time, and quite a number of ministers have labored here at different times, but none of them very long. The organization of Shiloh church from a portion of its members and territory in 1834, reduced its size materially. In 1840 the Rev. S. J. P. Anderson was serving this church, and in 1842 Rev. Edward Hines, then a licentiate, was supplying it, in connection with Oxford and Nutbush. From 1844 to 1847 Rev. Jacob Doll labored here, and in 1856–'57 Rev. G. W. Ferrill served them. The Rev. T. U. Faucette labored here eight years, from 1858 to 1866, and then again in 1873. The Rev. H. G. Hill was here in 1867, and the Rev. D. E. Jordan from 1874 to 1876. The church is now supplied by the Rev. John W. Primrose, the evangelist of the Presbytery. The total of communicants of this church in 1878 is given as thirteen. It is difficult to say whether these frequent changes resulted from the gradual weakening of the church, or whether the church was reduced by these frequent changes, but no doubt the one reacted on the other. It is to be hoped that this oldest Presbyterian church in North Carolina may be saved from total extinction.

The authorities consulted in preparation of this article are, Foote's & Wheeler's Sketches, Caruthers' History of David Caldwell, Gillette's History of the Presbyterian Church, Letters of Rev. Mr. Faucette, Minutes of Synod and General Assembly and Sprague's Annals, vol. iii and iv.

WHAT CAIN FEARED.

Since at that time there is mention of no children of Adam and Eve but Cain and Abel, men are puzzled to know who they could be whom Cain feared, lest they would kill him after his banishment "into the land of Nod" (Gen. iv: 14), for he says, "I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth, and it shall come to pass that every one that findeth me shall slay me." But,

1. He expected to live indefinitely long, and that his parents would also, and have a large number of children.

2. That phrase "every one" (kol) without the article "all" can just as well be rendered, in the neuter gender, "every thing" as "every person."

He felt the guilt of murder to be great—that he deserved to die—and he feared that every wild beast and every object he met would fall upon him, just as a murderer now does. Gesenius, in his Heb. Lexicon, at 2 c., in his definition of the word "has" before a noun singular, without the article, kol, signifies all, every one, whoever, whatever. We remember this is Cain's language. He was afraid that everything he met, afar off from the Garden of Eden, would be an instrument of Divine vengeance. Josephus refers this to wild beasts, and we see not why they may not be included. In Gen. ix: 5, 6, in the law of retribution laid down, "And surely your blood of your lives will I require, at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man, at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man;" "Whoso sheddeth," in verse 6, then includes both man and beast; it is a participle, "the shedder."

In Amos ix: 3, if men hide themselves from the sight of God in the bottom of the sea, he says, "I will command the serpent, and he shall bite them."

We see the sentiment even in the heathen world, in Acts xxviii: 4, in the case of Paul: When the barbarians saw the viper clinging to his hand they judged him to be a murderer, pursued by vengeance; and French says that our modern editions of the Bible should not have dropped the capital V with which "vengeance" was spelt in the exemplar edition of 1811. These islanders, in their simple but most truthful moral instincts, did not contemplate Vengeance, or Dike, in the abstract, but personified her as a goddess, and our translators did their best to mark and reproduce this personification of the Divine justice. The natives of the Island of Malta took this as an instance of the goddess of Justice using the viper to inflict death on a murderer.

The sign given to Cain (Gen. iv: 15) whereby he was protected and a reprieve granted, seems to have given encouragement to violence (verse 23) until the earth was filled with it. (Gen. 6: 11-13). There was, apparently, no restraint on the wickedness of the world. It took an ocean of water to make it clean.

Now, in ch. ix, in amount, God says, I am going to commence in a new style. I now establish the law of blood for blood. This is at the very outset, after they come out of the ark. Whether man or beast this human blood, he, or it, must be killed. ix: 6, "whoso," or whatever animal sheds man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed (not by my hand, but by human government), for in the image of God made he man.

This is among the primary and most important laws for the whole world; the reason of it is the same everywhere—murder assaults the image of God. It is not a prediction but a precept, a command; not a Jewish law, afterward by the same authority put into the civil code of the Jews, and made very stringent. Though cities of refuge were provided, three on each side of Jordan, and easy of access, for accidental homicide, yet this was not to interfere with this law for wilful murder. See Numbers xxxv. If a man murders with an instrument of iron "the murderer shall surely be put to death;" if a man kill another by throwing a stone "the murderer shall surely be put to death;" if a man kill another with an instrument of wood "the murderer shall surely be put to death;" "the revenger of blood, himself shall slay the murderer, when he meeteth him he shall slay him." If a man kill another out of hatred, or hurl at him by lying in wait, or in enmity with his hand, "he that smote him shall surely be put to death, for he is a murderer." (Verse 30.) "Whoso killeth any person the murderer shall be put to death by the mouth of witnesses." "Ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, but he shall surely be put to death." "Ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are, for blood it defileth the land; and the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein but by the blood of him that shed it."

"If an animal known to be vicious caused the death of any one not only was the animal destroyed, but the owner also, if he had taken no steps to restrain it, was held guilty of murder." Smith's Dic. Ex. xxi: 29-31.

If such rules of Divine law were in force then the same principle holds now here, where in some counties eight or ten murders have been committed, and none properly punished for them. We cannot expect the blessing of God in this state of things any more than the Jews in the time of Hosea iv: 2, 3.

LIFE A SWEET REFRAIN.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M. D.

How smoothly through the yielding air
The red-breast wings her flight alone,
And leaves no trace, no parting there,
To mark the space where she has flown;
Her song, those sweetly soothing notes
That linger long upon the air,
Are all she leaves, and all denotes
To tell that she hath flown so near.

How charming through the valley flows
The river in its sunlight sheen,
While recompensive as it goes,
It fringes all its banks with green;
Wherever from its mountain source
It winding holds its way along,
It scatters blessings in its course,
And all its murmur is a song

So may I here in life float on,
And leave behind no marring trace
To tell the world, when I am gone,
That I have lived to curse my race;
But some kind deed—some sweet refrain,
Some good to others done, bequeath,
Which they shall love to call again,
When I am slumbering cold in death.

MACHINERY IN REVIVALS.

By "machinery" we mean all those "measures" over and above the means which God has appointed, which have been invented by "evangelists" or "revival preachers" for the purpose of awakening careless sinners: such as "the anxious bench;" "the altar" to which inquirers are invited in order to be specially prayed for; the reading of letters (which have been procured by solicitation) from young converts or from inquirers; "silent prayer" of the congregation; the calling on certain classes in the congregation to separate themselves from the rest; the roaming over the congregation of certain persons for the purpose of making appeals to individuals; the calling upon certain descriptions of people in the audience to sing certain hymns, and the requiring of the rest not to sing; the demand for unusual postures in parts of the worship, as, for example, kneeling in singing, etc., etc. Measures of this sort are justly called "machinery." The use of them demands no spiritual gifts, no spiritual frame of mind, no piety, nothing, indeed, but the power of physical endurance—brass. We do not deny that some of them have been used by good men, and with an earnest desire to do good; but there is nothing in their own nature which forbids their being used by men who have not one spark of genuine piety. Accordingly, we find that they have been successfully used by wicked men and hypocrites. They belong to the same class of things with the mummeries of Rome. The priest performs the ceremonies prescribed in the ritual, and the business is done. The character of the priest has nothing to do with the efficiency of the ritual. Whether he be a Hophni or Zadok makes no difference in the result. The patient or recipient "gets through" alike in either case.

If this be a just view, if these measures are a sort of machinery, this is enough to condemn them. God's measures are of a totally different sort. They are moral, not mechanical. They demand for effective use not only piety in the habit, but piety in exercise. Paul and Barnabas so spoke at Iconium, that a multitude believed. It is conceded that God has sometimes graciously made the preaching of unconverted men the means of salvation to sinners. But he has also sometimes made the repetition of a godly man's sermon by a mocking mimic the means of conversion to a boon companion. He has sometimes condescended to speak by the mouth of a Balaam, or even of an ass. People have been converted, we doubt not, at meetings where the machinery has been fully, and we may add shamefully, worked. But all this is nothing to the purpose. The question is not what means God may be pleased to use himself, but what he requires or permits the Church to use; and if he has appointed means which demand ordinarily, for their efficiency, high moral and spiritual conditions, then measures which may be as effectively used without as with such conditions cannot be supposed to have his approval; and the use of such measures is arrant will-worship, and betrays a larger faith in the wisdom of man than in the power of God.

We have said that this machinery may be referred to the same class of things with the mummeries of Rome. This suggests a more serious objection to it. The mummeries of Rome have an intimate and logical connexion with the Semi-Pelagian position of that body. It is not a question of vital importance which of the two was chronologically first, the abuse in practice or the error in doctrine. If both belong to the same organism it matters not whether the head or foot came in first. It is enough, for our warning, to know that the head and foot are members of the same body, and that if one be admitted the other will be apt to follow in time. No such ordinance as that which the Papists call baptism could have a permanent place in a body which was not at least Semi-Pelagian in doctrine. And so it may be truly said that the machinery in question is solely Semi-Pelagian in its affinities. It was introduced in modern times by churches of that doctrinal tendency; it was worked con amore by the Pelagianizing party in the Presbyterian Church, and condemned by the Presbyterian Church at the time of the schism of 1837; and if not condemned again and put down, it will bring on another Semi-Pelagian schism. It is altogether out of harmony with the doctrine of our Church concerning the agency of the Holy Ghost in regeneration. One or the other must in the long run be given up.

This suggests another objection. The use of this machinery brings a multitude of unconverted people into the Church who would not otherwise come into it. The appeal is made to mere natural sensibilities and sympathies; people, specially the young, honestly mistake this natural feeling and mere impressions on the imagination for religious conviction, or for the sentiments which result from religious conviction; and, without time for testing their sentiments and for manifesting their real nature and origin, they are hurried into the Church and assume the irrevocable vow. A few months are sufficient to reveal the fact of self-deception to a multitude; but they are in the Church; they commit, the greater part of them, no "offence" to warrant their excommunication, and they remain in the Church and of the world. Hence, another fruitful source of apostasy from the faith. By the terms of the supposition, such church members have no relish for the distinctive doctrines of the Gospel; in particular, there is nothing in them which says Amen to the teachings of God's word concerning the desperate power and malignity of sin, and concerning the almighty and sovereign power of the Holy Ghost. The real power of sin has never been anxiously revolved by them, and they are, consequently, unable to appreciate the Bible soteriology whether of the Son or of the Spirit. The temptation to the preacher, in ministering to such a people, is to say nothing on these topics because the people are not interested in them; and from saying nothing about them, to proceed to direct assaults upon them. This is not an altogether imaginary description of a process of degeneration. If we have not misunderstood the history of Socinianism in the New England churches, its progress was, to a very great extent, due to "the half-way covenant" and other measures which filled the churches with unconverted people. A spiritual experience of the reality and power of the truth is the only security for its preservation. The world in the Church!—this is the great peril. This is doing more to help the cause of Rome and of infidelity, than all the crafty books that are circulated in their interest. This is the peril against which the Church has been warned from the very beginning; and it is a peril into which the use of revival machinery is aiding to plunge us.

Once more: this machinery is not only unauthorized of God, and is, therefore, a sheer addition to his ordinances, as much so as the so-called sacraments of "penance" or "extreme unction" in the Roman apostasy, but they virtually sanction the opus operatum principle. Sinners are encouraged to believe that if they will only put themselves under the operation of the machine, they will get through and be saved.

Finally, there is one argument which ought to prevail with all faithful Presbyterians against the use of these "measures," even if they are not convinced that the measures are in themselves wrong; and that is that they are a clear addition to the covenant which has been made with one another by the congregations constituting the Presbyterian Church in the United States. This covenant is contained in our standards. We have agreed as to "what the ordinances in a particular church" shall be (Form of Gov., ch. vii), and in the "Directory for Worship," the features of the worship to be observed in all our congregations are described. No congregation has the right to introduce any other form of worship and at the same time remain a constituent part of that Church to which these standards belong. It is not improbable that many machinery-using churches in our communion would be scandalized by the introduction into our non-machinery using churches of a liturgy. But why should they? The covenant is violated, it is true; but the machinery has also broken it. We do not hesitate to say, that if the covenant had to be broken in one way or the other, we should deem the breach by liturgy much the least offensive and dangerous of the two.—Dr. T. E. Peck, in Southern Presbyterian Review.

A DRUNKARD REFORMED BY HIS WIFE.

A gifted gentleman married a beautiful and accomplished lady. She was the choice of his parents, but was, however, not his choice. His heart was filled with the image of a bright blue-eyed maiden who lived not far off, but the impassable barrier of poverty was between and he quietly submitted to the parental wishes. A short time after the marriage he sought to drown the discontent of his heart by draughts from the deceitful cup. Time after time he would enter his beautiful cottage home, so intoxicated that he could scarcely stand, and as he came in he often expected to be met with cold repulse and bitter reproaches; but, on the contrary, a delicate fair hand was always extended to steady his staggering footsteps, and, though tears often made more radiant the sweet brown eyes that looked up tenderly in his face, no words but of gentle welcome greeted his ears.

Matters went on this way for three or four months; every influence was brought to bear upon him that promised the least success in his reformation, but without avail. Finally, one cold night he came home too much intoxicated to ascend the steps that led into the porch of his dwelling, and in endeavoring to do so, fell. The sound of his falling upon the steps reached the ears of his wife, who was patiently awaiting his return in the dining-room, where she had kept a lonely vigil, that his supper might be in proper condition when he returned. With all the speed her strength could command, she rushed to the door, and as she opened it and the glare fell upon his face, she fancied he was dead, and with a wail that pierced his soul to the quick, though stupefied as he was by spirits, she threw herself upon his breast.

The shock this scene gave him rapidly dispelled the effects of the spirits, and he tried to soothe his wife, who soon regained her composure when she found that matters were not as she apprehended. But it was the last time that he drank any kind of spirits. He "could not bear," he said, "a particle more weight of gratitude than Annie had laid upon him; it was almost crushing him already." Had she treated him differently, he might to-day be filling a drunkard's grave.

"LEARNING THEIR DRILL."

A friend of mine, a Roman Catholic, tells me that on going to mass a few weeks ago at Ramsgate, he noticed two gentlemen who were evidently watching the service very closely, and were occasionally making notes in their pocket books. One of these he knew by sight to be a Ritualistic clergyman, and the other had a strong look of belonging to the same school. He puzzled to know what could have brought them to a Catholic church, and on coming out asked an old pensioner whom he knew, who these individuals were? "Them be sham Catholics," said the man; "they come here to learn the drill like recruits, and then goes and practices a bad imitation of our services in their own church." On further inquiry my friend found out that the old fellow was right. They were both Anglican parsons, who went to the Romanist rank "to learn their drill."—Truth.

THE WORD IN SEASON.

Dr. John Breckenridge did not overlook the children of the Sabbath school, but as opportunity offered would visit them at their homes. One little incident occurs to our recollection: There was a little boy whom we knew, whose house he was passing, and seeing him at the gate he stopped, speaking with that kindness which ever fell from his lips, saying to him: "I want to talk to you about your soul." It was but a little incident and a little boy, yet it led that child to seek Christ, and Christ called him into the ministry, and he has been serving God about forty years, and is now professor in a theological seminary."—Presbyterian.

THE DISPUTE.

A venerable minister, with compassionate earnestness, once preached a sermon on eternal punishment. On the next day some thoughtless men agreed that one of their number should go to him, and, if possible, draw him into a discussion. He went accordingly, and began the conversation, saying: "I believe there is a small dispute between you and me, and I thought that I would call this morning and try to settle it." "Ah!" said the good man, "What is it?" "Why," he replied, "you say that the woe of the finally impenitent will be eternal, and I do not think it will." "Oh, is that all?" he answered; "there is no dispute between you and me. If you turn to Matthew xxv. 26, you will find that the dispute is between you and the Lord Jesus Christ, and I advise you to go immediately and settle it with Him."—The Sword and Trowel.

PRAY ALWAYS.

A recent German writer says: "The lark goes up singing towards heaven; but if she stops the motion of her wings then straightway she falls. So it is with him who prays not. Prayer is the moment of the wings of the soul: it bears us on heavenward; but without prayer he sinks in the filth of earthly impulses."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Dr. Rogers, the principal of Mr. Spurgeon's College, is retiring on account of old age. He has reached his eightieth year.

The working men's Protestant League have presented a memorial to the Premier, setting forth their alarm at the growth of Ritualism in the Church, and urging the appointment of a public prosecutor in ecclesiastical cases.

A telegram from Rome says that much displeasure has been aroused at the Vatican by the expressed intention of the Pope to create another batch of foreign cardinals. The Pontiff, however, has determined on another innovation, by throwing open the Academy of Noble Ecclesiastics to foreigners of gentle birth.

Mr Rassam, who is carrying on the work begun by the late Mr. George Smith, has just discovered at Babylon an octagonal cylinder, on the sides of which are engraved a history of the campaign of Sennacherib against King Hezekiah. This important find is to be sent to London for safe keeping in the British Museum.

The Pope has conferred the church of St. Giorgio in Velabro on Cardinal Newman. Of this, no one, not even the Cardinal, was aware until he pronounced the name, and it is not known whether it arose through some expression of an English preference for the Church of the patron saint of England, or because its clergy may have petitioned the Pope to give them the English Cardinal for its titular.

In the United Presbyterian Presbytery of Dundee on Tuesday the call to the Rev. David Macrae, Gourock, to the pastor of Well Wynd U. P. Church was considered, when a motion was carried by eleven to ten to proceed with the call in the usual manner as against a motion to delay till deliverance be given in the case against Mr. Macrae in connection with the recent Synod meeting. Notice of appeal was given.

The committee appointed by the U. P. Synod to deal with the Rev. David Macrae in reference to his recent supposed deviation from the standards of the Church, after a session of five hours with Mr. Macrae, submitted a half-dozen question to him to be answered at next sitting. Next day Mr. Macrae being still incorrigible they resolved to recommend that he should be suspended from his duties as a minister of the Church.

The Sea-Shell Mission.—This mission proposes to give some amusement and joy to the poor and, in many cases, sick children in the various homes and hospitals in London, by distributing to each inmate a box of sea-shells, to be gathered by the more fortunate boys and girls who visit or who reside at the sea-side. It is proposed each box should contain about 200 shells, with the name of the child to whom it is given written on it.

A deputation waited upon the Bishop of London on Monday with regard to the proposed annihilation of the churchyards of St. Leonard, Eastcheap, and St. John Baptist upon Walbrook by the Inner Circle Railway. It is intended that council shall appear before the committee, and secure, if possible, the preservation of these resting places of the dead, both of which are now laid out as gardens, and prior to 1846 have records of burials extending over a period of five centuries.

"The quality of the work now being done by the two committees of Revisers," says the New York Examiner and Chronicle, "is shown by this fact. The American Committee revised the Epistle to the Hebrews independently, the English provisional revision having failed to come to hand; in all 913 changes were selected, most of them comparatively unimportant. When the English committee compared this revision with their own, 476 of 913 changes proved to be identical with those that they had independently made. Such unanimity as this, in this instance, indicates that the revised version as a whole will represent the verdict of the best scholarship of both countries."

Proposed Union of Irish Presbyterian Churches.—The Irish General Assembly's Committee on Union met with the Union Committee of the Eastern Reformed Synod in Ireland, in Belfast on Friday last, and had a conference. A letter was read from the Moderator of the Secession Synod, lamenting existing differences, and expressing an earnest desire for union, if that could be effected on a satisfactory basis. It was unanimously resolved to recommend to the Supreme Courts represented, the desirability of continuing a committee on union, with the view of prosecuting and ultimately securing what all felt to be desirable—one Presbyterian Church in Ireland.

The Seventh General Conference of Christians of All Nations will assemble in Basle, Switzerland on August 31st, the proceedings extending through the following week, till September 7th.

On the First Day, Sunday, there will be reception of members and fraternal salutations in the great Hall of the "Vereinshaus."

Monday will be devoted to opening of the Conference by the president, and reports on the religious state of Protestantism in various countries. Successively the following subjects will be considered: The immutability of the Gospel of the Apostles; Christian education and the Modern state; Christianity and Modern Society; Missions; What saith the Apostolic Injunction to the members of the Evangelical Alliance. Lord's Supper on Sunday, and closing services. Daily prayer meetings will be held during the conference.

An interesting correspondence has recently found place in the columns of a Church journal with regard to the Vatican Decrees, and whether their acceptance is obligatory on members of the Church of Rome. There has been at least one instance of an English officer who was refused absolution by a priest because he could not give his assent to the newly-propagated dogma. It has been stated in words that can scarcely fail to be intelligible to men of the most humble intellectual capacities, that the admission to the Roman Catholic Church depends upon the acceptance of the decree on Infallibility by the late Vatican Council. The question, however, which is now vexing many inquiring minds is not so much the acceptance of the decrees, but their interpretation. Up to the present time no explanation has been given. It is said there are two English cardinals who ought to set good examples to their flock: whose opinions are totally at variance on the interpretation of the decrees. Cardinal Manning has taken a curious course; he accepts the decree, but admits that its meaning is so doubtful that all he has to do is to accept it!

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 11, 1879.

PROSELYTISM.

Having no regard to the particular circumstance which called out a recent article of the Raleigh Christian Advocate on the subject of proselytism, we, nevertheless, prior to any discussion desire to express our hearty concurrence with our cotemporary, in the opinion which he has expressed regarding the general subject.

Taking the term in its common acceptation, as the drawing away of persons from one Christian society to another, by arts or wiles appealing to human selfishness, or adroit sophisms addressed to weak understandings, we regard the practice as both discorteous and wicked; and this whether the means used be in private as addressed to individuals, or publicly as directed to exciting the prejudices or misleading the intellectual faculties of the masses.

We hold as perfectly consistent with the above the right of any evangelical denomination to teach freely, fully and fearlessly, its own distinctive doctrines, and by all honorable means so to present them, as to induce their acceptance by others, regard at all times being had to the fact, that the essential doctrines of salvation being infinitively superior to any opinions on non-essentials, these essential doctrines are not to be in anywise compromised or disparaged.

We believe in the unity of the Church catholic, as having for its supreme head the Lord Jesus Christ, for its common principle faith in Him as He is revealed in the Scriptures, and for its supreme rule of practice obedience to His commands. We accord to all, under the above, the absolute right to freedom of conscience, and liberty of interpretation of all things not clearly revealed in the word of God.

The evil of proselytism is not in the change of relations of sincere believers in Christ from one Church to another, for this may be, and sometimes is from clear convictions of duty; neither is it in greatest measure in the transference of those who are discontented, or who are seeking the promotion of any selfish interest, from one ecclesiastical connection to another. The withdrawal in such a case is not loss, nor the acquisition gain. As long as human nature is what it is, there will be in all Churches restless spirits, ever ready to regard their own privileges as inferior to those of others, to look with jaundiced eyes upon all that is about them, to magnify the errors or infirmities of those with whom they are associated, and to regard with so much of admiration as they can command, whatever appears to be different from, or contrary to, what is to be seen or what is taught in their own communion. Hard things these to write, but written not in malice, but of pity. They are to be pitied. Unhappy themselves they are obstacles in the way of all spiritual progress to themselves and others. They are not irreclaimable, the grace of God is sufficient for this work as for all others, but it is among such that proselytism revels. The insidious enemy vastly increases the difficulty of reclamation. When the unhappy victim of discontent should be led to see that the correction must begin in his own heart, and in his own practice, when his neglected duties should be taken up, and prayer and the study of the word of God should engage his attention, he is indirectly taught that his conduct is justifiable, that another pastor, another Church would be the panacea for all his ills.

Scarcely less mischievous is proselytism when under the garb of friendship, perhaps of saintliness, it enters homes where peace and contentment reign, insinuates the seeds of dissatisfaction and nourishes the growth of disquiet and unrest.

In its public display it proceeds on a plan different yet not in all respects dissimilar. A minister possibly visits a community to hold protracted service, any facilities which representatives of opinions differing from his own may offer are not disdained, for a while evangelical sermons are preached, members from all denominations attend, but ere the meetings close not only are his own denominational tenets presented and enforced—this is allowable—but the opinions of others, unfairly represented, are held up for ridicule and execration. The result of all is to beget and disseminate hate and scandalize Christianity.

Such practices, public or private, are done in the name of zeal for the cause of Christ; yet they would exalt particular rites or peculiar dogmas above repentance and faith, and inverting the proper order, place the Church, nay, a mere branch of the Church, above the Great Head of the Church.

We hail all, and we claim in this to represent Presbyterianism—we hail all who name the name of Christ, and look to Him and to Him alone, as the only, and the sure, foundation of the sinner's hope, as our brethren, yet firm in our persuasion that Presbyterian doctrine and polity are founded upon Scripture, and to be preferred to all other modes of administration and forms of belief, we do admit the Presbyterian Christian to the very innermost circle of our affections.

We admire and respect the man of strong convictions, even in the non-essentials of religion—convictions intelligently formed and honorably maintained, however his opinions may differ from our own, for it is he that is to be ever found devising plans and using means for the promotion of the glory of our common Lord. We would have him with us if he will, but we would not over-persuade him, content that we see eye to eye on the great plan of salvation, and may labor together here, knowing that we shall receive the same reward hereafter.

The Charlotte Observer states that Rev. T. P. Johnston, who was for nearly twenty years prior to the war a missionary among the Turks, is having a pamphlet printed narrating "The Experience of a Missionary Family in Turkey." The book cannot fail to be interesting, and we hope the venerable author will find abundant success in its sale.

THE DANCING QUESTION.

The Southern Home says:

The Southern Presbyterian Assembly has sustained the Georgia Synod in Deacon Block' case and rescinded the action of the Atlanta Presbytery in confirming the Deacon's expulsion for allowing dancing at his house. The Deacon's full restoration to church membership is ordered. The conclusion from this seems to be, that dancing and theatre going by church members are not subject to judicial punishment, but that the church simply advises against such practices as having a demoralizing tendency. Rev. Dr. A. W. Miller, of the First Presbyterian Church, in Charlotte, however, claims that the General Assembly has left it as a matter of discretion and discipline to the respective churches. He regards membership in his church as a pledge not to frequent such places, and shall insist.

The decision in the Synod of Georgia coming up on appeal, did not decide the question of the propriety of dancing on its merits pure and simple. The mode of procedure in the session and Presbytery came under review and had to receive full and fair consideration; so Doctor Miller is right in his interpretation, for the Assembly in sustaining the Synod of Georgia, did not decide the main question. The deliverance of 1877 expressly states (after condemning the practice of dancing) that the extent of the mischief done depends largely upon circumstances. The church session is therefore the only court competent to judge what remedy to apply." * * * *

The Assembly just adjourned was overtured—it will be remembered:

Are the deliverances of 1865, 1866 and 1877 on the subject of worldly amusements to be accepted and enforced as law by judicial process?

In answering, No, to the above overture the Assembly made the following deliverance:

That these deliverances do not require judicial prosecution expressly, and could not require it without violating the spirit of of our law.

Second—That none of these deliverances were made by the Assembly in a strict judicial capacity, but were all deliverances in thesi, and therefore can be considered as only didactic, advisory and monitory.

Third—That the Assembly has no power to issue orders to institute process, except according to the provisions of Book of Discipline, chapter vii., in the old, and chapter —— in the revised book; and all these provisions imply that the court of remote jurisdiction is dealing with a particular court of original jurisdiction, and not with such courts in general. The injunction to us, therefore upon the sessions to exercise discipline in the matter of wordly amusements are to be understood only as utterances of the solemn testimony of these Assemblies against a great and growing evil in the Church. * * * *

In thus defining the meaning and interest of action of former Assemblies, this Assembly does not mean in the slightest degree to interfere with the power of discipline in any of its forms, which is given to the courts below by the constitution of the Church; or to intimate that discipline, in its sternest form, may not be necessary, in some cases, in order to arrest the crisis in question. The occasion, the mode, the degree, and the kind of discipline must be left to the courts of original jurisdiction under the checks and restraints of the constitution. All that is designed is, to deny the power of the Assembly to make law for the Church in the matter of "offences," or to give to its deliverances in these the force of judicial decisions.

The late Assembly does not invalidate the action of previous Assemblies, but only defines them. This in our view clearly leaves the session to the court of original jurisdiction, any action being, as by the constitution, subject to the right of appeal.

The General Assembly, let it be understood, does not decide that any session may regard dancing as a thing indifferent, (having always condemned the practice, it could not do so without self stultification), but leaves to any session to determine "the occasion, the mode, the degree and the kind of discipline."

GIVE AND YOU WILL LOVE TO GIVE.

The following copied from the Edinburgh Review is an extract from a speech at the Annual Breakfast and meeting of Dissenters from the Established Church. The speaker was chairman of the meeting. There is a point in it which mutatis mutandis might be well applied to some of our churches.

What he wished specially to bring before them was that he objected to Establishments of religion, because they interfered with the Christian duty of every man doing what he could to support his ordinances. He remembered reading a debate in the Established Church, during which a professor of that Church stated it was a remarkable thing that though Established Churches were open and people had nothing to pay, still they went to the Dissenting Churches. Suppose the Established Church were to say to a man—Come to our Church, and you will not be asked to read your Bible, or to pray, or to keep family worship, or even to observe the law's morality—would any one look upon that as a recommendation to join the Church of Scotland? If there was any reason why you should not, that was a good reason. Supporting religion and giving money was a part of a right Christian training, as well as prayer, and the reading of the word of God. To say to me—Come to the Established Church and pay nothing, was in a sense equivalent to saying—Come to our Church and you will not be asked to pray to God. All things were parallel, and that was his objection to the Established Church, that it did away with a part of the Christian training of those who supported it. Look at this curious and significant fact. For everything in connection with the United Presbyterian Church they had to pay—for church buildings, for manses, and for the support of ministers, and yet, while that was the case, the average contribution of the body for mission work alone was 4s 6d per member. The average contribution from the Free Church purely for missionary objects was 3s 11d per head, and they had besides to build their churches and manses, and support their ministers. Well, the Established Church, the members of which pay neither minister nor build churches or manses, how much do you think they pay? Scarcely 2s per member; the Church that has nothing to pay in supporting ordinances, was doing less for missionary work than the Dissenters who had to pay for the support of their own ordinances. That was a serious objection to the Established Church—it was doing away, and designedly so, with a part of their Christian training, which was very necessary. The great sin of human nature was selfishness, and there was nothing in which a man's selfishness centres more than in money. If you can break down his selfishness in regard to money, you can almost break it down altogether.

Do we not find everywhere, that those who pay least for pulpit ministrations, or other local expenses—vacant churches for example, invariably pay least to the benevolent causes of the Church?—and this outside of the question of ability.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

WHO WILL RESPOND?

A generous Christian lady who has long been an active member of a Presbyterian church in North Carolina, sent me two hundred dollars last fall to pay the expenses of the orphan of a lamented minister in the Rome female college for one year. The young lady is here, earnest, hopeful and successful in her work. In due time she will be prepared to teach and thus support herself and become a prominently useful member of society.

A well-known pastor in South Carolina, has requested me to take on the first of September next, another orphan of a deceased minister. She is entirely destitute of means and is anxious to be prepared to teach.

Who will help this needy daughter of a fallen prophet? If no one like my noble friend, in North Carolina can undertake to meet her expenses for a year, many may write and accomplish this needful service. Letters of inquiry and contributions for this purpose will receive due attention if addressed to the Rev. J. M. M. Caldwell, Rome, Georgia.

NEWS NOTES.

Four persons united with the Presbyterian church at Goldsboro, Sabbath last, three on examination and one by letter.

Rev. Roger Martin and family have arrived at Shoe Heel, and he has taken charge of the Presbyterian churches of that place and Centre.

The Staunton (Va.) papers speak of Rev. Dr. Wilson's sermon before the Augusta Female Seminary, as exceedingly appropriate, impressive and eloquent.

The postoffice address of Rev. C. M. Shepperson, D. D., is changed from Red Banks, N. C., to Woodville, Miss. Correspondents and others are requested to note this change.

In a private letter to us Rev. C. A. Munroe writes from Crystal Springs, Miss.:

"State of religion in our town encouraging. Not a saloon within the corporation limits since the 1st of February. Less desecration of the Sabbath in the way of social visiting and pleasure rides. My congregation larger and more attentive. Union prayer meetings every Sabbath evening."

We regret to learn that Rev. Roderick Henderson, who preached for two or three Sabbaths at Lexington, N. C., with great acceptance to the congregation of the Presbyterian church at that place, declines to entertain a call to the pastorate of the church. He thinks location in a more southern latitude is required by his health.

SMYRNA CHURCH.

At a recent communion at Smyrna church the hearts of God's people were made to rejoice by the addition of nine persons to the church, nearly all of whom are in the full vigor of youth. A few days ago the session received another member at the advanced age of 72 years. Within a little over twelve months there have been eighteen added to this church on examination. The Lord be praised for these encouraging manifestations of His presence and favor.

ORDINATION AND INSTALLATION.

DEAR BRO. McLAURIN—We have had a very delightful adjourned meeting of Orange Presbytery at Reidsville. It was held for the purpose of ordaining and installing licentiate D. Irvin Craig as pastor of that congregation. There was preaching on Friday night, May 30th, and Saturday and Sunday, both morning and night. Bro. Craig was examined in all the branches required by our book, and preached on Saturday night an earnest and clear cut sermon on Justification. On Sabbath morning Rev. C. Miller preached a very earnest and appropriate sermon from the words, "Now, then, we are ambassadors for Christ." The congregation was very large and attentive. After sermon the pastor elect was solemnly set apart by prayer and the laying on of hands, and every one present seemed deeply impressed by this simple but beautiful ceremony of our Church. Afterwards Bro. A. Currie delivered a solemn and forcible charge to the pastor, and Rev. H. T. Darnell charged the people. We had beautiful weather, were most kindly entertained, and felt that the people were full of gladness and hopefulness, in securing one who has already greatly endeared himself to them as a minister, and one who gives bright hopes of usefulness in his labors, as the successor of our dear Bro. Doll. The services closed with a sermon at night by Rev. H. T. Darnell to a very large and attentive congregation. May the blessing of the Master ever rest upon the holy relation that day formed at Reidsville. H. T. D.

OLD GUILFORD SPEAKS AGAIN.

MR. EDITOR—For the third time have this people (of Gilmer and Morehead townships, in which Greensboro stands,) gone through the fiery ordeal against the whiskey ring, but by a kind and merciful Providence right has prevailed against this deadly enemy to the human race, and these good and true people have faced the enemy at the polls and defeated him again. The struggle was desperate, but had there not been indifference on the part of many good men we would have beaten them very badly indeed. The friends of this law say it is good, and, properly executed, will have very largely the effect for which it was made, viz: the closing of retail licensed bar-rooms, and driving the sale of any spirits into the dark corners, cellars and back rooms to be drank on the sly. This is shamefully too much the case, but withal, our best judges estimate that there is not one-tenth, possibly less, sold now that was three years ago, and certainly not one in ten, perhaps one in twenty, as many persons are seen drunk now that there were three years ago, with eleven open bars. Then has the law, as it has been even partially executed, proved of no effect? The bitterest enemies of prohibition answer Yes, when we tell them there is less disturbance on the street, fewer nuisances dotted here and there, and ladies can go any street alone without fear of molestation. I really believe, too, the Prohibitory Law has been of as much, or more, benefit to the colored people than the whites. God has been merciful in answer to the thousands of prayers for success that went up from His people assembled together in a concert of prayer on Sabbath afternoon. It is a great wonder that people all over the State have not taken hold of this Law and assisted in driving from the land the worst of evils, which leads to most trouble and misery for time and eternity. M.

ADJOURNED MEETING OF CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

Concord Presbytery met at Concord church (Iredell) May 30th, 1879, and was opened with prayer by Rev. T. G. Thurston, last Moderator, present.

Ministers present: R. B. Anderson, T. G. Thurston, W. A. Wood, R. W. Boyd, J. A. Ramsay, P. P. Winn and William W. Pharr. Ruling Elders: J. Witherspoon, of Statesville, and H. T. Burke, of Concord church (Iredell.)

Rev. J. A. Ramsay was made Temporary Clerk.

Rev. B. L. Beall was received on certificate from the Presbytery of North Texas. After examination and his name enrolled, he was granted permission to labor at Lenoir one half his time and elsewhere in the bounds of this Presbytery, at discretion, until the next regular meeting of this body.

Rev. S. T. Martin, of Mecklenburg Presbytery, W. R. McLelland, of Eastern Texas Presbytery, and W. B. Pressly, of the First Presbytery of the A. R. Church, being present, were invited to sit as corresponding members.

Leave was granted C. W. Robinson, licentiate, to labor out side the bounds of this Presbytery until its next regular meeting.

H. W. Flinn, candidate, presented himself for examination, with a view to licensure, when most of the time of Friday and Saturday was taken up with his examination, and on Saturday evening, the 31st, Presbytery proceeded to license him in due form to preach the Gospel as a probationer for the holy ministry.

Permission was also granted him to labor outside the bounds of this Presbytery until next meeting.

On Sabbath morning, 10½ o'clock, June 1st, Presbytery met and proceeded, according to order, to the installation of the Rev. P. P. Winn, when Rev. W. A. Wood preached the installation sermon and proposed the constitutional questions. Rev. R. B. Anderson charged the pastor and Rev. Wm. W. Pharr the people. After the installation services the Presbytery adjourned in due form.

The meeting was an exceedingly pleasant one. The congregations were good all the time, and on Sabbath a large number of people were unable to get in the church, and yet there was not the least disorder. The church over which Brother Winn is placed is one of our most interesting country charges. It is a wide field of usefulness with good missionary territory around. One member of that church remarked to me that he thought there were about two hundred Presbyterian families within the territory of that church, and it is gratifying to us to have a man of such diligence, energy and ability in that field.

WM. W. PHARR, S. C.

RELIGIOUS FEELING IN LINCOLNTON.

Our correspondent "R. Z. J." writes that a most fraternal spirit exists between the Methodist and Presbyterian churches in Lincolnton. The Methodists have time and again tendered their church to the Presbyterians, and the latter have reciprocated, as is shown by the following resolutions:

At a meeting of the Shelby Methodist Church, held on May 18th, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The Shelby Methodist church building is now about completed for our reception to hold divine service; and whereas, we, the members of the Shelby Methodist church, have been occupying the Presbyterian church during the erection of our church building; therefore,

Resolved, That the sincere thanks of the members of the Shelby Methodist church are hereby tendered to the pastor and members of the Shelby Presbyterian church for the use of their building, which was so kindly offered us.

Resolved, That we trust the mutual fraternal regards and Christian fellowship that have prevailed may continue.

Resolved,, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the pastor of Shelby Presbyterian church, and also be published in the Shelby Aurora. H. T. HUDSON, Pastor.

R. B. MILLER, Recording Steward.

I am glad to say they have erected a beautiful brick church fronting the public square, which will comfortably accommodate a larger congregation, with modern improvements. I am glad also to be able to say that the Baptist church was often occupied by our ministers before ours was built.

Two Baptist ministers are conducting a protracted meeting here (Lincolnton) this week. Large numbers attend every night, the weather being delightful after refreshing summer showers.

The Reformed Presbyterian Classis have appointed a minister to preach here one Sabbath a month.

Our farmers are gathering the harvest. The wheat is good; some think it better than last year. A great deal of cotton is cultivated in this beautiful grain country, more and more every year.

CAMERON, N. C.

You will be gratified to learn of the organization of a Presbyterian church at Cameron. Agreeably to the instructions of the Presbytery of Fayetteville, the Committee of Presbyterial Visitation, consisting of Rev. D. Fairly, Rev. W. S. Lacy and Evander McGilvary, at as early a date as practicable, visited Union Church to ascertain if the way be clear to organize a church at Cameron, which is in the bounds of Union congregation and on the southeastern border. Accordingly, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 13th and 14th, were spent at Union Church, and after divine service each day the committee had long and earnest conferences with the session and deacons of Union church, and examined carefully into its affairs. It gave profound pleasure to the committee to discover the frank, considerate and Christian spirit of the pastor, officers and members of this church, their ready co-operation and friendly regard, in reference to the new enterprise at Cameron. The way was therefore found to be entirely clear, and was greatly facilitated by the kindly consideration and aid shown by Union church.

On Thursday and Friday, May 15th and 16th, the committee visited Cameron. Divine service was held on both days, two sermons being preached each day. Notice was duly given that the organization would be formally effected on Friday. Twenty-five persons, furnishing certificates from various churches, covenanted together and were organized—two elders, Daniel McIntyre and Fergus Ferguson, and one deacon, Gideon McFadyen, chosen. Mr. McIntyre had been an elder in Buffalo church. The other officers were solemnly ordained and all inducted into office. It was a pleasing and impressive scene, and witnessed by many for the first time. Of the twenty-five members thus united in this new church eleven were from Union, seven from Cypress, three from Buffalo, and the remainder from various churches.

Cameron is a station on the Raleigh and Augusta Air-Line railroad, about six miles from Union, seven from Cypress, nine from Saint Andrew's and somewhat further from Euphronia and Buffalo churches. Apart from the distance from the neighboring churches, many had been attracted to settle in the village who could only attend divine worship in the place. Presbyterians have been slow in seizing strategic points that naturally belong to them, and it is fortunate that a church has been organized here under such favorable auspices and with the generous good wishes of all. Cameron is a Scotch and a historic name in Presbyterianism. There is a great deal of earnestness and hopefulness in the new organization that bears the honored name. The people of the village are hearty, hospitable and energetic, and take great interest in what affects their enterprising town. May a favoring Providence be over the town and the church. It only remains to be added that Rev. G. M. Gibbs is the minister of the church at Cameron, and has a field promising immediate encouragement and increase. He has been with them more than a year, and is greatly beloved. W. S. L.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The announced intention of the new ruler of Eastern Roumelia to discard the fez which is a symbol of Turkish authority, and adopt the Bulgarian hat, is creating great excitement in Turkey. The time when great matters could be controlled by the Sultan is past. He insists on the style of hat and will no doubt be accommodated, but the ruler will be none the more Turkish on that account.

Replying to complaint that two ministers of the Reformed Church were appointed Professors of Theology, in lieu of the consistories being called on to nominate candidates, Mr. Grevy, President of France, said:

"I thank you for your visit, gentlemen, but you are wrong in feeling alarm as to the intentions of the government, for the government cannot harbor any hostile feeling against Protestantism. I myself consider the Protestant Church as the mother of democracy in modern times. If the government entertained an intention to interfere with the independence or dignity of any Church, which is not the case, the Reformed Church is the last whose liberty it would think of restricting."

We receive many letters of an encouraging nature, and give our readers the benefit of this one from a North Carolinian, for many years past a resident of a city in Texas:

"Your draft upon me for all back dues and one year's subscription in advance to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN will be duly honored. Would send you the amount if I knew exactly what it is, but do not and prefer to send you the money the other way. You will pardon me for having you to call my attention to the matter so often and I am obliged to you for continuing it to my address. It is as interesting to me as it ever was, perhaps more so, and I hope my name will remain on the subscription books, so long as its columns are filled with wholesome food and it wears such neat and sensible garments."

The draft was sent and promptly paid.

Gentle reader, do you owe the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN?

Our neighbor, the Wilmington Star, with regard to the funeral of the brother of the infidel Ingersoll presents the following extract from the columns of the Richmond State, and adds the comment which is tersely appropriate and saves all words from us.

"A handsome casket containing the body was placed on stools covered with black velvet in an apartment at the late private residence of the deceased. The darkened chamber was brilliantly illuminated by gaslight, bereaved relatives and near friends gathered closely about the casket, and Gen. Garfield, Senators David Davis, Voorhees, Blaine and Allison, and a few others, stood by. Bob Ingersoll, standing at the head, drew from his pocket a few pages of manuscript, which he laid on the coffin lid, and read with trembling voice a eulogy of deceased. It was eloquent and full of brotherly affection, but contained no reference to religions dogmas except indirectly in the closing paragraph. The impressiveness of the peculiar scene was heightened by the fierce beating of the storm without upon the darkened windows."

In such a scene how would the blessed words of the Master ring out, "I am the resurrection and the life."

MONTHLY REVIEW.

Our latest intelligence from the Soochow Mission is to the 18th of March. Mr. Davis writes that he and his teachers preach every afternoon in the street chapel. "The audiences are full, quiet and attentive." Miss Safford's health, since her return from Japan is very good. Mr. and Mrs. DuBose were at Shanghai, having been compelled to take their eldest child there for medical advice. The child was decidedly convalescent at the date of his letter.

We have letters from Campinas to the 2d of April. Mrs. Boyle, with her two children, arrived in New York on the 12th of March, after a speedy but somewhat rough passage. She returned with the hope of recruiting her impaired health. Mention is made of the safe arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Dabney at Campinas. The missionaries are all well, Mr. Lane was about to set out on a preaching tour to Rio Claro.

Our intelligence from Athens, which is to the 12th of April, is that the missionaries were all well. It was expected that Mr. Sampson or Dr. Kalopothakes would have to go to Constantinople in June, to attend a meeting of missionaries in relation to some matters connected with their missionary work.

A pleasant letter has been received from Miss Ronzone, of the 15th of April. The number of her boarders had so increased that she found it necessary to enlarge her accommodations. Two of her more advanced pupils had been made the subjects of divine grace, and were expected to unite themselves to the Waldensian church in Milan.

A letter from Mr. Hall, of the Matamoras Mission, of the 15th of April, reports: "We are all well, and all the departments of our work are going on as usual. Our Brownsville congregations have increased very much of late. Some of the higher classes of Mexicans are becoming interested in the preaching of the Gospel."

A letter has been received from Rev. J. Rockwell Smith, of the Pernambuco Mission, of the 12th of April, which is mainly occupied in relation to the great importance of reinforcing his mission. His health was good, and his general work going on as usual.—Missionary.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Yensie Walton. By Mrs. S. R. Graham Clark. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co. $1.50.

"Yensie Walton" is a story of great power, by a new author. It aims to show that God uses a stern discipline to form the noblest characters, and that the greatest trials of life often prove the greatest blessings. This story is subordinate to this moral aim, and the earnestness of the author breaks out into occasional preaching. But the story is full of striking incident and scenes of great pathos, with occasional gleams of humor and fun by way of relief to the more tragic parts of the narrative. The characters are strongly drawn, and, in general, are thoroughly human, not gifted with impossible perfections but having those infirmities of the flesh which makes us all akin. It will take rank among the best and most popular Sunday-school books.

"Six Month's at Mrs. Pryor" is a sweet story of womanly tact combined with Christian trust. A widow, with scanty means, makes home happy for a group of children, restless, wayward and aspiring, like many American children of our day. The mother's love holds them, her thrift cares for them, her firmness restrains, and her Christian words and life win them to noble aims and living. The influence of the christian household is widely felt, and the quiet transforming leaven works in many homes. By Emily Adams. Illustrated. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co. 1.25.

Walks to Emmaus. The first of a series of twenty sermons intended for the Christian year. The sermons are by Rev. Nehemiah Adams, of Boston, and are edited by his son William H. Adams. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, publishers. Price $1. Dr. Adams was a singularly correct writer. He did not discard fancy where confusion of thought would not result, and his power of adapting his discourses to all grades of intellect was remarkable.

The Preacher and Homiletic Monthly is again in. It seems to be growing in favor. It contains sermons by Rev. C. F. Deems, D. D., J. D. Fulton, D. D., Rev. Canon Liddon, D. D., Rev. Joseph Parker, D. D., Rev. Prof. E. P. Thwing and many others. This number contains also, A Model Prayer-meeting Service, by Rev. Lewis O. Thompson, whose book on "the Improvement of Prayer-meetings" has passed through its fourth edition; a continuation of "The Suggestive Commentary on a Harmony of the Gospels," by the Editor; "Sermonic Criticism," "Preachers Exchanging Views," etc. This Monthly must prove very valuable to all clergymen and thological students. Price, $2.50 per year; 25 cents single copy. Religious Newspaper Agency, New York.

The Story of the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, told in simple language for the young. Published by Charles Foster. For sale by J. L. Shotwell, agent, Presbyterian Publishing Co., 1001 Main street, Richmond, Va. Plain cloth, $1.25; fancy cloth, black and gold, $1.75.

This is the tenth thousand of this book. It has been revised and enlarged and two hundred illustrations have been added. Years of experience in teaching—in Sabbath school and the home circle—showed the author the need of a simple version of the main portion of the Bible, such as a Christian parent would give by a brief running explanation as he read to his children. The narrative portions of the Scriptures with its precepts and doctrines are pleasantly given; the events in different books being woven into a continuous narrative, e. g. the history of the Kingdom of Israel and the life of Christ in the four Gospels. Uninteresting genealogies and lists of tabernacle furniture and many prophecies, are omitted. The language of the Bible is closely followed, only such brief explanations being thrown in as are needed to render it clear to any child. It will be a valuable assistant to any family. Children are delighted with it. We have tried it and know whereof we speak. The profuse and vivid illustrations are magnets and teachers too. Language and picture make the Scripture plain, so that the Bible book will eclipse and supplant the wonderful Sunday school novels. Two or three copies should be placed in every Sabbath school library. It would be a good plan to issue the book in four parts, so that a child could read one in a week. We commend the book for the colored people. We know of nothing so good for them.

Mr. Froude modestly entitles this elaborate history of Julius Cæsar a "Sketch," because the materials do not exist for a portrait which shall be at once authentic and complete." But he has wrought out of the existing materials a most delightful book. It is brilliant in its rhetoric, philosophic in analysis and discussion, picturesque in grouping historic incidents, artistic in painting character and motives, and painstaking in gathering, sifting and discriminating among dim facts or conflicting statements and legends. Mr. Froude shows his power of lifting the past into light, and thrilling the reader with sympathetic feelings, as in panoramic distinctness the great hero of this historic epoch moves on in grand achievements. Many details, which have been accepted as verities about Cæsar, Mr. Froude has felt constrained to discard as unsupported by good evidence, and Cæsar's character stands in fairer colors than some have painted it, and he is justly regarded as a lover of his country. Wonderfully clear pictures are drawn of the condition of the Roman State and society, and of Cicero, Sylla, Marius, Milo, Pompey, Clodius, Crassus, and all the prominent actors in the tragic drama of that age. No one can read the sketch without receiving pleasure and increased knowledge. Messrs. Scribners present the book in good style, with a fine portrait of Cæsar, and an elaborate map of Gallia.

The Exhibitor: A quarterly, devoted to the interest of those who use magic lanterns. C. T. Milligan, Philadelphia. May, 1879.

The Primary Teacher's Monthly: Evangelical and Undenominational, Mrs. W. F. Crafts, editor. June, 1879. 60 cents a year. Western Sunday School Publishing Co. John Fairbanks, Chicago, Ill.

The Earnest Worker: June, 1879. Per annum 60 cents; five copies to one address 50 cents. Presbyterian Committee of Publication. By Whittet & Shepperson, Richmond, Va. The exposition of the International Questions is by Professor George Howe, D. D., Columbia Theological Seminary. Every teacher in our Sabbath schools in North Carolina and elsewhere ought to have a copy of this monthly.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. T. McBryde was installed pastor of the Presbyterian church at Bainbridge, Ga., on May 25th.

Rev. J. L. McKeehan will serve the church at Hot Springs, Ark., as stated supply. The prospects of the church are encouraging.

Rev. H. C. Moore was on May 18th installed pastor of the two churches he has been supplying. Address him at Hamburg, Ark.

Rev. W. C. Caldwell is stated supply of the Presbyterian church at Harper's Ferry, W. Va. Correspondents are requested to address him at that place.

Mr. Carter R. Bishop was ordained on Sabbath last to the office of deacon in the Second Presbyterian church, at Petersburg, Va., to which he had been elected by the congregation.—Central Presbyterian.

The Westminster church in Nashville, Tenn., in charge of Rev. T. M. McConnell, received five additions to its membership at its last communion. On a recent Sabbath eleven children were baptized.

Rev. W. M. McPheeters who lately declined continuing as stated supply of the church at Liberty, Va., has accepted an invitation to take charge of two chapels in charge of the First Presbyterian church of that place.

We are pleased to learn, through a letter written in Rome the latter part of April, that the Rev. William S. Bean, who has been absent in Europe about a year is now on his way home, in excellent health, and will probably be in America by the 20th inst.—Southern Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. W. E. Boggs pastor of the Second Presbyterian church of Memphis, Tenn., assisted by Rev. J. W. Hoyt of Nashville, has been holding protracted services in his church. Many persons are serious and have expressed a desire to serve Christ, and many are expected to unite with the church.

Ten members were received into Mt. Zion church in Hancock county Ga., on May 11th, and on the same occasion Maj. H. D. Beman was ordained ruling elder. The congregation of Sparta church in the same county have raised $325 towards repairing their house of worship and hope soon to receive sufficient means to improve it greatly both in appearance and in comfort.

A committee of Lexington Presbytery organized a church at Walker's Creek, Va., on 30th ulto. The new church has thirty-one members, twenty-nine were received on certificate from New Providence church, and two on profession of their faith. Two ruling elders and two deacons were ordained and installed.

Rev. J. B. McFerrin of the Methodist and Rev. J. H. Warren of the Cumberland churches, have with Rev. J. S. Arbuthnot, D. D., pastor of the Presbyterian church at Murfreesboro, Tenn., been laboring together for eight weeks immediately previous to May 11th. About one hundred and sixty persons of the two sexes have turned from the world. Fifty-three persons have united with the Presbyterian church.

Rev. A. H. Price writes to the Christian Observer: Recently I was made the recipient of a neat suit of clothing by the ladies of the Presbyterian church in Franklin county, Va., for which I desire to express thanks. May God bless the donors with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus. These tokens of affection do much to strengthen the bond, binding pastor and people together in the service of our Divine Master.

At a meeting of the Presbytery of Mississippi, held at Fayette on the 30th ult., the pastoral relation between Rev. John S. Shaw and the Bethel church was dissolved. Rev. Mr. Shaw has accepted the office of Presbyterial evangelist, and will assume, from the first of June, the charge of the field occupied by the churches of Pine Ridge, Greenwood, Fayette and Red Lick. He is authorized to act as colporteur as well as evangelist of the Presbytery.—S. W. Presbyterian.

The St. Louis Presbyterian learns that Rev. Dr. J. N. Waddell, D. D., LL. D., has been elected Chancellor of the Southwestern Presbyterian University, at Clarksville, Tenn., and adds that Dr. Waddell's well earned and widely extended reputation as an educator will add much to the institution at Clarksville should he conclude to accept the appointment. The Education cause of our Church we agree with our cotemporary, will suffer by the removal of Dr. Waddell, and yet thinking that injustice has been done to his services, it would not surprise us to learn of his acceptance.

The Presbyterian church at Shelbyville, Tenn., has recently enjoyed a very pleasant and profitable meeting, in which the Rev. E. A. Grover was ably assisted by the Rev. E. O. Frierson, of Edgefield, Tenn., who did most of the preaching. Five persons were received into the church, all of whom will doubtless prove to be valuable accessions. Wanderers were reclaimed, and the people of God strengthened and encouraged. At a congregational meeting held on the second Sabbath in May, Messrs. T. P. Wilhoite and Emmet A. Coldwell were elected ruling elders, and Messrs. John R. Dean and Hugh Eskin, deacons. Within the past year one of the most comfortable and eligible residences in town, that sold several years ago for $4,000 in gold, was secured as a parsonage for $2,400. The honor and credit of this work is due almost entirely to the ladies of the Aid Society, who made a large part of the money by their hands. We have lost very heavily by death during the past two years, and yet the church seems to be doing more both at home and for outside causes than it has for years. In addition to paying the pastor's salary promptly and fully, it gave $80 to Foreign Missions and over $60 to Education, and liberally to the other causes.—Christian Observer.

GENERAL.

The Church Messenger published at Winston, N. C., and edited by Rev. W. S. Bean, is neatly printed and contains a large amount of reading matter. It certainly bears the impress of ability in the editorial management, and will no doubt serve its branch of Christ's Church well. Bishops Atkinson and Lyman endorse and recommend it. It ought to be sustained by Episcopalians, and we heartily add that we trust it will.

On Sabbath, June 1st, Rev. Z. Doty at St. Peter's Episcopal church, Charlotte, N. C., while repeating the general prayer for rulers, &c., swooned. He was carried to the vestry room and soon revived, but was unable to close the services.

Rev. Mr. McPherson and his wife, are conducting exercises in the Methodist church Wilmington. There is great excitement and large accessions to the church will no doubt result.

ECLECTICISMS.

WHY NOT?

Examiner and Chronicle:

"Many of our readers intend to leave a part of all their property to our denominational enterprises. Why not do it now? Sure enough—why not now? The dead never give—they only relinquish. Reader, which will you do?"

DO NOT MISTAKE.

Richmond Christian Advocate:

Let us beware lest we mistake men with a nimble tongue for men of affairs. Moses stuttered, but he led Israel out of the wilderness. Aaron was an orator, and made the golden calf. Eloquence is superb exaggeration. A battle fought with a kaleidoscope for a field-glass will always end in rout.

WHERE IT LEADS.

Christian Register:

"Protestants may as well take notice that a doctrine in Catholic argument against public schools, leads not only to the subversion of their right to any voice in public education, but also to the conclusion that no true Catholic ought to submit one day longer than can be helped to a 'godless' government, nor to pay taxes, obey laws, or defend a State in which the Catholic doctrine is not the supreme law."

TRIALS NECESSAYY.

Sunday School Times:

Sunshine abounds everywhere, but only where the rain or dew follows is there life. The moon has sunshine enough, but no rain; hence it is a dead world, a lifeless cinder." Is not this equally true in the spiritual world? Those who have in their sky no portent of trial or warning of the necessity of struggle against sin, are not those whose Christian lives are most beautiful and most fruitful.

NOT IF IT WAS MY BOY.

National Sunday School Teacher:

The late Horace Mann, in delivering an address at the opening of some reformatory institution for boys, made the remark that if only one boy were saved it would be worth all the institution cost. Being taken to task by some "practical" man for making such a statement as that, to a question whether he had not over colored the matter somewhat, his unanswerable reply was, "Not if he was my boy." And there is not a boy saved anywhere who is not "my boy" to some one. No institution that ever saved a boy has seemed too costly to the parents of that boy.

IMPORTANT.

Herald and Presbyter:

It is important to have good singing in the house of God, and to this end there must be leaders. A good choir is a great help in the service, but it requires more than musical knowledge to make a good church singer. As a minister must, with his learning, have a personal interest in the Gospel preached, so the singer should be a child of God, and enter both with the spirit and understanding into the service of song. Musical committees who determine their choice of singers simply by musical diplomas, or according to the quality and quantity of voices, or from their ability to please those who frequent the opera or concert halls, make a mistake, the results of which will be felt by all who enter into the service for which they thus provide leaders.

THE MIGHTIEST FORCES.

Christian Intelligencer:

There is that which is higher and better, stronger, more enduring, and more influential than half a million of dollars. It is a human soul enlightened, sanctified, strengthened, wielded by the grace of God. The mightiest forces among men are spirits such as Augustine, Luther, Calvin, Knox, Wesley and Whitefield. They win multitudes to Christ, sanctify the fountains of thought, establish powers which work mightily through generations, and are invincible through the truth and grace of God residing in them. Christians are the stewards of God, and are responsible to him for the use of the property he gives them. Those in comfortable circumstances are accountable for their thousands, and the rich for their hundreds of thousands and millions. They are as much bound to give according to their ability as other men of narrow incomes and limited prospects.

WISDOM FOR YOUNG PREACHERS.

Zion's Herald:

We must not overlook the human secret of our pulpit success. Our habit of early developing the speaking power of our young men, of encouraging the public exercise of their gifts, of accustoming them to think upon their feet, to look an audience in the face, and to readily clothe their thoughts with clear and forcible words, is of invaluable service. There is no human advantage that will compensate the loss of this talent. Andover is not exhausted, but Phillips church looks to an itinerant university for its pulpit supply. There is abundant use for the broadest scholarship, but all knowledge and the widest reading will be well-nigh valueless in the preacher who has not a ready, magnetic and forceful address, so far as influencing others is concerned. He may be a good man, a prudent man, a fine scholar, but if he cannot arrest the attention, and hold his audience while he preaches, the great body of the people will prefer the shallow, untrained, sonorous, passionate, powerful pleader, and speaker, who touches their hearts and rouses their enthusiasm. When broad learning is married to beautiful and forceful address, and all is baptized of the Holy Spirit, the result is blessed in the extreme.

The Christian Union commenting upon the disposition of some of the clergymen of Chicago to compromise with the Sabbath breakers, particularly the liquor sellers, well says:

The only way to fight for a fort is to fight for the whole of it. The sooner the issue is made in Chicago between a whole Sabbath and none at all, the sooner the Christian element in the community will win the victory it will deserve. Half a Sabbath is hardly worth fighting for.

SECULAR NEWS.

[CONCLUDED FROM FOURTH PAGE.]

A great tornado swept over Iroquis, Kansas, on May 30th, and in a northeasterly direction passed through Kansas and into Nebraska. Twelve persons were killed instantly and a number wounded. The Presbyterian church was demolished and four young ladies barely had time to escape with their lives. Many other houses were demolished. Relief committees are rapidly being organized in neighboring cities and medicines and supplies are going rapidly forward.

The eruption at Mt. Ætna is in full blast. Three craters lying in form of a triangle a mile apart are pouring out streams of lava 75 or 100 miles wide and running apparently toward Randazzo, not far distant. During the night loud reports like the firing of artillery are heard.

King Alfonso of Spain in opening the Cortez, June 1st, declared for liberal principles. Efforts will be made to assimilate Cuba to the position of a Spanish province, and hasten the complete abolition of slavery. The relations with foreign powers are satisfactory.

The canal project between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans across the isthmus of Panama is to be carried out by the French company, through the Panama-Aspinwall route. The estimated cost is two hundred millions of dollars. The American engineers declare the project of a canal without locks is not feasible and the Americans have withdrawn.

The treaty between Afghanistan and England has been signed. England has acquired all she hoped for. The British government will be represented by a resident minister with a proper escort. The frontiers of British India are extended hundreds of miles toward the Russian line, and five or six millions of Mohammedans are brought under British rule. It is said that Great Britain now has twice as many Mohammed subjects as the Sultan of Turkey.

The Swedish expedition under Prof. Nordensjkjold, which sailed from Gothenburg July 4th, 1878, has been heard from. A northeast passage has been discovered from Norway to Japan. The expedition will return home through the Suez Canal. A number of hitherto unknown marine animals have been discovered. A diatomous mud was found in various spots on the ice. In appearance it is yellow, and is said to be a new mineral caused by the action of frost long continued upon the salt water.

The Zulu war is becoming apparently interminable. Cetawayo the chief of Zulus, finding that his brother, with a detachment, proposed surrendering to the British set upon them and disperfed them. The brother of Cetewayo was killed. The grass was fired, vastly increasing the difficulty of sustaining an advance by British troops. Cetawayo has intrenched himself and declares he will never surrender. Natal at present is safe, but nothing less than the destruction of the Zulu army can secure its safety. Gen. Garnet Wolsley has superseded Lord Chelmsford in command.

The commencement at the University of North Carolina went off with great eclat. The attendance is said to have the largest since 1860. Judge Thurman did not appear and Rev. Dr. Moses D. Hoge, of Richmond, delivered the annual address. Though improvised and extemporaneous, the opinion was general that nothing was lost by substitution of Dr. Hoge for Senator Thurman. Hon. Samuel F. Phillips delivered an able and scholarly oration before the Alumni Association. Paul C. Cameron, Esq., was elected permanent President of the Alumni Association. Gov. Jarvis presented the diplomas and prizes to the proficients in scholarship.

The following honorary degrees were conferred:

John H. Dillard and Thomas S. Ashe of Supreme Court, and Samuel F. Phillips, degree of LL. D.

That of D. D. on John P. Pickett, of Vicksburg, Miss.; David Sanderson, of Eutaw, Ala.; A. S. Smith, of Ringwood, N. C., and F. H. Kerfoot, of Baltimore.

The degree of Doctor of Philosophy was conferred upon Prof. W. C. Kerr, and that of Master of Arts on F. H. Busbee, of Raleigh, and John Webb, of Tennessee.

Maj. D. J. Devane, of Wilmington, has been appointed by the U. S. Circuit Court a commissioner to sell the Wilmington, Columbia & Augusta Railroad, under a decree of foreclosure.

For the N. C. Presbyterian.

MAJ. BINGHAM'S ADDRESS.

Major Robert Bingham was invited to deliver an address before the "Georgia Teachers Association" at its recent meeting in Rome, Ga. His invitation was an emphatic recognition of his ability and prominence as an educator. His cordial reception, his noble address—the unrestricted encomiums it received, and the manifest pleasure awakened by his presence and conversation, greatly delighted me as a native of North Carolina, and as a friend of the enterprising worker in the cause of education. C.

The advertisement of Bingham School will be found in this issue. The catalogue of this school for 1878 shows 142 pupils from fourteen States of the Union, and one from Asia. Liberal offers are made to sons of clergymen, and young men can mess and get a first rate education for little money. The advertisement shows reduction in prices of tuition and board, and the Superintendent claims increased facilities for the future.

Col. John L. Brown, at Charlotte, N. C., and Messrs. J. D. McNeely, at Salisbury; J. D. Williams, Fayetteville; W. S. Moore, Greensboro, N. At her home near Point Caswell, Pender county, May 30th, Mrs. KATE E. MURPHY, wife of Mr. John H. Murphy, aged 43 years.

Mrs. Murphy was a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, a woman of deep-toned piety, leading an exemplary life to believers and to them that are without, rebuking sin in all of its phases, not only by her example but also by her words. She loved to talk of the Church and how we could best promote the glory of God. During her protracted illness of pneumonia, she suffered much, but bore her affliction without murmuring. All that medical skill could devise was done for her recovery, but in vain. The Master called and she obeyed. She longed to depart and be with Jesus. On the day she died she said that "the gate was open and she was longing to enter in." She asked her minister a few hours before she died if she was dying. He said I think not. Oh! (said she) can't I go this evening? He replied we must wait God's time. I must bear it patiently said she, and then cried "Father take me" which was about the last expression which fell from her lips, for a few hours afterwards she breathed her last without a struggle and without a groan. Peaceful death! truly it may be said of her, she fell asleep in Jesus": "Blessed sleep from which none ever wake to weep." She leaves a husband and six little children; an aged and feeble mother, sister and brothers to mourn their loss, and truly their loss is great. May God comfort the bereaved ones and fulfil His promise to the little ones, "I'll be a God to thee and to thy seed after thee."

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS,

For Malarial Poisoning, Especially Hepatic Diseases and Malarial Fevers.

Testimony of Distinguished Medical Men:

MALARIOUS FEVERS.

Extract from Letter of Dr. Wm. T. Howard, of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, of August 1st, 1873.

Dr. Howard compares these waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

The Greenbrier White Sulphur Waters will be recognized by all informed upon such subjects as one of the most noted Mineral Fountains of the World.

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases: and more especially to the cachexia and sequels incident to MALARIOUS FEVERS IN ALL THEIR GRADES AND VARIETIES."

* * * * * * * In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the BUFFALO SPRINGS, in Mecklenburg county, Virginia."

Extract from Letter of the late Dr. Thos. P. Atkinson, of Danville, Va., Ex-President State Medical Society, dated August 15th, 1874.

"The Buffalo Lithia Waters have unquestionably displayed great power in the peculiar diseases of the warm, miasmatic regions of the South, which may be grouped together under the general head of Malarial Cachexia, covering Hepatic Engorgements, Enlargements of the Spleen, Jaundice, &c."

"It is not pretended that these Waters possess any anti-periodic properties, such as belong to Quinine—At the same time, however, it is unquestionably true, that in the intermittent and remittent fevers in a chronic form, they have in numerous instances, given relief in cases which had obstinately resisted all the anti-periodic drugs of the shops. From my experience with them, I feel fully warranted in saying that, with rare exceptions, whenever disease is found originating under malarial influence, a potent remedy may be found in this water."

Extract from a Letter of Dr. John C. Coleman, of Halifax county, Va., (prior to the War a surgeon of the U. S. Navy, now retired) dated near Scottsburg, Va., January 1st, 1879.

"Perhaps no claim made for the Buffalo Lithia Waters is more thoroughly established than that they are a powerful antidote to malarial poison in all its forms and varieties. In that large class of disorders, included in term Malarial Cachexia, embracing Engorgement of the Liver and Spleen, Jaundice, Indigestion, Dropsies and Neuralgias, of which the warm malarious districts of the South are so prolific, the action of these waters as a general rule is most decided and happy, and oftentimes astonishing. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, they are especially efficacious. I presume there is no season at these Springs in which some cases of this character do not find relief from these Waters, which have before baffled the healing art."

Extract from Letter of Dr. Alfred Plumber, of Manson, N. C., dated March 16, 1874.

"I have known the Buffalo Springs of Mecklenburg county, Va., for twenty-five years, and have sent many patients to them. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fever, and in all diseases originating in malarial poison, I have found their action almost that of a charm. I have sent young ladies to these Springs so enfeebled from this influence as to be scarcely able to walk across a floor, and in a few weeks they would become so invigorated as to be able to dance half of every night."

These springs open for guests the 1st day of June. The water in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00 per case at the springs. Springs pamphlets sent to any address.

Hiding From Papa.

Papa's lost his baby!
Searches everywhere,
Under chairs and tables,
With the greatest care!

Pulls aside the curtain,
Peeps behind the door!
Never sees the little heap
Curled up on the floor.
Never hears the whisper,
"Mamma, don't you tell!"
Nor the little laughter,
Muffled, like a bell!

Off he scrampers wildly,
Hunting here and there,
Overturning everything,
With the greatest care!
Canary has a visit,
Sitting on his perch,
Mama's apron pocket
Suffers by the search!

"Now I am so tired—
Elephant at play—
That I must take a rest
A minute by the way.
I'll lay my weary head
On this little rug."
Under mama's towel,
Lay her darling snug!

Then the merry scramblings
Papa laughed to see!
"And you din't fink, now,
That it could be me!"

—Companion.

Fighting the Storm.

"A fearful day, neighbor Scheffer."

"You say truly, neighbor Balt; there has been nothing like it since the great storm of '24. Heaven have pity on us!"

So muttered to each other the villagers of Seckendorf, as they crouched behind the rocks along the river bank in the gray of that wild March morning, with a hurricane such as no living man could remember rushing and roaring down the valley. Young and old, even babies and bed-ridden grandmothers were all gathered there, for it was no time to linger within walls which cracked and groaned with every blast, and might at any moment come crushing down in one mass of ruin.

Even in that sheltered spot the jackets of the men and the long hair of the women flapped in the wind like torn canvass, but out in the open ground the fury of the storm was fearful to look at. Tall trees were bending like whips, huge stones rolling down the surrounding ridges, twigs and even large branches flying through the air like straws; while on the unsheltered uplands more than one shepherd's hut had been literally blown to pieces, and laid strewn far and wide over the hillside, a shapeless wreck of shattered timbers.

But even more fearful was the sight of the flooded river below, which, swollen by weeks of rain, and lashed into fury by the tremendous gale, went foaming down the narrow valley with a roar that seemed to shake the very rocks that walled it in; and as the peasants stood gazing at it, one of them, a stalwart herdsman of the upland pastures, pointed, with a sudden paleness on his sunburned features, to the little cottage that stood on an island in the centre of the stream, at the window of which a human face had just shown itself.

"It's the ferryman and his family," whispered one. "They haven't had time to escape."

"God help them, then!" muttered another; it's all over with them now!"

At that moment the clatter of hoofs was heard along the stony road, and a single horseman came tearing down toward the bank, his white hair and his horse's mane streaming in the wind like a pennon. A murmur ran through the crowd as he approached. "It's our master—it's the Count of Hildeshiem!"

Even before he reached the spot the Count had evidently seen the danger of the island family, for his first words were:

"Two hundred thalers to the man who saves them! Who will go?"

The men looked at each other in silence. There were no faint hearts among them, but the bravest man might well have shrunk from that boiling whirl of foam, in whose grasp the strongest boat would have been nothing. More than one eye kindled, more than one hand clenched itself, but nobody stepped forward. At that moment a huge wave went roaring up over the islet, and striking the cottage wall, tore it away like paper, while the shrieks of the children and their mother, who were now plainly visible, were heard even above the howling of the storm.

"Will you let them perish before your eyes?" roared the Count. "If I were ten years younger I'd go myself."

Just then a solitary figure, which seemed to have arisen through the earth, so suddenly did it appear, was seen on the very brink of the river, launching a small boat. In another instant boat and man vanished together into the whirlwind of spray that filled the air. The Count clutched the horse's mane, and his lips moved as if in prayer, while more than one stifled cry broke from the peasants, as the little bark at length reappeared close to the islet, dancing like a feather amid the roaring waves that surged up around. But the ferryman had seen the coming help and prepared for it. In an instant his wife was lowered down with her baby in her arms. The other two children followed; but alas! there was no place for the father in the tiny skiff, already overloaded.

The two brave men exchanged a look, and understood each other. Off went the boat, shooting down the foaming current like an arrow. More than once all seemed over, but the oarsman's hand was sure, and at last, far down the stream, he brought his charge safe to land. Then, without halting a moment, he seized a tow rope, and dragging his boat to the point whence he had started, shot out into the raging flood once more.

"God be with him!" cried the Count fervently; no other man in Saxony would have dared such a deed!"

Stoutly did the gallant man strain at his task, but he came only just in time. The ferryman had barely leaped into the boat when the whole building came crashing down. In an instant the whole crowd was in motion, and, headed by the Count himself, they rushed down the bank to meet the rescued man and his deliverer as they touched the shore.

"There, my brave fellow!" cried the old noble, holding out his purse to the oarsman, "never was money better earned!"

"Not so, Sir Count," answered the other, "God has enabled me to keep myself by the work of my own hands, and I need nothing more. Give your gold to this poor man and his family, who have lost their all."

And without awaiting a reply he turned on his heels and disappeared.—Albany Journal.

A Rich Man on Riches.

The following story, says The Wayside, is told of Jacob Ridgeway, a wealthy citizen of Philadelphia, who died many years ago, leaving a fortune of five or six million dollars:

"Mr. Ridgeway," said a young man with whom the millionaire was conversing, "you are more to be envied than any gentleman I know."

"Why so?" responded Mr. Ridgeway.

"I am not aware of any cause for which I should be particularly envied."

"What, sir!" exclaimed the young man in astonishment. "Why, are you not a millionaire? Think of the thousands your income brings you every month!"

"Well, what of that?" replied Mr. Ridgeway. "All I get out of it is my victuals and clothes, and I can't eat more than one man's allowance, or wear more than one suit at a time. Pray, can't you do as much?"

"Ah, but," said the youth, "think of the hundreds of fine houses you own, and the rental they bring you!"

"What better am I off for that?" replied the rich man. "I can only live in one house at a time; as for the money I receive for rents, why, I can't eat it or wear it; I can only use it to buy other houses for other people to live in; they are the beneficiaries, not I."

"But you can buy splendid furniture, and costly pictures, and fine carriages and horses—in fact, anything you desire."

"And after I have bought them," responded Mr. Ridgeway, "what then? I can only look at the furniture and pictures, and the poorest man who is not blind can do the same. I can ride no easier in a fine carriage than you can in an omnibus for five cents, without the trouble of attending to drivers, footmen and hostlers; and as to anything I 'desire,' I can tell you young man, that the less we desire in this world the happier we shall be. All my wealth cannot buy me a single day more of life—cannot buy back my youth—cannot purchase exemption from sickness and pain—cannot procure me power to keep afar off the hour of death; and then, what will all avail when, in a few short years at most, I lie down in the grave and leave it all for ever? Young man, you have no cause to envy me."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Large Farming a Precarious Business.

The following figures are given by a San Francisco correspondent of a Philadelphia paper, as evidence that farming on a gigantic scale is profitable neither to the country nor to the farmer. He says: "The largest wheat producer in California, or in the world, is Dr. H. S. Glenn. He was formerly from Monroe county, Missouri. He is a man of great enterprise and energy. His ranche lies in Colusa county, and comprises 60,000 acres, nearly all arable land. He has this year 45,000 acres in wheat, which, at a low calculation, will produce 90,000 bushels. His wheat will sell for 85 cents per bushel, or $765,000. Dr. Glenn has been farming ten years, and one would suppose he ought to have a handsome sum to his credit in bank; but what with a failure of crops—which occurs two years in every five—and the enormous interest he pays on his loans, he is said to owe a round million of dollars. Last year his credit was bad, as he had no crop. Now, with his splendid crop in prospect he will probably get out. The Dalrimples of St Paul, who, ten years ago, were the largest farmers of wheat in Minnesota, raising as much as 40,000 bushels in a single year, went to the wall. Another large wheat raiser is D. M. Reavis, whose land lies on the borders of Colusa and Butte counties. He is also from Monroe county, Missouri, and has an unpretending little estate of 15 000 acres, 13,000 of which are in wheat which he thinks will average this year 30 bushels, or 390,000 bushels. He also is hard pressed, and I am told is paying 9 per cent. on a couple of hundred thousand dollars of borrowed money. If farmers raising half a million to a million bushels of wheat cannot get out of debt, it might be well to inquire what is the use of having so much land? The truth is that the frequent failure of crops in California and the waste that attends on large operations of that kind, farming on a gigantic scale in this portion of the Pacific coast must be considered a failure. North of this is Oregon and Washington Territories, there is no failure of the harvest; farming operations are carried on on a smaller scale, and consequently the farmers, while not rolling in wealth, are all well to do."

Science as a Detective.

A correspondent tells at greater length than we have space for the story of an attempted fraud which was exposed by chemistry.

An emery wheel guaranteed to stand 600 revolutions was run at the speed of 1000 revolutions, and burst, doing a large amount of damage. A suit to recover was instituted, based on a letter written by the seller of the wheel, in which the strength of the wheel was rated at 1,600 revolutions. While in the office of the prosecutor endeavoring to effect a settlement, the defendant observed that a certain make of ink was used, and he learned by a casual inquiry that the same ink was used exclusively by the prosecutor. The defendant had for several years used another ink. Taking samples of the two inks to a chemist, he was able after analysis to secure a solvent for the one which would not affect the other.

The case came to trial. Evidence was taken as to the kind of ink each party employed. Then the chemist was called, and in the presence of the jury applied the solvent, which removed the interpolated "1," and left the rest of the writing untouched. The proof of the forgery was sufficient, and the case was dismissed, leaving the dishonest prosecutor to defend himself from a criminal charge.

Old Scotch Hawkers.

Neill Elliot, who had long perambulated Scotland with his pack of miscellaneous wares, was known in every village and farmstead in the district of Kilmarnock. There was a vast fund of amusements for villagers and rustics in Elliot, who, not by any means witty in himself, never failed to elicit it in others. The condition of country when Neill began his trade was vastly different from what it was when his hawking career terminated. In his early career there were no police, either urban or rural, and no hawker's licenses yearly to be renewed requisite. Newspapers were few and costly, and intelligence of matters, political or social, was very slowly disseminated. Books were few and high in price, and a kind of pamphlet known as "Chap Books" were carried by the hawkers, and were the principal mental pabulum in those days. At farmstead and villages a hawker was a god-send in the tedium of a dull life, for he had for their amusement a budget of news gathered in his wanderings in addition to his "Chap Books." The hawkers may be regarded as the descendants and successors of the old minstrels, and some of them have composed songs of no small merit.

Thomas Macqueen was a hawker in his earlier years, and was employed by the author of "Jeanie Morrison" to pick up unprinted old songs and lilts surviving in the memories of the peasantry. The "Edie Ochiltree" of Sir Walter Scott in his "Antiquary," very well illustrates the functions of the hawkers of the olden time. Many of our aged inhabitants will recollect the famed Hawkie of Glasgow occasionally paying us a visit, and giving, with a husky humor peculiar to him, "Janet Clinker's Oration," and other comic matter. It was Hawkie who introduced the ruse of selling a straw and giving the book for nothing. The "Chap Books" which were the current studies of an older generation have now been superseded by something better. Few of the present generation, not strong in antiquarian proclivities, will care to read such books as were in vogue when Neill Elliot and others hawked them. Hugh Crawford, formerly bookseller in Kilmarnock, dealt largely in the "Chap Books," and the printing of them constituted the chief portion of his business. A few of these books we may mention. One of the most amusing of them was "Paddy from Cork," and the humor of it consisted in exhibiting his blunders; "Lothian Tom," "Leper the tailor," "Jockey and Maggie's Courtship," "The Wise Men of Gotham," "Simple John and his Twelve Misfortunes," "The Witty Sayings and Exploits of George Buchanan," were all in comic style. The accomplished scholar George Buchanan was erroneously represented as the king's fool in this absurd "Chap Book." The "King and the Cobbler," the King being Henry the Eighth, who was foolishly depicted as a merry monarch. This was to give false historic gloss to the English 'Blue Beard." There was a poetic "Thrummy Cap," and a very popular one "The Wicked wife of Beith," who had the better of St. Peter in a trial of wits, and got into Paradise in spite of the door-keeper. "Purgatory Proved and Illustrated," was a sermon ostensibly in proof of purgatory, but really an argument against it. Then there was the "Prophecies," but never fulfilled, of Alexander Peden, "The Laird of Lag," "Battle of Drumclog," "The Long Pack," and a whole host of others. Among the ballads there was the "Blackberry Courtship," "Jemmy and Nancy of Yarmouth," "The Catskin Garland," "Sir James the Rose," "Chevy Chase," "The Star in the East," a ballad by a Loudoun gardener, which was once very popular. Then there was Hogg's "Donald M'Donald," William and Margaret," and other selections of songs. Fifty years ago very few of Burn's songs were inserted in ballads. "The Land of the Leal," was a very popular song, and was very generally supposed to be, what it was not, a song of Burns.—Scottish American Journal.

Useful Bacteria.

Hitherto much evil, and no perceptible good, has been attributed to the minute forms of vegetable life known as bacteria. It has been left for a Russian botanist, Cienkowski, to discover an instance of their usefulness, namely, in the manufacture of beet sugar. One of the necessary stages of the process is that in which the beet juice assumes a gelatinous consistency, when it is compared to frog spawn. The cause of this condition has had many explanations. Some have thought it due to the escaped viscid protoplasmic contents of the cells, others the result of a fermentation process, causing the sugar in the juice to become converted into a "spawny" cellulose and into glucose. Jubert and Mendes, however, suggested that it was owing to the presence of peculiar organized bodies, and this suggestion Cienkowski has now confirmed, showing by his researches carried on in a sugar factory that the "frog spawn" is by its development and growth, closely related to a bacterian form described by Cohn as Ascococus Billrothii, which he calls provisionally A. mesenteroides, and that to it the beet root sugar manufacturer is indebted for the formation of his glocuse. This bacterian can be easily cultivated by keeping a slice of cooked beet root, a little moistened with water, in free contact with the air.

A Story About Crabs.

The ancients tell a very instructive fable about the crabs, who once deliberated in council what to do in ordee to amend their backward walk:

"It is a shame for us," said the speaker, addressing the assembly, "to walk contrary to all other animals. Whenever a man is unfortunate in his business at once they say, 'He walks like a crab.' We must suffer this no longer. As regards ourselves we are too old to change our habit; but let us make it a law that every parent shall train his young one, by all ways and means, never to walk otherwise than forward. Our descendants will then gradually amend the disgraceful oddity of our species."

The law proposed was unanimously adopted, and the meeting dissolved.

"It is now time," said the old crab to his young one, "that you learn to walk."

"How must I do it?" laquired the youngster.

"Lift up your feet, one after the other, and put them straight ahead, and pay attention not to walk in any other way," was the parent's reply.

"Father, walk ahead and show me," was the youngster's demand.

The old one began to walk in his old fashion, and the young one followed him at once in like manner.

"Hold!" cried the old one in anger. "Did I not tell you to walk straight ahead; why don't you obey me?"

"I cannot do differently from your example," the little one meekly replied.

To be brief, the old crab could effect nothing to the purpose by all his explanations and threats; and this is the reason why all the crabs still walk backwards.

In general the prospect for cereal crops in North Carolina is reported as fine. In Hyde county corn crops seem to be remarkably good and the stand of cotton is splendid. Farmers in the northeastern part of the State are turning their attention to rice culture. The land is said to be well adapted to its cultivation. Around Morgantou the prospect is fine for an unusually heavy yield of wheat.

Be Resolute.

Irresolution is a fatal habit; it is not vicious in itself, but it leads to vice, creeping upon its victims with a fatal facility, the penalty of which many a fine heart has paid at the scaffold. The idler, the spendthrift, the epicurean, and the drunkard, are among its victims. Perhaps in the latter its effects appear in the most hideous form. He knows that the goblet he is about to drain is poison, yet he swallows it. He knows—for the example of thousands has painted it in glaring colors—that it will deaden all his faculties, take the strength from his limbs and the happiness from his heart, oppress him with disease and hurry his progress to a dishonored grave, yet he drains it. How beautiful, on the contrary, is the power of resolution, enabling the one who possesses it to pass through perils and dangers, trials and temptations! Avoid the contraction of the habit of irresolution. Strive against it to the end.

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

LIVER PILLS,

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. J. RUMPLE.

GRANVILLE COUNTY—NO. II.

In the northeastern corner of the county of Granville, eighteen miles from Oxford, the county seat, some three miles from the line of Warren county, and about the same distance from the line of Mecklenburg county, in Virginia, is situated the church of NUTBUSH.

It was named after Nuthnsh creek, a tribu tary of the Dan, which flows within a few miles of the church, on the eastern boundary of the county. The date of its organization, as given in the Manual, is 1757, though that is somewhat a matter of conjecture. It was in existence certainly prior to 1764, when it was united with Grassy Creek and Lower Tirce in calling the Rev. James Criswell as pastor. From a paper adopted by the citizens, now among the papers of the Historical Society of North Carolina, we learn that they possessed a church building in 1764. That building was situated about a mile from the site of the present church, and stood in the yard of the former residence of Mr. Charles Taylor, and is now known as the "Smith place."

The original bench of Elders consisted of John Bullock, Jesse Harper, Joseph Lindsay and Leonard Sims. The names and families of all these, except one, have long since disappeared from the community; but John Bullock has not wanted a man to occupy a seat in the session of Nntbush church, from that time till the present. His mantle fell first upon his son William, then upon his grandsons, William and John Bullock. The latter for a season alone constituted the session. But long before his death his two sons, William C. Bullock and Richard Austin Bullock, took their places in the seats of their fathers. William C. Bullock is now dead, and Mr. Walter Bullock, the youngest son of John Bullock, Esq., has been chosen to occupy the place. Verily the generation of the upright shall be blessed.

PASTORS.

The Rev. James Criswell was the first pastor of this church, and was installed in 1765. After his death in 1778, the Rev. Henry Pacillo occupied the pulpit from 1780 until 1801. After two years vacancy the Rev. John Matthews began laboring among them with great power until 1806. Rev. Leonard Prather was pastor for a short time after this, until his deposition, and in 1809 the Rev. E. B. Currie became their pastor. He labored here until 1819, and under his ministry large accessions were made to the list of members. From that time Nutbush took her place among the stronger churches of the Presbytery.

After two or three years vacancy, the Rev. S. L. Graham became their pastor in 1822, and extended his labors not only to Grassy Creek, but to Shiloh, and to Clarksville, in Virginia. His labors in the pulpit and from house to house were greatly blessed to this whole region, more especially in the churches of Shiloh and Clarksville, to which he was finally transferred, his connection with Nutbush ceasing about 1835. It was at this period that the church was very much weakened by removals to the South and West, about forty families emigrating. From this time also till 1841 the church was irregularly supplied, by Rev. Albertus L. Watts, Rev. Nehemiah H. Harding (then pastor of the church at Oxford), and by Rev. John C. Thompson, who died in the early part of the year 1840.

In August, 1841, Edward Hines, then a licentiate just from the Seminary, came to Nutbush and found only a small remnant of the old church remaining, with John Bullock and James Daniel the only elders. The latter was soon called to his rest, leaving Mr. Bullock alone. From that time, with an interval of twelve years, from 1858 to 1870, Mr. Hines has been the minister of the church—a period of 26 years. During the aforementioned interval the church was supplied by the Rev. F. N. Whaley, of Clarksville, Va.

The present session consists of Messrs. Victor M. Epps, Richard A. Bullock, Dr. Wm. R. Wilson and Walter Bullock. The resident members number thirty, with prospects of early additions, and the church is in a growing state.

In this same region of country will be found

SHILOH CHURCH.

This church is an offshot of "Old Grassy Creek," and is located in the same county, fifteen miles north of Oxford, six miles north of Grassy Creek, and a mile and a half South of the Virginia line. The region round about is known as "Abram's Plains," which was the home, a quarter of a century ago, of such men as Abram Venable, J. S. Speed, John Amis, Smith Downey, George Baskerville, Col. Gregory and others. The church was organized on the 16th of February, 1834, with forty-nine members, set off from Grassy Creek. In this service Rev. J. L. Graham officiated. The Ruling Elders were Dr. Charles L. Read, Robert K. and Frederick M. Clack, and Abram W. Venable.

The house of worship, a plain building of wood, capable of seating two hundred and fifty persons, had been erected about 1830 for the convenience of a number of old people residing in that region, but from six to ten miles from Grassy Creek. It was no part of their plan at first to organize a separate church, but by the blessing of God upon the labors of Dr. Graham, it was not long before a degree of interest was manifested which rendered separate organization a necessity. Dr. Graham was installed the first pastor of the new church in April, 1835, and remained with them till his transfer to Union Seminary in 1838. The Rev. George D. McCuen occupied the pulpit as stated supply from February, 1839, to October, 1840. In June, 1841, Rev. Daniel G. Doak, then pastor in Clarksville, Va., was installed pastor of Shiloh for one-fourth of his time, and continued until April 1st, 1842. On the 7th of that month a call was made out for the services of Edward Hines, a licenciate of Orange Presbytery, and on the 29th of May, 1842, Mr. Hines was ordained and installed pastor of the church. From that day to this the relation has continued, with nothing remarkable connected with it, except that in the last thirty-seven years the young minister's name has ascended from the foot of the roll till next its head, while he has been breaking the bread of life to one people; and further, that all the children of that little flock, born since 1840, except two (one now of 17 and the other of 14 years), have been gathered into the fold between the ages of 12 and 20; and that there has never been a case of discipline in all that time. Few churches have such a record as this. The church numbers thirty-three communicants; the average of all their gifts in a year to church purposes, including pastor's salary, is $8 40 per member.

OXFORD CHURCH.

Hugh McAdan preached at Granville Court House in 1755, and, no doubt, Davies, and Tennant, and Criswell, and Patillo, and Currie, who visited or supplied the old churches of Grassy Creek and Nutbush, gave occasional services to the people of Oxford. But it was not until about 1818 that a church was organized at the county seat. It is thought indeed that Shepherd K. Kollock was installed as the pastor of the Oxford church about 1815, and served this people until 1819, when he became a professor in the University. If this be correct the church is about three years older than the date set down in the Orange Manual.

From 1821 to 1828 Samuel L. Graham was pastor of the Oxford church. The church at the close of Mr. Graham's labors had twenty communicants. In 1829 Rev. Joseph Labaree was pastor of the church, which then had twenty-four communicants. Mr. Labaree was engaged in teaching a female school in Oxford, in connection with his ministerial services. In 1831 Mr. Labaree was removed and the Rev. Nehemiah H. Harding was the pastor. From 1829 to 1834 the Rev. Edward Hollister resided at Oxford without pastoral charge, but engaged in conducting a female academy. Mr. Hollister's school and Mr. Harding's pastoral charge of Oxford both terminated about 1835, and the Rev. Jesse Rankin soon after took charge of both the school and the church. The school was a large and flourishing one, several teachers aiding Mr. Rankin in the school. Mr. Rankin's name appears connected with Oxford for the last time in 1840, when he removed and became the stated supply of Fourth Creek, in Concord Presbytery. After a time the Rev. Jacob Doll became the pastor of this church, and continued here for a number of years. In 1856 the Rev. T. U. Faucette was the stated supply of this church, with 53 members, in 1860 71 members, in 1863 71 members, and in 1866 71 members. In 1867 Rev. H. G. Hill is reported as stated supply, with 45 members. In 1870 the present pastor, the Rev. D. E. Jordan, was elected and the church had 45 members; in 1871, 53 members, and in 1875, 75 members. Thus, in sixty years this church has had Kollock, Graham, Labaree, Harding, Rankin, Doll, Hill, Faucette, Jordan and perhaps others—at least nine ministers, or one every seven years.

It is proper to add that Oxford has maintained good female schools for a long time, and that Mrs. Grant and Miss Mitchell, the daughters of the late Dr. Elisha Mitchell, maintained a female school of a high grade in Oxford some years just prior to their removal to Statesville in 1874.

A number of years ago the Masonic fraternity in North Carolina erected a beautiful college building in Oxford, where they intended establishing an institution of learning to be called St. John's College. But their plans were frustrated by the war and its consequences, and instead of a high grade college they have established in their beautiful building an Orphan Asylum. Here hundreds of orphans from all parts of the State have been furnished a comfortable home for a season, and have received the elements of a good English education. The institution, under the care of the Grand Lodge of the State of North Carolina and under the immediate supervision of Mr. J. H. Mills, is worthy of the liberal patronage and confidence of all who love their native State, and whose hearts are capable of feeling for the poor and friendless orphan.

In addition to the churches of Grassy Creek, Nuthnsh, Shiloh and Oxford, Providence church was established in 1833, was suspended for awhile and re-established in 1852 as Geneva, Horeb in 1861 and Oak Hill in 1862. In 1856 there were six churches and 202 communicants in Granville county. In 1860 there were six churches and 313 members, a gain of 110 in four years. Passing down to 1870 there are seven churches and 226 members, a loss of 87 members in the ten years including the war, and the exodus of the colored members from our churches. In 1878 we have G. W. Farrill at Geneva, 38 members; E. Hines, Shiloh 33 and Nutbush 34; T. U. Faucette, Oak Hill 20 and Grassy Creek 38; D. E. Jordan, Oxford, say, 68 and Horeb 6—seven churches and 237 members, or a gain of eleven members in eight years.

From these statements it will be seen that in the large and wealthy county of Granville, having a population in 1870 of 24,831, the Presbyterian Church, after a struggle of a century and a quarter, under the lead of learned, zealous and devout ministers, numbers less than 250 members, or embraces about 1,000 of the population, counting four persons to each communicant, the usual number. That is, the Presbyterian is about one twenty-fourth of the whole population. Let us compare this with Mecklenburg county, where Presbyterianism was planted about the same time. This county has sixteen Presbyterian churches, with 2,616 members, or a Presbyterian population of over ten thousand (10,464) in a total of 24,299, according to the census of 1870. Or adding 2,000 for the Associate Reformed population, who are "Presbyterians true blue," and we have a county where the Presbyterian population equals all the others put together. What is the reason for the difference between Granville and Mecklenburg? No doubt Criswell, and Patillo, and Currie, and Graham, and Matthews were just as earnest, and faithful, and devout as Craighead, and Hunter, and Caldwell, and Wallis, and McRee, and Williamson. But the former labored in a county where other forms of religion were hereditary—where the fathers were Episcopalians, Quakers, Baptists or Methodists—while the latter preached to the Scotch-Irish and their descendants, to whom Presbyterianism was the household religion, almost since the days of the Culdees. Their fathers had suffered for their adherence to their Presbyterian faith on the heaths and glens of Scotland, or along the lochs and rivers of the north of Ireland, and had come to America to escape the tyranny of a Laud, a Bonner or a Jeremy Taylor, and they do not easily forget the traditions of their fathers. A lady in Western North Carolina, whose great-great-great-grandfather fought in the battle of the Boyne, still tells, with sparkling eye and kindling countenance, the traditions handed down through five generations how William led on his troops, and how James fled ignominiously from the kingdom. Both Granville and Mecklenburg illustrate how hard it is to eradicate the hereditary religious tendencies of a people.

MAGNIFY YOUR OFFICE.

Every providential indication points to a renewed divine blessing upon the ordained means of grace. There is an evident, widespread reaction in all the churches against evangelistic movements, and an awakened confidence in the regular pulpit ministration, and in the regular social services of the church. We trust the preacher will now magnify his office in the most effective and devoted exercise of his ministry. It is an honr to preach with the expectation of saving men by the pulpit discourse. We hear, in several of our churches, that the class and praying meetings were never better attended or more spiritual than now. The Master has sent His ministers—all of them—by "the foolishness (as the world esteems it) of preaching to save them that believe." A refreshing in the church itself, a new faith in the old apostolic means, a forward step all along the line, and there would be such an ingathering as the church has not yet witnessed. May God grant that this be realized during the present year.—Zion's Herald.

A GREAT MISTAKE.

How many people mistake bluntness of utterance for sincerity of expression! Blurting out their opinions of another's conduct or possessions, without any nice regard for the feelings of the person addressed, they comfort themselves with the thought that "they say just what they mean;" that you can always know what they think about anything." It does not occur to them that their plainness of speech in such instances is discourtesy; that their bluntness of expression is inexcusable rudeness. There are other sins in the world besides dishonesty. It is quite as much one's duty to be kindly and considerate and courteous as to be honest and sincere. Plainness of speech is sometimes a grievous offence. Keeping one's opinion to one's self is sometimes a bounden obligation. As old Feltham says: "To be plain argues honesty; but to be pleasing argues discretion. Sores are not to be anguished with a rustic pressure, but gently stroked with a ladied."—S. S. Times.

A LAUGH.

A good natured laugh is the key to all breasts. The truth is, that people like to be laughed at in a genial sort of way. If you are making yourself ridiculous you want to be told of it in a pleasant manner, not sneered at: And it is astonishing how the laughing population can talk without treading on the toes of their neighbors. Why will people put on long faces when it is as much easier and more comfortable to laugh? Tears come to us unsought and unbidden. The wisest art in life is to cultivate smiles, and to find the flowers where others shrink away for fear of thorns.

THERE IS A DARK, DARK LAND.

BY REV. OLIVER CRANE, M. D.

There is a dark, dark land,
A wide domain,
Where idol temples stand
On every plain:
There heathen millions own
Their gods of wood and stone,
Bowing to them alone,
Bowing in vain.

Hark! from that far off shore,
Come notes of war;
The God whom we adore
They too would know:
Responsive to their need,
Who will their signals heed,
And 'neath the Master's lead,
Who, who will go?

Yes, joyful to their aid
A band has gone,
And lo! night's gloomy shade
Shall be with dawn;
See! bright on India's strands
On Afric's golden sands,
On China and all lands,
A morning dawn.

Great God, arise and make
Thy glory known;
Let heathen all forsake
Their gods of stone;
Soon may earth's tribes among,
From every human tongue,
Hosannas glad be sung
To Thee alone.

Almighty Lord and King,
Thy right assume;
Subdue Thy foes and bring
Thy ransomed home;
Wherever man is found
May grace and peace abound,
To earth's remotest bound,
Thy kingdom come.

CHILDISH TERRORS.

A very bright little fellow astonished his friends one night not long since by a fit of terror. When asked to tell of what he was afraid, he said, "of bears." What an absurdity!" exclaimed Cousin Elsie, "Here you are, safely tucked up in bed, in a cheerful, warm house, and you tell me that you are afraid of savage animals, which have their home in wild forests hundreds of miles away." She forgot that "bears" probably stood in the boy's mind, for whatever spectre his imagination had conjured up, an imagination just then quickened and stimulated by having listened to some thrilling stories of adventure in the mountains of the Sierra Nevada. The child spoke truly, though the truth had a ludicrous aspect.

I want to plead with mothers in behalf of their sensitive and timorous children. There are strong, healthy boys and girls, who have no fear of the dark, who are continually free from physical cowardice, and who receive much praise for their bravery. There are others, in whom the nervous sensibility so predominates that they endure, night after night, tortures quite beyond their powers to express. Oh, the horror of these poor little creatures of the dark! Its mystery compasses them about. They lie shivering in bed, when mamma has given her kiss and gone away, and as the last door between her and themselves is closed, they plunge into a depth of distress which nobody guesses and nobody comforts. After a while sleep steals tenderly into the room, like one of God's angels, and the little brain is soothed, the tired eyelids droop, and the haunting fears flee away. When morning comes and the blessed daylight lies broadly upon the familiar room, on bureau, bed, chairs, curtains, and the pictures on the wall, the child forgets its fear. The fear does not exist, and will not return till night comes back, with its vagueness, its awe, its great wall of gloom.

Many a child has been on the brink of a conversation with a mother or friend, in which he might have been helped and uplifted, so that his life long he would have been the better for that hour, when a bantering word, or an uncomprehending one, has shut him in upon himself. Many a parent, thinking that fear was a thing to be repressed and terror a synonym for cowardice, has sternly insisted upon measures which have been fraught with evil consequences, extending over years. Physicians will assure you that girls at eighteen, and boys nearing maturity, often break down in their studies and are unable to reap the rewards they covet, because of an undue strain or a nervous shock, which left its germ of trouble in the system when they were three or four years old. We cannot too wisely or too gently look after the little children under our care.

I think we cannot err in being very gentle, very slow to condemn, and very patient in our treatment of children. We ought, indeed, to insist upon prompt obedience to authority. It is a great wrong to childhood to suffer it to grow unrestrained and unwilling to comply with restraint. But oh! how often, and how humbly should we go to our Father in heaven for help. What does that mean, "Like as a father pitieth his children," if not that compassion, tenderness, and the softness of brooding, waiting, encompassing love, are elements in the paternal heart so divine that God himself forever pours them forth in fulness.

Nor should forget so far our own childhood, as we often do, when burdened with life's later responsibilities. Children are new to the world. They lead a dual life, even as we do. While the body is growing, the soul too is receptive to influences on every side. Let us respect the individuality and study the special needs of these dear, immortal ones committed to our care.—Margaret E. Sangster in Christian Intelligencer.

HEBREW POETRY.

BY LYMAN ABBOTT.

With us the form of poetry consists either in rhyme or rhythm, or both. Neither is apparent in our versions of the Psalms, nor was either known to the Hebrew poets. They wrote neither in meter nor in blank verse. The form of Hebrew poetry consisted of parallelisms, sometimes repetition, sometimes antithetical. The nature of this poetical structure will be best shown by an illustration; and the first Psalm will perhaps serve for the purpose as well as any other. It is not even necessary to change a word of our common translation, only to print the sentences in a modified form. Thus:

"Blessed is the man
That walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly;
Nor standeth in the way of sinners,
Nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful."

And the last verse affords an instance of the antithetical parallelism:

"For the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous;
But the way of the ungodly shall perish."

With a little thought, and with no other apparatus than an English Bible, the student can recast almost any Psalm in its poetic form. In the treatment of the Sunday-school lessons I shall print Dr. Conant's version, in which this parallelism is finely reproduced.

I define poetry as the inward truth of things, and the true poet as a seer who perceives this inward truth. This is not Webster; but for this definition I could cite very respectable authority, from Plato, who declares that poetry "comes nearer to vital truth than history," down to Gilfillan, who defines it as "truth dwelling in beauty;" or Chapin, who defines it as "the utterance of truth—deep, heartfelt truth." This last qualification is, indeed, essential to the true definition. It is not all truth that is poetry; nor all truth dwelling in beauty; but truth which is deep and heartfelt; that truth which has power over the inward life of man. And the deeper the truth, the more profoundly it moves the heart, the sublimer and higher the poetry. This definition assumes that there is an inward truth of things; a proposition which modern cynical skepticism denies. It assumes that the wild sea waves are saying something, and that Paul Dombey hears aright and Dr. Blimber is deaf. It assumes that there is a significance in the blush rose which is not in the milliner's pretty but dumb imitation; that there is a meaning in the mountain which cannot be pounded out of its rocks in a pestle, nor measured by a theodolite. It assumes that nature and life are hieroglyphs which can be deciphered, and that he who deciphers them does not put a meaning into the page, but finds it already there.

Now the inward truth of things which the Hebrew poetry expresses may be summed up in one word—God. From the earliest psalms of Moses down to the parables of Christ, the Hebrew poetry is written on an assumption that nature is a book which God has written, and in human nature is a life which God inspires; and that either one, correctly read, leads up to him. Behind the sublimest aspects of nature, behind the profoundest life of the soul, the Hebrew poet sees a sublimer Being, a profounder Life. To him both nature and the human life are interpreters of Jehovah. Beneath both the seer beholds the power that inspires them; and beholds it with a clearness of vision that has no parallel in any other poetry save that which has been taught in its school and has imbibed its spirit.

I can best express my meaning by an illustration. For this purpose compare two pictures of a thunder-storm, one Byron's, the other that of the Hebrew psalmist, and note the contrast between the two:

The sky is changed—and such a change! Oh night,
And storm, and darkness, ye are wondrous strong,
Yet lovely in your strength, as is the light
Of a dark eye in woman! Far along
From peak to peak, the rattling crags among Leaps the live thunder! Not from one lone cloud,
But every mountain now hath found a tongue,
And Jura answers through her misty shroud,
Back to the joyous Alps, who call to her aloud.

And this is in the night: Most glorious night!
Thou wert not sent for slumber! Let me be
A sharer in thy fierce and far delight—
A portion of the tempest and of thee!
How the lit lake shines, a phosporic sea,
And the big rain comes dancing to the earth!
And now again 'tis black—and now, the glee
Of the loud hills shakes with its mountain-mirth,
As if they did rejoice o'er a young earthquake's birth.

Compare the Hebrew poet's canvas:

Then the earth shook and quaked;
And the foundations of the mountains trembled,
And were shaken because he was wroth.
There went up smoke in his nostrils,
And fire out of his mouth devoured;
Coals were kindled from it.
And he bowed the heavens and came down
And thick darkness was under his feet.
And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly,
And soared along on wings of the wind.
He made darkness his covering,
The pavilion round about him;
Dark waters, thick clouds of the skies,
From the brightness before him his thick clouds passed away;
Hail, and coals of fire!
And Jehovah thundered in the heavens,
And the Most High uttered his voice
Hail, and coals of fire!
And he shot out his arrows and scattered them,
And he shot forth lightnings and discomfited them,
And the channels of water were seen,
And the foundations of the world were made bare,
At thy rebuke, O Jehovah,
At the blast of the breath of thy nostrils.

Now I raise no question as to which of these is superior in form. It may be conceded to any critic who denies the concession that the ungodly poet is superior in diction. It may even be conceded that the Hebrew poet is rude and semi-barbaric in the form in which he endeavors to express the inward truth of the storm. His metaphors are mixed; his language is broken and tumultuous, like the phenomena which he portrays. But the inward truth which he perceives and labors to express is far sublimer than that which the more cultured English poet expresses with so much greater grace. Both see something more than electricity, its detonation and its echoes in the thunder-storm. Both perceive a truth which is heartfelt. Both feel that there is in nature a voice of emotion, an expression of inward life. But the Englishman does not discern the secret; he is conscious of a voice, but not of a Person; as sometimes the half-heard voice of an unknown mingles in our dreams. He can therefore only impute to nature a human passion: The beauty of the night is like the beauty "of a dark eye in woman." The Alps are joyous; the mountains mirthful, and the soul of the poet is aroused to a "fierce and far delight;" but the cause of the savage joy of nature is an imagined "young earthquake's birth." All is fictitious. There is here no true seer; no real interpreter. The only inward truth in Byron's canto is the truth that nature does really express life; that there is in its incomparable language the utterance of a profound emotion. The Hebrew poet perceives, dimly it is true, as all the spiritual truths are perceived by us in our earthly estate, the Utterer of the emotion. The beauty of the darkness and of the storm is not that of "a dark eye in a woman," but of an unseen and majestic Lord. The trembling of the mountains at his presence, the thunder is the utterance of his voice; the lightnings are his arrows; the wind is the breath of his nostrils. Both hear in the storm a voice; but one hears in it only the echo of his own untamed nature; the other the voice of God. No artist can question which of these is the sublimer conception; no Christian can question which is the truer.

It will, however, be said, and with truth, that much of ancient poetry attributes to the gods the phenomena of nature; that Homer tells us of Jove's thunderbolts as does David of Jehovah's arrows. I think it would be easy to show that there is a world-wide difference between deifying nature and perceiving a diety behind nature, between attributing god-like attributes to physical phenomena and perceiving in physical phenomena the exhibition and expression of Godlike attributes, and that this is in general the difference between pagan and Biblical poetry. This might however be questioned; what cannot be questioned is the difference in character between the gods whom the pagans perceived in nature and the God whom the ancient Hebrew poets perceive behind it. Of all pagan poets there is none who in sublimity surpasses Homer. He lived probably about the same time as David. And here is Homer's portraiture of divine almightiness:

Try if ye will
Ye gods, that all may know: suspend from heaven
A golden chain: let all the immortal host
Cling to it from below; ye could not draw,
Strive as ye might, the all disposing Jove
From heaven to earth. And yet, if I should choose
To draw it upward to me, I should lift,
With it and you, the earth itself and sea
Together, and I then would bind the chain
Around the summit of the Olympian mount,
And they should hang aloft. So far my power
Surpasses all the power of gods and men.

Contrast with this David's portraiture of Divine all-knowledge: (Psalm cxxxix.: Dr. Conant's version.)

Whither shall I go from thy Spirit?
And whither shall I flee from thy presence?
If I ascend to heaven, thou art there;
If I make the under-world my bed, lo, thou art there.
If I should take the wings of the morning,
Should dwell in the uttermost part of the sea,
There also would thy hand lead me:
And thy right hand would hold me.
And if I say: only let darkness cover me,
And the light about me be night;
Even darkness will not hide from thee,
And night will shine as the day
Darkness is as light.

What a contrast between the muscular might of a Jove, who demonstrates his power by a species of athletic feat, and that of Jehovah, from whose quiet, calm all-presence there is no escape, in life or death, day or night, time or eternity. Nor is it without reason that I have selected for contrast the power of Jove and the knowledge and presence of Jehovah; for it suggests, what is a truth, that the pagan poetry seeks to arouse reverence by depicting mere physical power and prowess in its deified nature, while the Hebrew seer almost invariably arouses a profounder reverence by depicting that power which comes of moral and intellectual qualities. Jove is an athlete; Thor is a giant; Jehovah is an all-pervading Spirit.

Nor is it less true that the Hebrew poet always finds in human experience, as in natural phenomena, the traces of his God. The innermost truth which he recalls in human life is the truth of a God immanent in the human soul. It is indeed a curious and an interesting as well as an instructive study to turn over the pages of the Psalter, and see how from the lowest to the highest experiences, from the mere hunger of the wild beasts in the forest to the most exalted aspirations or satisfactions of the human soul, every phase points to or is expressive of God in the life.

The highest theme of secular poetry is love, of the friend, the lover, the wife, the mother. The highest theme of the Hebrew poet is love, but always the transcendent love of the soul for a God whom it knows, not by scientific searching but by personal and intimate communion. In remorse for sin its burden is, "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned." In the exile from the temple, its burden is, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." In trouble "God is our refuge and strength;" and his still, small voice speaks with power of infinite calmness, "Be still, and know that I am God." And when, in his highest moods the Hebrew Psalmist gathers in imagination an immense chorus and orchestra—in the foreground, everything that hath breath; behind them the harps, and trumpets, and cornets; and yet behind them the sea with its deep bass, and the floods with their clapping hands, and the hills with their rejoicing woods—and he raises his baton to give a signal for the great choral to begin, the one auditor for whom and to whom all the exuberance of joy is to go forth is the Lord; and the reason for it is, that he cometh to judge the world with righteousness and the people with his truth. The comfort in sorrow, the refuge in trouble, the strength in temptation, the light in perplexity, and the joy in the most rapturous exhilaration is God in the soul. There is no other poetry that expresses with such profound feeling this innermost truth of human life, God immanent in human experience.

To him who does not believe that God is himself the innermost truth of life, whether of nature or of human experience, the Hebrew poetry is unmeaning. To him who believes this, or desires to believe it, there is nowhere sublimer poetry, because nowhere poetry that with simpler sublimity reveals this truth to the soul that is able to receive it.—Christian Union.

A., rector of Llandyffnan-cum-Llanfairmathafarneithaf, Anglesea. A contemporary hopes that the commission will consider how far a man may be driven into morbid irritability by having constantly to address his letters from such a place as Llandyffnan-cum-Llanfairmathafarneithaf.

The two new French Cardinals, Monsignor Desprez, Archbishop of Toulouse, and Monsignor Pie, Bishop of Poitiers, were received on Monday morning at the Elysee by President Grevy, who gave them their birettas. The ceremony was purely civil, and in reply to the speeches which they addressed to him, M. Grevy assured them that the rights of the Church were not in danger, and observed that if the government of the republic did not place the rights of the Church above those of the State it was because they felt a deep solicitude for both.

The Protestant City Synod at Berlin have determined to devote the sum of £6,500 out of the church rates for the purpose of abolishing the surplice fees for baptisms and marriages. A table of fees has been published by which all may learn henceforth what they will be expected to pay. We find that baptism if administered in a house is regarded as a luxury, and the sum of 15s. will be the fee. Marriage out of hours is also a luxury, and will cost 10s., or if with flowers, carpet, and choir thrown in, 15s. The organ is an extra and 7s. will be charged for its use. The various amounts fixed by the Synod are regarded as somewhat paltry.

At the recent meeting of the Hull District Committee of Wesleyan ministers the following resolution was adopted: "That while recognizing the friendly attitude of some of the clergy of the Established Church, the committee regrets that in this district the difficulties of Methodism are increased and its prosperity hindered by the policy and teaching of many others of the clergy. Doctrines are taught and practices prevail which are Popish in their character. Guilds and other societies are formed, one condition of membership being a pledge never to enter a Nonconformist place of worship. There are instances of persecution, and the clergy are in many places seeking by a subtley meant to undermine us, and to alienate our people from us."

The following were the six questions submitted to the Rev. David Macrae, whose suspension we announced last week by the Synodical committee appointed to ascertain his theological views: "1st. Do the unsaved exist forever in a future state? 2d. Do the unsaved exist forever in a future world in a state of conscious active sin? 3d. Do the unsaved exist in a future world in a state of misery propery to sin? 4th. Does Mr. Macrae hold in any form the doctrine of a certain and awful retribution awaiting the impenitent hereafter; and if so, what is its nature? 5th. Is it irreconcilable with the character of God to permit a human being to continue forever in a state of active conscious sin? 6th. Referring to Mr. Macrae's motion and speech before the Synod, would Mr. Macrae state distinctly the amount of liberty he claims in regard to the question of the future condition of the wicked and impenitent? Does he include in that liberty the right to teach the doctrine of restoration or that of conditional immortality?" Mr. Macrae declared that he did not believe in the eteral existence of the unsaved in a future state; he acknowledged that he believed in retribution for sin, but declined to say what the nature of the retribution would be. It was, he considered, irreconcilable with the character of God that He should keep alive human beings forever in a state of conscious active sin. In reference to the teaching of the doctrine of restoration, or that of conditional immortality, he claimed the right to set aside the Westminster Confession if he believed that contradicted the Scriptures." In consequence of these answers Mr. Macrae was suspended from the office of the ministry. Mr. Macrae protested and appealed to an in hunc effectum meeting of the Synod.

THEORY AND PRACTICE.

To an editor, wearied in mind and fatigned in body, with the last hours in which to prepare for his appearance before a highly expectant public fast slipping away, the above subject might seem a perfect bonanza, fruitful of the richest thought, and admitting of the choicest variety of style and freest mode of expression. There is, in fact, so much theorizing done, and so little in the way of practice even thought of, that a mere catalogne of instances in which the sonndest and most logical theories are rendered nugatory by nonpractice, might well fill an indefinite quantity of editorial space. But to engage in the work indicated is not to our mind, preaching is not our province, nor philosophizing our mode. We must needs then practice upon the patience and forbearance of our readers while we throw ont a few reflections in the hope that they may not be entirely lost.

The author of the "Light is it Waning" well says, "all action has its root in a theory, known or unknown; and all intelligent action has its root in a theory seized and applied."

The theory—the primary, nnderlying, foundation tnth—of Christianity is, Life in Christ. Life, beginning with the acceptance of Christ in the soul, and progressing through successive stages of development to perfect manhood in Christ Jesns. Repentance and faith secnring justification, which is the act of God's free grace, and followed by sanctification, which is the work of the same free grace, enabling the Christian more and more to die unto sin and live nnto righteousness; perfection reached in Heaven.

This is the theory, a blessed theory, with God's free grace at its inception and at every step of progress. A theory thns, never inapplicable, ofttimes applied—else where were the Chnrch, and where the fruits of religion, even with the imperfections, that we see around us—and yet often, very often, in the individual Christian, overlooked, not regarded, laid aside, covered with the accumnlating dust of worldliness.

Life requires nourishment, and sound, healthful, vigorons life demands exercise—work. Peace and pardon! blessed words, accessories of the new birth in the soul; bnt growth—that comes of feeding on Christ, working with Him, by Him, through Him, for Him. Christ all and in all. Is this consecration? Full, thorough, perfect, absolnte, entire yielding up of life, and all that pertains to life, to Christ? It is the theory of Christianity. Reader! is it your practice—and mine?

DEAD WHILE THEY LIVE.

"It is high time," so an exchange once phrased it, "that those chnrches which have only a name to live had not even a name to live." The reference is to those chnrches which depend solely and entirely upon help from other chnrches for their support, through an indefinite, and apparently ever to be indefinite, term of years; which contribnte never a cent to any of the benevolent canses of the Chnrch at large; which are never represented in any Chnrch conrt; which possibly, taking no Chnrch papers, hardly know when or where there will be a Chnrch conrt.

In all seriousness, wonld it not be well for Presbyteries to inquire into this matter. Our scope of personal observation is limited, and possibly beyond our cognizance there may be no such churches, but we know what we affirm as existing to some extent.

Such chnrches will never walk, till they cease to creep, nor ever acquire strength till the are taught to exercise some degree of self-reliance.

We must not be misnnderstood, as intending to reflect in even the remotest degree, upon any Church that is struggling for existence, with the heavy pressure of poverty upon it. It is the dnty of the strong to help the weak, and to do it liberally and cheerfully, bnt we contend that no chnrch, as no individual, that is nnwilling to pnt forth an effort for self-support, deserves aid at the hands of others.
